Minutemen drop heartbreaker

Smith jumper falls short with 0:01 as Rutgers advances in tourney

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

PISCATAWAY, N.J.— Carl Smith's 20-foot jumper, with one second left banged off the front of the rim and a gutsy University of Massachusetts dropped its Atlantic 10 quarterfinal game, 69-67, to Rutgers University last night.

The Minutemen, who finished at 13-15 for the season, had a chance to win with 38 seconds left, as coach Ron Gerlufson called a play for freshman Lorenzo Sutton to take a three-point shot. Smith killed 25 seconds off the clock before Rutgers' Steve Perry stepped in front of a pass intended for Horace Neysmith.

Perry drove to the hoop, missing a shot with seven seconds left that Sutton rebounded and got to Smith with five seconds remaining. The sophomore point guard drove to the top of the key before missing the shot.

"I have never been as proud of a team as I have of this one," Gerlufson said. "This is one of the most disappointing losses I have ever been involved with. I think we deserved to win. We played as well in the second half as we have all season. The character of this team showed."

For UMass, Smith had a career-high 19 points. Neysmith had 19 and nine rebounds. Sutton added 10 with Donald Russell contributing eight. Rutgers was led by John Battle's 17 points and Eric Riggins' 15.

The Scarlet Knights, 15-13, advanced to the semifinals where they will face the West Virginia/Duquesne winner. Temple, a 67-56 winner over St. Bonaventure, will face St. Josephs, a 52-49 victor over George Washington.

UMass took as much as a six point lead, 48-42, with an 11-0 run three minutes into the second half. Smith had seven of those points, all on long-range jumpers.

Rutgers came back to tie the game at 50, on a Lloyd Moore layup with 12:22 to go. UMass traded baskets with Rutgers, until losing the lead with 6:31 to go as Moore hit again.

Rutgers built up a seven-point bulge, 67-60, on two Brian Ellerbee foul shots at the 4:05 point. A Sutton three-pointer cut the lead to four, a Russell jumper made it 67-65 and with 2:10 remaining Smith tied it at 67, drilling a 15-footer. Battle hit two foul shots with 1:56 to give Rutgers the lead.

Russell forced up a shot with 1:21 to go, before Battle missed with 46 seconds left to set up the dramatic end.

In the first half, the Minutemen trailed 40-35, as Rutgers employed a tough matchup zone that limited the Minutemen's inside game.

UMass took an 8-6 lead on three-pointers by Russell and Sutton. Rutgers came back to take the lead at 10-8 on Eric Riggins' fast break layup. After a Russell free throw with 13:07 left that made it 14-10, Rutgers ran off eight straight points to grab a 22-10 advantage.

Sutton scored on a great drive from the left side, Darryl Carter came off the bench to hit a three-pointer and Neysmith buried a foul line jumper to cap a seven point UMass run that made it 22-17.

Rutgers got back up by eight, 28-20, on a Chris Remley three-pointer. UMass chopped the lead to one, 29-28, on a Smith jumper with 4:55 to go. Battle, who had 12 points in the half, finished off a three point play to spark the Knights back to an eight point advantage, 40-32 with 1:16 to go, as the home team hit seven straight foul shots.

UMass gymnasts in action with important weekend meets

Men at Easterns, women at A-10's

By KATHLEEN HANNAN

The dual meet season is long past for the University of Massachusetts gymnastics teams. However, this weekend both teams hit the road for even more competition. The men travel to Springfield College today to take part in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Competition, tonight at 7 p.m., and tomorrow at 1 p.m., and the women go to the University of West Virginia for the Atlantic 10 competition Saturday at 1 p.m.

Chris Cloutier and the UMass women's gymnastics team will travel to West Virginia and the Atlantic 10 Championships this weekend.

The men, heading into competition in fifth place, are ahead of Army, Springfield, and Syracuse, but behind East Strousburg, Temple, Southern Connecticut and Navy.

Tonight's line-up for the all-around will be Roberto Weil, Joe DeMarco, and Eric Cicerone. Other events will include seniors Pete Lucchini, Ken Dougherty, and Tony Sbarra, junior Phil Gorgone, sophomore Steve Bais, and freshman Jay Ronayne.

"The line-up was intended not for a high team score, but high individual scores so 'one event' performers have a chance to make the finals. I don't think we have a chance of winning with an overall team total, but a very good chance otherwise," said coach Roy Johnson.

The performances in tonight's meet will determine the competitors in the League Finals on Saturday. The overall top eight gymnasts for each event qualify, and UMass has an optimistic view for qualifying. Johnson sees Lucchini, Gorgone, and DeMarco on floor exercise, Bais, Doughtery, and Weil, on pommel horse, Cicrone and DeMarco on rings, Ronayne and Gorgone, on vaulting, Lucchini, Weil and DeMarco on the parallel bars, and Sbarra and Weil on high bar.

As a whole, the team should score an average of a 259.25, or possibly break the school record of 263.3. The team still sees that as their goal. If the men individually score their season high, they could leave Springfield with a total of 265.5.

The women are facing the Atlantic 10 competition with the healthiest line-up all season. After a season plagued with injuries, coach Chuck Sheibler is at liberty to grip the competitive edge by finally being able to choose his line-up nearly without considering sprained ankles and broken fingers.

Competing in the all-around Saturday will be top scorer Jennifer Pancoast, Chris Cloutier, Tricia Camus, and Sue Allen.

Allen, a fine gymnast who usually scores 33-plus points in the all-around, has not competed in all four events in over a month due to a pulled groin muscle.

Blaze destroys $2 million Amherst gymnasium

Firefighters combat the smoldering embers early Saturday morning which were once known as Amherst College's New Gymnasium. According to officials, the fire began around 1 a.m., Saturday and was caused by an electrical malfunction.
Below are remnants of the $1 million gymnasium which was completed in 1976. The building was vacant at the time and no injuries were reported.

An early morning fire Saturday, ignited by an electrical malfunction, raged through and destroyed the $2 million Amherst College New Gymnasium.

Firefighters from six communities including Amherst, Hadley, Northampton and Belchertown battled to combat the burning structure, flames of which threatened to engulf nearby buildings.

The fire was reported by a campus security officer shortly after 1 a.m. who saw flames and smoke escaping from the top of the nine-year-old buidling, Don Maia, Amherst chief of police, said.

"It's definitely one of the biggest fires" in Amherst, he said. Minutes after the fire was sparked, and the gymnasium's 25-foot wooden roof gave way, four firefighters from atop of an adjacent building fought to contain the flames from spreading to the roof of the Pratt Pool and Orr Rink. The pool was filled with debris but the damage to that building was minimal.

At about 2:30 a.m. firefighters' two-way radios reported a gas leak from the nearby biology and chemistry building which prompted police to evacuate viewers from the west side of the gymnasium.

The Amherst Fire Department said yesterday that the fire started with a short circuit in the lighting system near the ceiling.

The gymnasium lacked a sprinkler and direct alarm system to the fire department.

Although extinguishing of the fire was aided by sporadic rain at 3:10 a.m., firefighters were still hosing down the wreckage 10 hours later.

"It is of course a major disaster for our college but we know it could have been worse," a distraught Peter Pouncey, college president said as he paced the floor of the admissions office during the fire. "We will try to replace it at the earliest opportunity."

While firefighters struggled to cap the roaring flames, the Amherst Police Department and campus security officers worked to supervise the crowd that had accumulated to watch the blaze. Road blocks and flares were used to block off the school and to control traffic.

Spokesman Douglas Wilson said no one was in the building at the time of the fire but that intramurals had used the gymnasium earlier that night.

The gymnasium, completed in 1976 was used primarily for basketball. The fire will not affect that sport since the season is over, he said. However, the gymnasium was also used for tennis and raquetball, which will be moved outdoors.

Gymnasium fire brings bystander's reactions

The flames and billowing smoke of the New Gymnasium could be seen from as far away as Interstate 91 but Amherst College students and other people came out in numbers to view the burning of the nine-year old building Saturday night first-hand.

The smoke and flames had its effect on the bystanders also. "I can feel it in my lungs- it hurts," Carol Barlow, a senior at UMass said. "You can smell the gas from the leak too."

"It was incredible," Jack Lohrer, a senior science major said. "(My roommate and I) were watching it from our room and we thought it was the science center. But when we saw smoke coming out of the six points on the roof, we knew it was the gym."

Scott Broderick, a senior science major said, "They (fire fighters) are not prepared to fight a fire of this size. It's unreal."

Investigators inspect wreckage of a vehicle, part of an Israeli army convoy struck by a suicide car-bomber yesterday in Lebanon. At least Israeli soldiers were reported killed.

Suicide bomber strikes

9 soldiers dead, 11 hurt

A lone suicide attacker drove his bomb-laden car into an Israeli army truck in south Lebanon yesterday, killing nine Israeli soldiers, military sources said in Tel Aviv.

At least 11 soldiers were wounded in the attack just across the border from the Israeli town of Metulla, according to hospital officials. Most were severely burned.

In Beirut, the capital of Lebanon, an anonymous caller told the leftist radio station Voice of Arab Lebanon that the car bomb was driven by a member of the Lebanese National Resistance in revenge for a car bomb that killed 75 people and injured 250 on Friday near a west Beirut mosque. The caller said there would be a longer statement later.

Israel has denied accusations in Lebanon that it was responsible for that bombing.

Manager Aina Belsky of Metulla's Arazim Hotel, about 300 yards from yesterday's blast site, reported in a telephone interview, "The explosion was terrifying. There was a giant fire and then black smoke shot up."

It was the worst attack on Israel's occupation force since Nov. 4, 1983, when 28 Israeli servicemen and 35 Lebanese and Palestinians were killed by antoher suicide bomber. In that attack, a bomb-laden truck was driven into a compound where Israelis detained and questioned prisoners.

Prime Minister Shimon Peres was quoted as telling a Jerusalem meeting of women from B'nai B'rith: "We had a very bad day today. Nine of our soldiers were killed." His remarks were relayed by a participant who spoke on condition she was not identified.

The military sources, who also insisted on anonymity, had initially said as many as 10 died in the attack. At the same site, two Israeli soldiers were killed in land mine explosions on Feb. 10.

U.S., Soviets set to talk again

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) - U.S. and Soviet negotiators restart arms talks tomorrow with America's plans for a space-based defense against nuclear missiles expected to be an early point of dispute.

President Reagan has expressed his determination to press ahead with his Strategic Defense Initiative, dubbed "Star Wars." His ultimate goal is eliminating the threat of continent-spanning rockets.

The Soviet Union has objected to the project and suggested that unless it is halted, nuclear arms control in general would be jeopardized.

The Soviet Union's two major newspapers, the Communist Party's Pravda and the government's Izvestia, said yesterday that if the new Geneva talks are to have any chance of success, a ban on space weaponry is indispensable.

Complicated by the sharp dispute over Star Wars, the talks were sure to be difficult and long when they resume tomorrow after a lapse of more than 15 months.

Both negotiating teams were in this Swiss international conference city. Leaders of the two delegations issued upbeat statements, which tended to mask the toughness of the talks ahead.

The delegation, Karpov told reporters, had received instructions from the Soviet leadership "to negotiate in a businesslike and constructive manner."

Karpov warned, however, he would be seeking "equal security, which precludes either party...from gaining unilateral advantage."

Max M. Kampelman, heading the American delegation which arrived on Saturday, said Reagan had instructed him "to spare no effort in seeking to negotiate fair and equitable agreements." Kampelman promised that the United States will "thoroughly and responsibly explore all avenues" leading to accords.

Mubarak appeals to Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) - Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak is expected to make a personal appeal to President Reagan this week to approve a high level U.S. meeting with a joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation as the first step in a new drive for Middle East peace.

But officials say Mubarak, in Washington on a five-day visit, will be told the administration is cool to the idea unless it can be shown that such a meeting would lead to direct negotiations between the Arabs and Israel, and so far it's unclear how that would develop.

Mubarak will confer with Reagan at the White House tomorrow. He will hold separate meetings today with Secretary of State George P. Shultz, Secretary of Defense Casper Weinberger and Secretary of Treasury James A. Baker III.

World food supply, health discussed at Hampshire College

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

The role of multi-national corporations in producing hunger, health concerns of Latin-American women, reproductive rights of Mohawk Indian women and food banking were the focus points of a "health and food" discussion at Hampshire College Saturday morning.

The panel discussion, which formed part of a weekend-long "Survival and Visions" conference, began with an explanation of food banking by Katherine D'Amato, coordinator of the Western Massachusetts Food Bank.

"A food bank is a clearing house for food that would otherwise be thrown away," she said, adding that the food is donated by manufacturers who may have overproduced or had errors in production. Other products are donated simply because of a defect in cosmetic appearance, or because the line has been discontinued.

This food is then redistributed by the bank to such organizations as women's shelters, soup kitchens and elderly centers.

"Last year, 3000 people in Western Mass. received items through the bank," D'Amato said.

According to D'Amato, one-fifth of all food produced in the United States annually is wasted which could otherwise feed 49 million people. She also said companies are willing to donate to food banks because of "high tax incentives" to do so.

"If we relied solely on good will we would be much smaller," she said.

Dahlia C. Aspirillera, a Filipinia expert on food distribution, continued the discussion with her interpretation of how hunger and malnutrition in small countries is produced by the operation of multi-national corporations.

As an example, she cited the situation in Ethiopia where the geography is divided between the lush southern portion and a barren northern portion. This balance resulted in no starvation when the population was evenly distributed.

"When companies came and settled in the lush portion, more and more people were forced to live in the barren section," Aspirillera said, adding, "let's not blame starvation all on nature."

In discussion health issues, Lourdes Mattei, of the Gandara Mental Health Center in Springfield spoke of her initial interest in the area of women's health, which began when she and fellow members of Latin-American women's group noticed that the Spanish translation of the first edition of the Boston Women's Health Collective's book "Our Bodies, Ourselves" was "very poorly translated and skipped areas of importance to Latino women's health," she said.

Mattei gave an example of the fact that the first book did not "recognize the importance of virginity for Latin-American women, of the impact the Catholic religion has on it."

In addition, she said the section on nutrition ignored the fact that most Latin-American women are poor and eat different food, the section on birth control failed to consider that reproductive technology impacts Latin-American women differently and such issues as how to raise children bi culturally were completely missed.

To gather research on these topics, Mattei initiated self help groups for Latino women to help them identify their health needs and, as a result, became a member of the Boston Women's Health Collective, responsible for bilingual chapters focusing on such needs.

The final contributor on the panel was Katsi Cook, a midwife for the Akwesasne Nation, an Indian reservation in New York state.

Professor's speech focuses on social change

By LAURA KOESTER
Collegian Staff

Kicking off a four-day conference on social change at Hampshire College Thursday night, Johnetta Cole, former associate provost of undergraduate education at the University of Massachusetts '82 - '83 opened her keynote speech by asking members of the audience to close their eyes and imagine their version of utopia.

"There has never been a new way of doing things or a fundamental transformation without a vision and a dream," Cole said.

Cole said her vision of a new world is one in which everyone in the world is jumping up and down screaming, "Enough! Enough! Enough weapons, bombs and missiles!" She said she wanted the money and resources which are currently used for arms production to be used to "attack the root causes of mass starvation" and to help the 35 million people in the U.S. who live below the poverty line.

"No more will we build for peace by preparing for war. No more will schoolchildren write essays on the (television movie) 'The Day After,' and tremble from paragraph to paragraph," Cole said.

"What you're trying to accomplish determines the tool you use. The Jesse Jackson Rainbow Coalition showed us there are some tasks electoral politics can do but some it can never do," Cole said.

Cole's speech focused on the necessity of planning to achieve social change, and she said debates over whether blacks should organize with whites, or women with men, are "silly," adding, "You're going to make a mess if you try to do dishes with a vacuum cleaner."

The conference, titled "Survival and Visions: Organizing for Change" was held for the purpose of providing a forum for community members, academics and students to discuss and identify the needs of women in society and to devise strategies for the future.

Cole was scathing in her assessment of capitalistic practices and noted, "In this country, it is not a question of quantity of resources but how these resources are distributed."

"We must divide the pie more evenly. The folks who do most of the work should get most of the rewards," she said.

Cole is currently a professor at Hunter College in New York where she teaches anthropology.

More funds sought for UMass budget

By DAVID BURGESS
Collegian Correspondent

Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, met Saturday morning with administrators to discuss the addition of $3.3 million to the University of Massachusetts budget for fiscal year 1986.

According to a written statement by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, the added funds would be used to "redress serious shortcomings with respect to graduate student stipends, computer resources, basic maintenance and utilities to acknowledge the full cost of essential services for the handicapped and campus child day care system."

The 9 a.m. conference headed by Duffey and attended by more than 40 people, became a forum on how to convince Gov. Michael Dukakis and state legislators of the University's need.

Collins noted that one-third of the student body of Massachusetts attends school in the Amherst area and that "two things need to be done" for success in the quest for more money.

"First," Collins said, "we must articulate how much money is needed for the UMass budget and inform my colleagues in the Legislature what will happen in clear human terms if the funds are not made available."

Next, a public campaign to get registered voters to call up their representatives about the budget need must be set in motion, he said.

"Nothing makes my colleagues listen to an issue like a call from a registered voter," Collins said.

Describing UMass/Amherst as "an investment for the Massachusetts community," Collins said "We'll link up with the Worcester and Boston campuses to get a statewide effort for the budget request."

Collins outlined the path of the budget request from when the Legislature receives it in April to when it arrives at the governor's desk to be approved or rejected. The Legislature then has the option to override a gubernatorial veto.

Timing is most important and the first step is for UMass getting together as a community and asking the representatives for the needed funds, Collins said. Ten people from each district would have a powerful effect on a representative's decision, he added.

UM student 'fine' after knifing

A 21-year-old man was stabbed by an Easthampton man on North Pleasant Street Friday evening, Amherst police said.

James Tierney, a University of Massachusetts student, said yesterday that we was "just fine," and only received a few stitches when he was taken by ambulance to Cooley Dickinson Hospital. He was injured in the head and neck.

Amherst police arrested Paul J. Poirier, 28, and charged him with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, a knife. Poirier will be arraigned this morning in Hampshire District Court.

Tierney said the incident occurred when Poirier was "hassling" a friend. "I stepped in and told him to leave us alone. He left and came back with a knife," Tierney said.

Poirier was unavailable for comment. Police said the incident is under investigation.

Voting begins for SGA seats

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

Polls opened today for students to choose the Student Government Association co-presidents, members of the Campus Center Board of Governors, the Residential Committee and open seats in the Undergraduate Student Senate.

SGA Elections Coordinator John Crowley said the polls will be open today and tomorrow, and the results should be tallied by late Tuesday night. The polls close at 7:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Crowley said he expects between 5,000 and 6,000 students to vote. Eighteen seats are open on the BOG and six positions are available on the campus-wide Residential Committee.

Three candidacies are vying for the SGA co-presidency: Stacy Roth and Dan Burgess, Patrick Keohan and Teresa Sardella, and Kim Hackett and Mike Cerrato.

Roth/Burgess, running on a platform of increased student input, are the candidates of the self-named "meadow party" of the SGA, which includes the current student government leadership. Roth was the co-chairwoman of the senate's Public Policy Committee, and Burgess is a resident assistant in Butterfield House.

Keohan/Sbardella, also calling for more student input, will be student trustee and campus president if elected. Traditionally, one student has been the student trustee and the other has been the campus president. Keohan is the senator from Washington Tower, and Sbardella is a first-year student with no experience in the student government.

Cerrato/ Hackett are running on a platform of increased fiscal responsibility. They have said their budget cuts would begin in the president's office. Hackett is a senator from the Greek area, and Cerrato represents Dwight House.

Party chair to speak tonight

Andrew Natsios, chairman of the Massachusetts Republican party, will discuss Gov. Michael Dukakis' past and present administrations today at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center room 904-908.

According to Stephen Erickson, president of the University of Massachusetts Republican Club, the speech, titled "A Critique of the Dukakis Administration," will focus on both of Dukakis' administrations and how they differ.

Natsios, who is responsible for coordinating the Republican party, tries to find candidates to run in Massachusetts, Erickson said.

A champion of rules reform, Natsios is also the state representative for Holliston.

Graffitti spray painted on FAC

"UMass is an assembly line for capitalism. Who will buy you?" was sprayed on the Fine Arts Center with red spray paint, University of Massachusetts police said.

The vandalism to the west side of the building was reported Thursday morning.

Two electronic scales may have been stolen from Morrill Science building, police said. Scales from the first and third floors were reported missing by a faculty member Thursday afternoon. Police said they may have been removed by someone doing experiments in the building. The value of the scales was not reported.

Two thefts of radios in Washington tower were reported to police Thursday night.

In addition to the regular polling places, ballot boxes will be set up at the New Africa House in the Central Residential Area and the Kosher Dining Commons in the Southwest Residential Area.

Help offered to writers

Everyone has experienced the horrible feeling of sitting, pen in hand, clock ticking and not a word written on the paper in the typewriter. The essay is due tomorrow and you still can't come up with a topic.

For anyone with this problem, relief is in sight. The Southwest Writing Program was developed six years ago with the interests of the writer's block in mind. It is composed of undergraduate students who are trained in tutorial skills. Their main job is to help the students develop their own ideas. "The tutors help to draw out ideas and help the students articulate for themselves," Valerie Traub, head of the writing program said.

The program serves students on an individual, confidential basis. It is open 7 to 9 p.m. on Mondays and Thursdays for the rest of the semester. Anyone with a question or problem with writing can come, Traub said. The program is located on the bottom floor of Pierpont House in the Southwest Residential Area. Although it is located in Southwest, anyone is welcome, Traub said.

Many students came from nearby parties to see the fire. "It was the local gossip of the night at our party so we came to see it," junior Jeremy Gisslle said.

As members of the Amherst College hockey team, Rick Hartfield, Kurt Weber and John Vandervort came to make sure their interests were protected.

"The whole new complex is gone but thank God the hockey rink was saved," they said. Added Hartfiel, "It took them so long to get water going — I think they were a little slow."

Although the fire was attributed to an electrical short circuit, rumors as to the cause of the fire flowed throughout the crowd during the night. "I think it was arson," one unidentified first year student said. "Someone told me that 'divest now' was written on the side of the building."

"That's ridiculous," another group of students responded. "We were at a party and heard it was an electrical fire."

Ashes and debris are left for the students to see now and the cause for excitement on Saturday night is over.

Dukakis tours plant in Japan

OSAKA, Japan (AP) - Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, beginning the second week of a two-week trade mission to the Far East, yesterday toured a plant here that is manufacturing rail equipment for the Boston-area subway system.

Under a $50 million contract signed in December 1983, the Kinki Sharyo company is to supply 50 light rail vehicles to the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority by September 1986. Japan's railway technology is considered among the best in the world.

An official of the company who asked not to be identified by name said Dukakis watched rolling stock being built for Japanese railways at the plant, which has a monthly production capacity of 50 cars.

The visiting governor told company President Toshio Muramatsu that he often rides the Boston subway system, but the trains sometimes develop trouble.

Dukakis and his wife, Kitty, arrived in Japan Friday after visiting China, and plan to return home next Saturday.

On Saturday, he met with Kazuo Inamori, president of Kyocedra Corp., a leading Japanese electronics and fine ceramics maker.

In Kyoto, he and his wife took part in events marking the 25th anniversary of the day Boston and Kyoto became sister cities.

Silence condones the injustices to Henry

In the past few weeks, the Collegian has been running several stories on the Yvette Henry arson case in an attempt to stir student reaction to the injustice that occurred the night of her arrest and in the days which followed. From what I have gathered so far, the Collegian has not had much response to its efforts.

Out of curiousity, I have asked people from some of my classes their opinion on the content of the "The Special Report" which was made public by the Collegian. I haven't heard anyone say "Oh yeah, what a bummer that it happened," or "How outrageous," though one person did tell me that a lawyer friend of his wished he had Henry as a client so he could retire after her sure victory in the case. In short, to echo and confirm the claim of a past editorial, "No one really gives a damn." Why doesn't anyone care? Because "It's really doesn't concern me," or "I heard someone say she really did do it, so what's the fuss?"

OK, that's fine. What you are saying (if this is what you're saying) is "It's all right it they do to me what they did to Henry. It's no big deal if they arrest me on flimsy evidence, contain and question me for hours without an attorney, while my room is searched without a warrant or my permission." You're too concerned about yourself to worry about the humiliation of a fellow student at the hands of officials who are under pressure to do something, anything, about a prolonged crisis.

This is what I see and what I hear. The matter is apparently history except for the lawsuit, so why should we worry about it until it happens to us?

In your silence you are also saying that it is all right if the powers which govern this institution manipulate issues to their gain and not to the best interest of the student body.

The refusal of this adminstration to respond to the reasonable questions put to it is farcical, and the apathy of this student body entitles it to get what it deserves if it continues.

Motivation useless without skill to exploit it

In regard to Mondays column "Time to Give a Little Back" by William J. Spain, I believe it's time to give a little justice to the thousands of U.S. Armed Services officers and NCOs who have had their patriotism and loyalty questioned by a man they have never met. Just because many soldiers are "career oriented" is no reason to equate them with disloyal, unreliable and depraved mercenaries. Perhaps Spain doesn't realize that you can be "career oriented" and patriotic at the same time; or that implying that "many" professional soldiers are no better than "mercenaries" is one of the cruelest insults you could give a U.S. serviceman. I have worked with many NCOs and officers in the Army, and Army National Guard, and with the exception of a few slackers, I've found them (and myself) to be dedicated, hard working, and above all, loyal to their country.

"Highly motivated young Americans" are a great asset to our armed forces, but without the skill and expertise of the "professional soldier" to educate and guide them, their "motivation" would go to waste.

Bad memories of Lincoln memorial

"You look like a serious woman," he said, looking boldly into my eyes.

"Actually, under these dignified glasses I am a hysterical adolescent. I wear them to control myself," I said, trying to cut off his stare with a joke.

We were in a Georgetown bar, the music was loud, and we had each had a few drinks. I had accepted an invitation to go out "with a bunch of us," and this guy was somebody's friend, a UMass grad now living in Washington. But the bunch had gradually dwindled down to three, and then two, as everyone "decided to go somewhere else."

It didn't work. He was still looking at me. "Why don't you look me in the eye? The whole time we've been sitting here you've avoided eye contact with me. Am I unattractive or something?"

Here we go, I thought. How did I get myself into this mess? I had only wanted to go out for a few drinks after a long day, and the invitation was casual enough. I really didn't need this.

"Look, I've found from experience that if you look a guy too long in the eye, sometimes he gets the wrong idea. And I think you had the wrong idea right from the beginning, okay?"

"What do you mean by 'the wrong idea'? Who ever said an idea could be wrong?"

"You know what I mean. Don't play head games. I just wanted to go out for a drink. Nothing more."

Michelle Hyde

"That's what we're doing, isn't it? We're out for a drink. I think it's your ego. Or paranoia."

I doubt it. Anyway, it's late. I'd like you to drive me home. I have a long day tomorrow."

"Okay, but don't you want to see the Lincoln Memorial first? I heard you tell Rick you wanted to see it while you were here."

Not at 1:30 a.m., I don't. And certainly not with this creep, I thought.

"You can't come to Washington and not see the Lincoln Memorial. I won't take no for an answer. It's beautiful."

"No. Seriously. It's too late, and frankly, I don't feel like walking around this place in the dark with a guy I just met. Take me home."

"I think you're too quick to judge people. And paranoid. So what? I wanted to meet you and spend some time alone with you. What's wrong with that?"

"What's wrong with it," I said, taking a deep breath, "is that I don't want to be alone with you. I am not interested."

"Just because I live in Washington and you live in Boston? Just because you just met me? Why deny that you might be interested in me at all . . . Here's the Lincoln Memorial. I won't take you home until you've seen it."

"Fine," I said, slamming the door. I'll find my own way home. The cabs are still running. I'll take off my shoe and . . .

"Look. Isn't it beautiful? Don't his hands look real? Like he's going to reach out or drum his fingers on his chair?"

It did look that way. He looked much more real than he did in any history book, sitting there, purposeful, looking out over to the Washington Monument. I had always wanted to see the statue, but I wished it would have been under different circumstances.

"It's two o'clock. Let's go," I said, starting down the stairs. He stood still.

"Hey. Don't forget. I'm the one with the car keys. You're at my mercy, Michelle."

I whirled around and stared at him, frozen, engulfed in a red, hot rage and a sickening fear. He stood there expressionless. I wanted to kick him as hard as I could with my high heel and make a run for it.

"If that's your idea of a joke, you are a sadistic a------, and if it's not, no, I an not at your mercy. Not if I can help it. I will get home, I will guarantee you that."

"Whoaaaaa. I was only kidding. You don't think I would really pull something like that, do you? Michelle, I was only kidding."

I was already half-way across the lawn.

Lincoln sat there, his marble face stoic, all patience and fortitude. The Great Emancipator. Freer of the Slaves. Staring out over the Mall, oblivious to a more subtle form of slavery unfolding before him. The slavery of ignorance. And fear.

Too many of us cannot see past the dollar signs

Liberal. This University is widely known as being a liberal campus--favorable to progress, to reform, to change. Over the past year we have seen a great number of issues which directly affect the student body--the administration's firm attempt at dislodging the Board of Governors; the near takeover of the Coffee Shop; the Yvette Henry debacle of late.

We are facing massive aid cuts which could keep fully a quarter of us from attending school. We have a strong voice in both SAFA and SSAM protesting these cuts and fighting for our pocketbook but there is still a long way to go.

But our liberal campus faces an even bigger problem: student apathy.

As a student leader I have seen lack of involvement in all areas of student government. House councils cannot get representation; area governments do not get quorum; senate seats go unfilled as issues are passed by. The SGA has been blamed for promoting this apathy, but the fault lies within the student body as a whole. The more issues there are to fight, the less the students want to fight.

A trend worth noting deals with the reasons students are going to school. The percentage of students who come to "change the world"--to get involved and promote rights and ideas--is fast falling, while that of students wishing to make money and be financially well-off soars. At last estimate 70% of the student body lists "money" as their number one goal in educating themselves. How can we affect change if we can't see beyond the dollar signs?

The minute percentage of students active on campus cannot keep our liberal reputation without help. This is not a plea to vote. This is a plea for involvement. Without an active student body, at any level, we will lose all that we should hold dear.

Don't waste quarters in Hatch

As a frequent patron of the Hatch, I am appalled by the choice of music that is allowed to play night after night.

I am referring, of course, to Tina Turner's latest release against women, "Private Dancer". This song is one of the most sexist, degrading songs about women ever written. In it, she sells her body for money - implying that any woman can be bought or sold like a piece of meat.

Being a concerned member of the student body, I am ashamed to hear fellow students humming and whistling this tune in the corriders.

I demand that all of you stop wasting your quarters and use better judgement in your jukebox selections.

Congratulations, but . . .

I'd like to offer my congratulations to the UMass men's basketball team for making the most out of their "rebuilding" season, but many issues still need to be addressed about the future of the program.

It is now time for the UMass basketball coaches, and Collegian sports editor Peter Abraham to acknowledge some obvious facts. Thursday night the basketball team lost, bringing their overall season record to 13-15. Although the team did better than it was predicted to do (and with some outstanding talent), it is time for the coaches to re-evaluate the program. It is also time for some accommodating habits of Abraham to end. Whether the team improved their record over last years record or not, a 13-15 record is still a "losing" season. Rising from last place to fifth is not a momentous turnaround as has been indicated numerous times by Abraham.

As I have, many other basketball followers and team fans have no doubt began asking themselves some questions lately. Will UMass be able to win the Atlantic-10 Conference within the next five or six years, or are we doomed to perpetual "rebuilding" seasons? Also is the present coaching staff able to recruit the talent necessary to put together a league championship, NCAA tournament, or NIT team, or should we move to a division II schedule?

Finally, I have had my fill of Peter Abraham's accommodating attitudes towards this struggling program. He has consistently failed to offer any constructive criticism to a sports program that is by all indications doomed to linger in obscurity. It is evident that Abraham is merely an agent or press release for the coaching staff, and is incapable of critical commentary.

Details still unknown in Arlo Guthrie's illness

WARE (AP) — Folk singer Arlo Guthrie remained hospitalized yesterday after becoming ill during a recording session last week.

A spokeswoman at Mary Lane Hospital in this central Massachusetts town said she could not release details on Guthrie's condition or illness.

Dr. Louis B. Grace, whose office is down the road from Longview Farm Studio in nearby North Brookfield, said he was called to the studio Friday evening. Grace said he had Guthrie admitted to the hospital.

"He rode over to the hospital with his wife," the doctor said. Grace refused to describe Guthrie's symptoms and said he had no additional information.

"I talked with his wife. They don't know anything" about his condition, said a woman who answered the phone at the studio yesterday.

Guthrie, 37, who lives on a farm in the western Massachusetts town of Washington, is best known for his hit song "Alice's Restaurant" of 1967. He is the son of folk singer Woody Guthrie, who died in 1967 of the Huntington's chorea, a degenerative, hereditary nervous disorder.

In 1981, Guthrie was hospitalized for an inflamed pancreas after he suffered an attack during a concert in Vancouver, British Columbia.

Stoppard: not the real thing

ROSENCRANTZ AND GUILDENSTERN ARE DEAD
March 7-9, 13-16
At the Rand Theatre

By RENEE BACHER
Collegian Staff

Tom Stoppard is a playwright who is associated with his latest work, The Real Thing currently doing sellout performances on Broadway. Its cast has included Jeremy Irons and Glenn Close as well as other well-knowns. This week in Amherst, Tom Stoppard means Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead put on at the Rand Theatre by the UMass Theatre Department.

Not only are Rosencrantz and Guildenstern dead but the production lacks a little life itself. Stoppard's play is on the obscure side unless our prospective theatre goer is on the intellectual level where Hamlet is fresh in mind. If not, it's not easy to miss Stoppard's genius.

Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are two minor characters in Hamlet who act as messengers for Claudius in carrying out Hamlet's execution. In Shakespeare's work they play a small role. In Stoppard's they are the central characters.

Stoppard's work has Rosencrantz and Guildenstern waiting around to serve their purpose in Hamlet while the audience gets to watch them ponder their existence.

In Hamlet they are the only two characters who do not die on stage but as the play's title indicates, Stoppard does not grant them immortality.

I suppose it is easier to blame the production than the play because when I read Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead in the 11th grade, it was a lot less confusing than Thursday evening. There are works that are meant to be studied and works that are meant to be produced. The way this play works best, I believe, is if it is produced for the audience to study.

Christopher S. Darland as Guildenstern was throwing his lines out so quickly that I'm afraid they got swallowed and execreted without ever having been digested. This pacing problem was enigmatic for at the same time the production dragged. At the end of act 1, I had to break my six hour coffee fast in an attempt to remain awake.

By act II things were looking brighter. Jonathon Curelop (Rosencrantz) who had helped keep my eyes open through act 1 was now giving me reason to laugh. His stage presence was good as was his delivery and he appeared very comfortable in his role. He pulled through my favorite part of Stoppard's philosophy with great insight of his own; Rosencrantz babbles philosophically about envisioning death as spending eternity in a coffin. He portrays the person within the box as if they were conscious and twiddling their thumbs to pass the time which never ends. He goes on to talk about death as the "absence of presence and nothing more." Although this wasn't my first encounter with this way of thinking, I still got a tingle.

Other names worth mentioning are Rick Martin (The Player) and David Fuller (Alfred player Queen Gertrude). Martin was exuding some splendid energy in his role as he manipulated Fuller around the stage like a cute little prop.

The stage design was pleasing to look at if you enjoy puffy clouds enhanced with lavender and turquoise lighting. For periods exceeding two hours, I didn't.

The UMass Theatre Department's production of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead is an instance where the parts are greater than their sum. If you've read Hamlet or you don't mind exchanging a few good laughs for a lot of confusion, see it.

The distinguished violinist Ani Kanafian will be appearing Tuesday night at the Fine Arts Center.

Blank moves

CHARLES MOULTON DANCE COMPANY
March 5, 1985
Kirby Theater
Amherst College

ROBIN ROSIELLO
Collegian Correspondent

Although the Amherst College performance of the Charles Moulton Dance Company on Tuesday presented certain interesting, bouncy movement patterns, it did not uplift or even disturb. When the movement ended it felt incomplete. The concert featured the premiere of Moulton's latest works Medley, Holiday and Triple Chainsaw Adventure along with the accompanying music of Moulton's long-time collaborator A. Leroy and of Scott Johnson.

The Voice describes Moulton's work by saying that "the dancers create an image of brainy, beautifully trained athletes working out a complicated pattern together." Both Medley and Holiday had interesting movements and an amusing chemistry emerged between the dancers who at times smiled at and played off of each other. Each abrupt pose or stop was striking with the percussive and brass-oriented music. The music and movement attitudes of playfulness and jumpiness in the first piece, however, were similarly expressed in Holiday causing a sense of dullness and monotony.

After intermission, Texas Chainsaw Adventure created a change of pace which, though refreshing, was too abrupt. Dressed in '50's costumes the dancers portrayed all-American characters who cried, laughed and exclaimed such commands as "Freeze!", "Help!" and "Run for your life!". This multi-media farce of American life with its mime-like quality - the staging of fake fights, for example - provided a startling, confusing ending to the concert. Although many of the patterns throughout the pieces were interesting in themselves they did not fit together to convey an attitude or feeling, whether pleasing or disturbing. Perhaps the startling ending was the intended effect but it simply confused and left a blank in the mind of the spectator, illustrated by the unenthusiastic applause and lack of curtain calls.

More U.S. farms may tumble

WASHINGTON (AP) - An unreleased Agriculture Department report says 93,000 U.S. farms, holding $47 billion in debt, are technically insolvent or on the verge of going broke - a 45 percent increase from earlier figures.

The figures are in contrast with the number cited last week by President Reagan when he vetoed legislation intended to provide emergency credit to farmers suffering from declining asset values and insufficient cash flow.

Then, Reagan said, "The truth of the matter is, in need of immediate help are less than 4 percent or around 4 percent at best of all the farmers in the United States." Agriculture Secretary John Block later said Reagan "misspoke" and really knows the situation is far worse.

The new report by the department's Economic Research Service, circulating on Capitol Hill, reiterates data issued several months ago indicating that some 386,000 of the 2.3 million total U.S. farms - or nearly 18 percent - are likely to be suffering some financial stress.

But it goes beyond those numbers to paint a worsening picture for the 679,000 farms that are the mainstream of production agriculture, the so-called "family farms" grossing between $50,000 and $500,000 a year.

"If the situation in early 1984 is extended to early 1985, the available data suggest that one-third of all family-size commercial farms, owing almost one-half of all farm debt, will have some degree of financial difficulty," the report says.

Senators discuss more taxes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Budget Committee is falling so far behind in its labors to trim the federal deficit by $50 billion or more next year that a previously taboo subject - a tax increase -now is being talked about.

The committee, despite Republican leaders' vows to honor President Reagan's campaign promise against a tax hike, will at least consider the possibility as it struggles to complete its 1986 budget outline, says chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M.

"We'll have to consider revenues. They're part of the budget process," he said after his panel in four days rejected a raftof spending cuts proposed by the president as well as a series of even deeper reductions proposed by Domenici.

Democrats on the panel are rallying behind a $150 billion three-year tax-hike package--shich would mostly fall on businesses--formulated by Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C.

Republicans are showing more interest in the subject now than previously, although most still publicly cling to the party line that the deficit should be lowered through spending cuts alone.

With the panel nearly through its first draft of the budget, aides estimated that barely $18.7 billion had been pared thus far from the overall deficit, projected to reach $220 billion in 1986.

The Graduate Faculty of Political and Social Science

New School for Social Research

Summer Institute in Critical Theory and Social Research

Presentation of the classical concepts of the Frankfurt School and an analysis of present-day problems using a combination of old and new analytical instruments will form the base of this program. All Institute participants will attend a weekly seminar meeting where faculty papers will be presented and discussed.

Guiding students in their study of the relationship of critical theory to the problems of contemporary social research and collective action will be the following distinguished scholars:

- Andrew Arato—New School for Social Research
- Jose Casanova—Passaic County College
- Jeffrey C. Goldfarb—New School for Social Research
- Alberto Melucci—University of Milan
- Paul Piccone—Editor, Telos
- Mihaly Vajda—formerly, Institute for Philosophy Hungarian Academy of Sciences
- Joel Whitebook—New School for Social Research

Summer Session begins June 10. You may enroll with The Graduate Faculty as a degree seeking student or on a non-degree basis. For more information on the Summer Institute or other degree programs, mail the coupon below or call (212) 741-5710.

Georgetown faces the toughest road to Lexington

NCAA bids announced

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - The Big Ten and Big East conferences put a record six teams apiece in the 64-team NCAA men's basketball tournament field Sunday.

"We're very excited about the very difficult job we have done," said Vic Bubas, chairman of the committee which spent three days and nights drawing the pairings and seedings.

Georgetown, St. John's, Michigan and Oklahoma were made No. 1 seeds in the four regions.

Georgetown will be in the East along with Illinois, Wichita State, SMU Loyola of Illinois and Georgia Tech.

St. John's was shipped out West with UNLV, N.C. State and Washington in the easiest of the four regions. Oklahoma will have to contend with LA Tech, Boston College, Memphis State and Duke in the Midwest while Southeast had top-seeded Michigan against the likes of Notre Dame and Kansas.

First-round competition begins Thursday and the tournament will end with the championship game April 1 in Lexington, Ky.

The commitee picked 35 at-large teams to go with 29 which qualified automatically as champions of their conference or conference tournament.

"The first 20 or 21 at-large teams were easy. It was no trouble," Bubas said. "The last 15 got difficult and I'm telling you, the last six or eight, we could have stayed there a week."

Kentucky, a Final Four team last season, made the field with the worst record among at-large entries, at 16-12.

Among the missing were Indiana, Louisville, Houston and UCLA.

Only three independents made the field - Notre Dame, Dayton and DePaul. Among others left out, were 20-12 Creighton, 20-10 Richmond and 20-8 West Virginia, the regular-season Atlantic 10 champion.

Lehigh, at 12-18, is the only tournament team with a losing record. Lehigh got in by winning its East Coast Athletic Conference tournament.

UMass earned a better fate than it was dealt

Peter Abraham

In the wake of Thursday's bitter 69-67 loss to Rutgers in the quarterfinals of the Atlantic 10 tournament, the University of Massachusetts head coach Ron Gerlufsen stood in the hallway outside the locker rooms in the school's Athletic Center still wondering what had happened.

"We played as well in the second half as we have since I've been here," Gerlufsen said. "This team...this team wasn't supposed to do anything and we were that close to beating the team that was supposed to win it. We should've won."

Assistant coach Mark Shea stood nearby reading the statistics sheet in disbelief.

"We only had had one foul shot in the second half? "he questioned no one in particular. "One crummy foul shot. How the hell did that happen?"

The players sat on the benches in their cramped locker room staring at the floor, not saying a word.

Only the perpetually happy Darryl Carter looked up as the media filed in to ask why the last second shot didn't fall or why the pass was picked off by Rutgers. There weren't any answers, some explanations maybe, but no answers. The season of ups and downs, of promise and chances, was over.

In five years or so the game will be a small notation in the media guide, one in a long list of tournament losses that the Minutemen have suffered, first in the old Eastern 8 and now in the Atlantic 10. But the game will mean a lot more than that.

"We showed in this game that we belonged," Gerlufsen said. "We were right in this games, take away the few mistakes and some poor first half play and we win."

Those mistakes could have been attributed to tournament pressure. UMass, unconsciously perhaps, put pressure on itself from within. The league didn't expect much from UMass, but they expected a lot from themselves.

"That might've been true," Gerlufsen said. "I did really think, unlike past seasons, that we had a shot, a decent shot at winning the tournament. I think we can play with the Temples and Rutgers of the world."

This season will be looked back upon as a turning point in UMass basketball fortunes. The intensity shown by this team was impressive, the desire tremendous. They had every reason to mail in this season before it started, to decide that losing its two top scorers and being last was reason enough. Add the fact that the only good thing the program had going for it, the Curry Hicks Cage and its crowd, was lost to year-long renovations, made it all the easier to pack it in.

But they didn't. UMass won on the road, they beat Rutgers, St. Bonaventure and St. Joseph's. Temple and West Virginia had scares in Springfield and NCAA-bound Northeastern was defeated.

The coaches in the league, as evidenced by their all-league and all-rookie selections, still didn't respect UMass despite what was accomplished.

But Thursday night, after the Rutgers game, Knight coach Tom Young was standing outside the interview room talking to his assistant about the game.

"You know something, we could've easily lost," the coach said. "We had them down and they just didn't give up. You can't look past them anymore."

No, you can't.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: Carl Smith had a career-high 19 points and six assists. Sutton buried two three-pointers in the game as did Smith.

In the final play, Smith was supposed to work the ball on the wing to Sutton who was going to attempt a three-pointer from the top of the key. Smith lost the ball when he tried a pass to Horace Neysmith at the foul line. Perry intercepted it an tried a shot instead of running out the clock. Sutton got the ball to Smith who was short on his effort.

The Power Is In Your Hands

Today and tomorrow (March 11 and 12) the Student Government Association (SGA) is holding it's Presidential elections. The participation of Third World students in these elections is vital both to the outcome of the election and the general direction of the election and the general direction of UMass Student Government.

The three co-presidential candidacies in this years election, are Michael Cerrato and Kim Hackett, Stacy Roth and Dan Burgess and Patrick Keohan and Theresa Sbarella. While all candidates support RSO groups, student empowerment and more responsive Student Government, there are important differences in strategy and implementation that voters should make themselves aware of.

Hackett and Cerrato are basing their campaign on the platform of student rights, student activities and stricter control of SGA financial activities. Many have labeled the campaign as "conservative" saying that it is running a campaign for the Treasury not the Presidency. Moreover, Hackett and Cerrato have failed to gain any support from the Third World community. In fact, strong tension has existed since the candidates failed to show-up to a scheduled meeting with the Third World Steering Committee.

Keohan and Sbarella have based their candicacy on "the search for student input," yet have seeked no input from the Steering Committee or the Third World Caucus. Whether or not this candidacy has a firm grasp on the issues is a question that has been raised. What is not in question is that these candidates failed to effectively articulate their goals and objectives during last Wednesday's presidential debate. On a positive note, Keohan and Sbarella were the only candidates to mention financial aid when asked about the two or three most important issues affecting students (it must be noted that the other candidates did address the issue of financial aid but not in response to the question of priority issues.)

Burgess and Roth are basing their campaign on the issues of rising education costs, financial aid cuts and student empowerment. They have been actively involved in student rights issues (collecting 1,300 signatures for Students Advocating Financial Aid, SAFA) and issues of oppression (such as the Anti-Racism Team of SCERA.) These candidates have adopted the Third World Issues Platform and have the full endorsement of the Third World Steering Committee and the Third World Caucus. However, some black students have labeled Roth and Burgess as "the best of the worst" questioning just how far they would stick their necks out to support black issues, particularly at the cost of alienation by other white students.

One of these candidacies will represent students in the Board of Trustees and the Student Senate next year. We, as Third World students, can and do have a vital powerful role in this decision. Last year, approximately 2000 students (of 15,000 eligible) participated in the elections. Now the Third World Community comprises about seven percent of the total population, and an active seven percent can decide who represents us.

NUMMO would like to make it clear that we are not endorsing any candidates (although many members of the staff are campaigning for one ticket.) What we do endorse is active participation and turn-out of Third World voters. Vote for the candidate of your choice, vote for youself, your mother, or Prince - just make sure you vote. Equally as important is where you vote. There will be a ballot box at the New Africa House and by the end of the election it should be stuffed with our votes. This will send a message to whomever wins that we are concerned, active and serious about the issues that affect our education and it will serve as a statement of power and commitment to achieve our goals here at UMass.

The choice is ours; the power to elect is ours; the responsibility is ours. We could take advantage of it or we could make the same mistake we've made many times in the past by under-estimating our political power.

Our Platform

The following is the platform compiled by the Third World Steering Committee. Of the issues and concerns of the Third World community. It's these concerns that will guide the political movements of the Third World Caucus and Third World organizations in the coming year.

Third World Issues Platform

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION:

- Enforcement of SGA A/A guidelines; increased monitoring of faculty and administration.
- Elimination of favoritism through employment practices.
- Reorganization/Development of Personnel Policy
- Redevelopment of "Vita-Bank" minority employment program

ACADEMIC ISSUES:

- Commitment to fight against the elimination of Math 104, 106, 107, and 120 courses.
- Continued support and implementation of an effective Academic Grievance Policy.
- Strong support of organizations such as CCEBMS, BCP, an MEP that strive for academic excellence among Third World students.

FINANCIAL AID:

- Actively pursue strategies against Financial Aid cuts and tuition increases.
- To work with the Office of Third World Affairs (OTWA) and Third World Caucus (TWC) on issues of Financial Aid.

SGA BUDGET:

- Stronger support of Third World Registered Student Organizations (RSO), particularly but not exclusively on budgetary matters.
- Increased Direct communication with Third World RSO's to help understand, develop, and enhance programming.
- Commitment to ensure Third World RSO funding criteria based on merit and services rather than demographic representation.

STUDENT EMPOWERMENT:

- Respect the soveriegnity of the Third World Caucus (TWC).
- Ammend the SGA Constitution and/or By-Laws to ensure the representation of the TWC by Third World Students.
- Commitment to ensuring Third World representation, essential SGA subcommitees (e.g. Budgets/Finance, Nominating Sub), as well as University-Wide Committees.
- Political coalitions with the President's Office and the various Third World RSO's, in particular the TWC; in order to achieve intergral participation in such areas as SATF Review, SGA Constitution, etc.
- Continue firm implementation of the revised Code of Student Conduct.
- A fir commitment to challenge oppressive actions of the UMass administration, such as the Yvette Henry arson case.

To increase and enhance multi-cultural activities at UMass, in order to break down cultural misunderstanding, language barriers, and biases.

African Classical Literature : A Reality

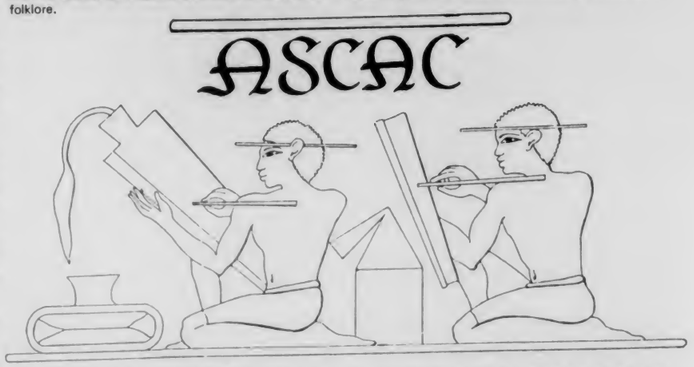
by Chris Williams
Nummo Staff

From Febuary 21 to March 3 the Association for the study of Ancient African Civilizations held their Second Annual Conference on Ancient Egyptian Studies in Chicago, Illinois, at Chicago State University. Despite the absence of the leading Egyptologist Cheikh Anta Diop, the conference attracted an impressive field of scholars that included Dr. John Henrik Clarke, Dr. Yosef ben-Jochannan, and Dr. Maulana Karenga. The purpose of this conference was to present information on African Civilizations in the various disciplines' such as, history, literature and language, sciences, philosophy, ethics, and art. All of the presenters, from the seasoned scholars to the novices, deserve praise for their courageous scholarship on African Civilizations. This article will give some of the highlights of one of the most outstanding speeches which was given by Prof. Joy Hardiman.

Hardiman began her speech quoting from Chancellor William's classic "The Destruction Of Black Civilization", Hardiman said, "What became of the Black people of Sumer?" the traveller asked the old man, "for ancient records shows that the people of Sumer were Black. What happened to them?" "Ah," the old man sighed. "They lost their history, so they died.. " Hardiman added that story telling and story making are two of the most critical activities for a people's survival. This is because stories contain a peoples culture and history.

Discussing language, Hardiman said that words can cause damage to people. To illustrate this point she said, "if you call a people stupid long enough, they become dumb." Hardiman believes that language is a very powerful instrument that is used to create negative images of African people in literature.

To counteract this onslaught of negative images, Hardiman has successfully attempted to teach Black Classical literature to Black students who were enrolled in her Egyptian studies class at Evergreen State College in Washington State. Hardiman believes that it is up to African people to alter these negative images by returning to their African classics, because as she says, "he who controls the image controls the premise." This bigotory is even found in academia, because Hardiman alluded to the fact that it is taught that the Greeks have classics and other cultures have folklore.



Hardiman then discussed the myths that currently exist in academia. "In few places in the Euro-centric experience is it openly said that world civilzation started in Africa. That Black Africans developed Egypt, and were responsible for all of Egypt's periods of renaissnace In few places in the Euro-centric educational experience is it openly said that Afrcian civilization was the primary foundation for Western Civilization. In few places in the Euro-centric educational experience is it openly said that the Ancient Africans developed an influential body of literature thatincludes: autobiographies, historical inscriptions, precies and prayers, instructions orations and love lyrics," said HardimanShethen added that the first versions of the creation story, the story of the flood, the story of the resurrection, the story of Job, the story of the Prodigal son, the story of the taking of Troy, and even Cinderella are found in Ancient Egypt.

Hardiman said that teaching this classical literature to older Black students is rewarding, because the information is quickly articulated in the community. "What is taught in the class on Tuesday is heard in the barber shop on Thursday, in the bars on Saturday night, and in the pulpits on Sunday!"

She then concluded by saying the following: "Thank-you [African scholars] for planting the seed so we all might be. Because of your courage, conviction, brillance and endurence I was able in the TauKoma program to develop a model that redefines classical literature in our images. A model that is African in form, historical content, context and process."

Resurrecting The Spirit

by Christopher Allen
Nummo Correspondent

In the last twenty years, the number of Blacks elected officials in the 11 Southern states has grown from fewer than one hundred to more than four thousand, according to the Atlanta-based Voter Education Project. The numbered of registered black voters has climbed from about 2.5 million to more than 5.5 million according to project officials.

Hundreds of Blacks celebrated the 20th anniversary of the voting rights march from Selma to Montgomery, Alabama with a new pilgrimage to resurrect the "spirit" of the civil rights struggle. As several hundred Blacks had assembled for a symbolic mass, the Rev. Jesse Jackson said that they have unfinished business.

Twenty years ago, on March 7, 1965, Bloody Sunday, state troopers and a mounted posse using billy clubs and tear gas stormed the Edmund Pettus Bridge in Alabama, and turned back the marchers. Two weeks later, Civil Rights Leader, the Rev. Martin Luther King led a march from Selma to Montgomery. The events helped spur Congress to enact the Voting Rights Act of 1965, which made illegal the intimidation used to deny the ballot to blacks.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson and the Rev. Joseph Lowery, a march organizer, were given keys to the city by Mayor Joe Smitherman at Selma's Brown Chapel which is a landmark of the voting rights protest. Smitherman was among the leaders of white segregationist. "We recognize from the governor's office on down, that every American should have the right to vote. We need jobs, and it's going to take blacks and whites working together to get those jobs.," Mayor Smitherman said.

At one point during the service, he shared a hymnal with Jackson. Jackson called Selma "hallowed ground" and said the aim of the march was "to resurrect the spirt of our struggle." He said that "we are advised in the scripture to forget not the ancient landmarks."

In conclusion, the Reverend added, "we choose not to forget history lest we are doomed to repeat it."

Jazz Recital Engulfs Versitility

by Daniel Lewis
Nummo Correspondent

Assistant Professor of Afro-American music at UMass/Amherst Jeffrey W. Holmes delivered his spring recital at Bowker Auditorium on Thursday, March 7th. Holmes is an accomplished composer and is an equally versatile trumpet and piano performer. He is better known at the University as director of Jazz Ensemble I at the Fine Arts Center.

The recital featured a variety of style and orchestration within each of the compositions. Holmes composed and arranged each piece. The music ranged from Dixieland to soft rock and everything in between.

Holmes had eight guest performers to assist him in the recital : Rich Down, bass; Jon Kelley, guitars and banjo; Bob Hores, tenor saxophone, clarinet; Tom Theabald, set percussion; Tim Atherton, trombone. Holme displayed the talent of three of his students in two of his compositions. Nicholas La Fluer, and Joe Rodgers, cello, were featured in a contemporary ballot entitled Horizons. Steve Kowalczyk, an Afro-American music major, performed an uptempo soft rock piece.

Holmes was brilliant throughout the performance, switching from trumpet to piano to flugel horn at will. Th opener Bop Top featured each of the members in the ensemble in an uptempo Be-Bop style.

The mood changed in the next tune from Bop to the free Jazz of "Snuggles," a composition which is basically a saxaphone feature. Holmes said, the piece was inspired through the many jam sessions he had attended at the Parker house.

A banjo, clarinet and the mutes were featured in "Circus Breakers" a Dixieland tune, with optional solos, providing the audience a bit of a laugh. Horizons was the next chart, with " Fenway Flickers" and " Take Care of Your Love" ending the first half.

The ensemble which closed the first of the program with a bang cruised to a climatic finale. The second half featured five charts, four of which were premiere performances. The final piece stood out over all others of the night, within the Parker Bebop style.

Through the rhythmically articulation of each solo section, it was possible to admire the talent of each individual performer. I was impressed with all of the artist however Professor Holmes seem to reach out to the audience and captured the attention of each spectator.

The evening was enjoyable and relaxing. However it was upsetting to find the limited number of black students at the recital. Jazz is an art form which primarily comes from the Afro-American society. I believe this performance by an all white cast, which cares very much for the art form, should be seen by both black and white sudents of this campus. For those who did attend the recital, I'm sure you had a great time. I would encourage anyone to attend the next Afro-American Music Department performance on March 29, 1985. The concert will feature all the Jazz ensembles at the Fine Arts Center in the "Second Annual Jazz Showcase."

Letter to the Editor

A White Response

Greetings from presidential candidates Stacy Roth and Dan Burgess.

As most of you are by now aware, the Student Govenment Presidential elections are being held today and tommorrow. We're writing this letter to introduce ourselves to further and to share with you our ideas and perspectives-especially on issues of importance to people of color.

We feel proud of our track record, in regards to our voting history and our activites and involvements. As white people who have grown up in an institutionally and individually racist society we've learned that to eliminate racism in the world we must first educate ourselves in how racism is institutionalized. And as participants in society's institutions (schools, television/media, families etc.) we must learn how we play into the patterns of perpetuating racism.

We have taken responsibility to change ourselves! Just as "in order to end male violence, men must take initiative," we as whites must also take initiative. Taking initiative can and should occur on many different levels - from calling our family and friends on racist jokes, to "front line" action, to historical educational introspection on how we're still unconsciously falling into racist patterns.

Examples of work we have done include enrolling in courses such as Educational and Institutional Racism, Afro-American History, Inquiry into Race, Class and Gender - to name a few. We've been very involved with issues relating to South Africa. We participated in the writing of the town by-law demanding Amherst's divestiture, we were on the picket line this January turning movie goers away from the racist and South African produced film "The God's Must be Crazy." We've been involved with the Dennis Brutus, Nelson Mandela and the Leonard Peltier campaign demanding their freedom. Dan was the education coordinator for a weeks worth of education and debate when he visited South Africa with 500 other students on Semester at Sea. Activities included producing 500 simulated "South African passbooks" and debating the politics of divesture vs. economic control and input. Dan also coordinated for two consecutive years a bus to bring UMass students to Connecticut to join folks in Hartford protesting the Klan's presence in Connecticut.

Issues of importance that we've dealt with here on campus have been actively resisting the racist raising of S.A.T. scores as admittance criteria, encouraging UMass divestment, and presently expressing our outrage around the Yvette Henry case - as well as having developed a proposal to reach out to Third World communities in Massachusetts to invite and support high school students visit to UMass.

What this brief history is intended to show is a powerful commitment to change - progressive change. It is our intention by sharing this history to share our action, as well as our words, because we all know which speaks louder.

Current and future goals of our are struggling to resist the oppressive implications of the cutting of financial aid, to fight the budgetary attacks on Third World Organizations, to pursue affirmative action whenever and wherever possible, to defend academic support services such as BCP, CCEBMS and MEP, to promote soverignity in the Third World Caucus and other Third World Organizations, and in general to promote people of color here at UMass and in the world in which we live.

A mechanism of communication that we're committed to is regular (bi-weekly or monthly) meetings with the Third World Steering Committee - as well as improving communication through other means such as articles for Nummo, and maintaining institutionalized "office hours" where we would be there for people to share with us anything on their minds.

We hope we have been able to help you understand us and where we're coming from. We also hope that you will vote.

A Dialogue With Paulo Freire

by Athleen Ellington

"I think the best way to get together this afternoon is to have a conversation," said the radical Brazilian educator, Paulo Freire. He was speaking at a workshop organized by the Everywoman's Center and the U.Mass department of Education, which has invited Freire to Amherst to give a series of workshops and seminars during February and March.

Although Freire, who has made dialogue the cornerstone of his educational theory, was only practicing what he preached, this soft-spoken revolutionary had taken his audience of students, professors and community activists by suprise and an awkward silence ensued. They had come to him, the internationally acclaimed "educator of liberation" to learn his methods for giving power to the "marginalized" classes -- and he wanted to have a conversation.

But to Freire, his very method of work, which consists of dialogue and participation, "itself a form of empowerment." It is a process that is inherently political. "I am an educator and therefore I am a politician. There is no neutral education," he said. Refusing to prescribe solutions, he said, "the only way to understand me in your country is to create me according to your cultural conditions."

He said people have told him that his ideas have nothing to do with the first world, that they are only for the third world. "But when I am speaking about knowledge I am speaking about human beings."

Freire's radical theories of education were formulated during his work with adult literacy programs in Brazil and Chile in the early 1960s. But over the years he has extended his geographical definition of the third world to include a political concept. According to Freire, the sub-cultlure of the U.S. and other first world countries experience the same alienation, domination and oppression that typify the world of illiterates and landless of the Third World. With 2.2 billion people in the developing countries now surviving on less than $400 a year, according to a recent World Bank report, and with the numbers of poor steadily increasing in this country, Friere's lesson in the "education of the oppressed" take on a sense of urgency.

According to Freire, education can be a tool for repression or liberation. While working with the rural poor in northeast Brazil, he saw that widespread illiteracy served the purposes of the dominant classes. His educational theories developed from his desire to liberate the people who constitute what he calls the cultures of silence:" people with no voice in their country's political system. The military regime that overthrew the Goulart government in 1964 found his works so threatening that he was jailed for "subversive activities" and then exiled. He spent the next 16 years abroad, in Chile, Switzerland and for several years in the U.S., where he was invited by Harvard University to teach at its Center for Studies in Education and Development in the late 1960s. He returned to Brazil in 1980, and is teaching in Sao Paulo's two universities.

Friere, a Christian Marxist who calls his process dialogue a humanistic education, urged students and professors to critically examine their own goals for education. He criticized the separation of teaching from learning and the "mystification of scientific rigor" in Amercian universities. In highly bureaucratized societies like the U.S., he said, teaching becomes entirely the activity of the one who instructs and learning becomes the "duty" of the student.

In such a system the teacher becomes the possessor of knowledge, as one might possess private property. Like putting money into a bank, teaching is reduced to depositing bits of information and skills. Such a professor feels paternalistically "responsible" for his students whom he must make into "rigorous scientists," says Friere.

He imposes "lots of readings of words," explains Friere, "but he almost never discusses the world. "If you understand knowledge in this way," he says, "you have nothing to do with dialogue."

POETRY

AT A NON—MEETING OF METAPHYSICAL MINDS

And they asked why I don't write about cherry blossoms and tea the quaint art of sushi ikebana and odori
the magnificence of Mt. Juji, and they seemed astonished that I could speak little and write no Japanese.
So I told them about my grandparents who came here a hundred years ago as indentured servants on plantations, saving enough for their sons to buy land, grow crops from rock, fingernails bleeding, dropping babies in the fields, about how
after so many years of quiet, suddenly, they/we with 110,000 other Americans of Japanese ancestry, were thrown into concentration camps because of the color of our skin, and because they thought we were not American enough.
And I told them about Vincent Chin who was beaten to death in Detroit by unemployed auto workers who thought he was Japanese, Datsun/Toyota/Nissan rolled into one innocent Chinese American and blamed for Reagan's economy.
And I told them of several generations before me, Asians built railroads connecting the West, and laundered shirts, and field farms, labored in factories and sweatshops and grocery stores and occasionally got lynched, sold into brothels, and even though locked out on Angel Island, locked into Tule Lake, still survived.
And no, I had not climbed Mt. Fuji but I know well the Transamerica building that looms over demolished ashes of the I. Hotel and displaced Manongs, sweatshops, and poverty's projects.
So when they ask why I am not enchanted by the metaphysical images of sleep, I will answer:
with the objective correlative of ikebana embracing heaven, earth and humankind to embrace the struggles of our people.
with the symbolism of odori to unbind my confininh obi, loosen my kimino skirts and kick high my poetic foot.
with my metaphor of cherry blossoms scattering as voices in the wind over the grave of Vincent Chin. and extend my vision to thunder growing high on the mountain and waterfalls, terrible/swift/undeniable in their paths for justice.

Freire explained this dichotomy was due in part to fear. "It is fantastic how sophisticated the manipulation of consciousness is in a technology advanced society. In Latin America there is fear of physical oppression, but here you have other kinds of fear." He said that for many professors in the States, who are in constant pursuit of tenure, it "means walking roads full of fear."

Friere believes his method of dialogue and participation leads to an awareness, or "conscientization," of the real problems to be faced, which in turns leads to critical thinking. He said students wanting to know if it was more important to change the institution or the people inside it, should first apply this method to recognize the obstacles to be confronted. Like a general plotting his campaign, looking for the enemy's weak spots, "We must build an idealogical map of the institution," he says. Otherwise, action is futile and "we succumb to despair, which leads to cynicism."

And Cynicism seems to have little place in this 64-year-old professor's thinking. "We came to the world to change it, not to adapt ourselves to it," he says, adding that there must be a balance between ideology and action. "There is a dialectical movement: as I change the world, I change. By getting involved in conflicts, strikes for example, these things clarify our minds."

Friere, a strong supporter of the feminist movement, says there is also a need for "tolerance in diversity" within many liberation movements. He says it is the failure of the many Leftist groups in Latin America to tolerate each other that is undermining the Left. "They eat each other while the Right sleeps," he said.

For the same reason, he says the feminist struggle can be carried on in collaboration with men who believe in the struggle. "If women reject men just because they are ideologically naive," he said. This is in part because the feminist movement cannot be understood apart from the question of social classes. But he agreed the leadership must be by women. He cautioned against men who joined the movement out of feelings of guilt. "The moment we as men feel guilt," he said, "it means we still feel machismo."

He believes the same applies for blacks. "Blacks have to reject whites who have feelings of guilt because that means they are still racist. "Friere said that women must also go beyond sexim and discover the different levels of discrimination suffered by women. For example, he said that a black, peasant women coming to this country from Latin America is discriminated against because she is black, because she is a chicano, because she is a peasant and because she is a woman.

Racism is not just a theory for Freire, a dark-skinned man whose English is modulated by the rhythm and syntac of his native Portuguese. "I have been discriminated against in this country, and I hate it," he said, revealing an anger against injustice which infuses his idealogy and which he urged his listeners never to lose. "Anger, not just love, moves us and pushes us to action."

But he urged women to also go beyond anger. Otherwise, "you remain in an attitude of rebellion, and that is not enough." He said that if women stay at the level of anger, they will have difficulty in creating tactics. "If you have a preponderance of emotionality, you will lose the ability to program your struggle."

NUMMO NEWS will have a "History question of the week" contest. The person(s) who respond correctly to the most questions will be entered in a drawing to win a NUMMO jacket. Good Luck!

The answer will appear in next weeks NUMMO. Submit answers by Friday to room 103 Naw Africa House.

This week 's question

What was Malcolm X's previous last name:

Last weeks question

Dr. Charles Drew made one of the most important single contributions to the Allied victory in World War II. A doctor and scientist, he developed a process of changing blood into plasma. This important discovery has saved thousands of lives each year since 1940.

Born in Washington D.C.,in 1904, Charles Drew combined self-discipline, work and intelligence to earn honors in everything he did. An excellent student, he also performed well in many sports. While he was a student at Amherst College, he earned national recognition as a halfback. At graduation time, he was chosen as the student who had brought the greatest honor to the college.

In 1950 he died from loss of blood, because he was not admitted into a white hospital, after an automobile accident. It is a disgrace that a man who donated so much to the field of medicine had to die because he was a victim of racism.

Gorbachev takes Soviet Communist Party helm

Young leader's rise unusual, UMass professor says

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

The quick ascent to power of Mikhail Gorbachev as new general secretary of the Soviet Communist Party is unprecedented when compared with the normally slow process of acquiring power in the Soviet Union, a local authority on that nation said yesterday.

Gorbachev, the youngest man in the Politburo at 54, yesterday became the third leader of the Soviet Union in just over two years, the Soviet news agency Tass reported. He replaces Konstantin U. Chernenko, who died Sunday at age 73.

Karl Ryavec, a political science professor at the University of Massachusetts, said the most important aspect of Gorbachev's rise to power is that "he's likely to be their leader for 20 or more years because of his age."

Soviet leaders are usually well past middle age before they receive a prestigious position in the Politburo, Ryavec said adding that most of the current Soviet leadership is very old.

Analysts had predicted that Gorbachev would be chosen to replace Yuri V. Andropov, who died in February 1984 at age 69 after 15 months in office, but Chernenko and the "old guard" took power, Ryavec said. Chernenko was chairman of the Politburo and general secretary of the party for 13 months.

Gorbachev previously was secretary of the Communist Party in Stavropol, a region in the northern Caucasus Mountains region, Ryavec said. He became a member of the ruling Politburo in 1980.

"He moved along so fast, and got promoted very fast. I guess Andropov liked him," he said.

Gorbachev will probably not have much effect on the arms control negotiations that begin today in Geneva, Switzerland. "That's (Foreign Minister Andrei) Gromyko's job. He's been the foreign minister since I was in college, and he has a powerful base in the Politburo," Ryavec said.

"However, I don't expect any results from these talks for at least a couple of months," he said, because the two sides are still "feeling each other out."

For real progress to be made in arms negotiations, "a Reagan-Gorbachev meeting may be necessary, but I don't see it in the near future," Ryavec said.

Among the changes that Gorbachev could effect, economic reforms are the most likely, he said. "Gorbachev will try to make the economy more productive," he said. "He'll try to solve the food problem, and he'll try to get some breathing space from the U.S."

Gorbachev has degrees in law and agriculture, and was the agriculture specialist in the Politburo, Ryavec said.

Ryavec teaches two courses in Soviet government and has written and edited books on the Soviet Union, including Soviet Economic Reforms (1975) and Soviet Society and the Communist Party (1979). He is currently writing a book on U.S.-Soviet relations.

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet President Konstantin U. Chernenko is dead at 73 and his youngest lieutenant, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, took power yesterday in a shift away from the aged elite that has ruled this nation for two decades.

The Kremlin announced yesterday afternoon that the long-ailing Chernenko, "staunch fighter...for Communism," had died at 7:20 p.m. Sunday of emphysema and other problems.

Within five hours a second announcement came—the 54-year-old Gorbachev, youngest member of the ruling Politburo, had been chosen to succeed Chernenko in the most important Kremlin post, Communist Party general secretary.

Gorbachev is considered a staunch supporter of Andropov's reform-minded economic policies, more so than Chernenko was. Those policies included a crackdown on corruption and inefficiency, and efforts to boost individual initiatives for Soviet workers.

The sudden transition at the top came on the eve of new U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms control talks in Geneva, Switzerland, reopening after a 16-month suspension. The delegations announced yesterday they would begin the discussions as scheduled today.

From Washington, President Reagan sent a message of condolence to the Soviets, saying, "I wish to reiterate the strong desire of the American people for world peace."

The American chief executive told reporters he eventually would "like to have a talk...a meeting of minds" with Gorbachev. But he ruled out attending tomorrow's Chernenko funeral, saying he "didn't see anything that could be achieved" by coming to Moscow.

Vice President George Bush is to head the U.S. delegation.

Western diplomats here noted that Gorbachev, an agriculture and economic specialist who recently has taken on foreign missions as well, has been part of a collective Kremlin leadership whose views he most likely will continue to represent.

At 2 p.m. yesterday the Tass news agency carried the death announcement, which was read simultaneously over broadcasting stations.

It said Chernenko had died "after a grave illness" and that the name of this "staunch fighter for the ideals of Communism and for peace, will remain forever in the hearts of

Regents consider tuition hike

Costs could go up 13 percent

BOSTON (AP) — Tuition at the University of Massachusetts and other public state colleges could rise as much as 13 percent this fall under a package of tuition options scheduled for discussion today by the state Board of Regents of Higher Education.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' proposed $8.6 billion state budget calls for the regents to generate an additional $12 million in revenue for the state treasury in fiscal year 1986, which begins July 1.

"Tuition revenues for fiscal year 1985 are estimated at $95.2 million. To realize a $12 million increase in revenues, an increase of approximately 12-13 percent would be required," according to a summary of tuition options prepared for the regents.

UMass student leaders have indicated in recent meetings that they are opposed to any kind of tuition increase and will voice their opinions at today's meeting.

Other options for the 1985-86 school year include:

• A 5 percent to 8 percent tuition increase. Such an increase would be above the inflation rate, but below the 11 percent growth in personal and disposable income in state residents.

• Linking higher tuition with an increased number of tuition waivers for poor students. Such a move would aid students who would be especially hard hit by any overall boost in college costs.

• Postponing action to see what happens to a federal proposal to reduce scholarship aid, which could affect the ability of Massachusetts college students to handle any increase in tuition.

The regents do not have to follow the Dukakis budget recommendation, which was based on initial revenue estimates in November.

Last April, the regents set the stage for several years of tuition hikes by adopting a new policy that calls for public college students to eventually pay up to 33 percent of the cost of their education.

The policy was designed to raise more money from students and to correct inequities in the current system, in which students at the University of Massachusetts pay only 24 percent of their cost while students at state colleges pay 29 percent.

The regents approved a 10-to-15-percent tuition hike at the various public colleges for 1984-85 to increase and equalize the students' share of costs.

But after Dukakis and the chairmen of the Legislature's Education Committee complained about the lack of input from students and other parties in setting the figure, the Legislature scaled the hike back to an average 7 percent.

State politician raps Democrats in speech to 30

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

Because it has set the national agenda, captured the youth vote and won the presidential election, the US Republican Party will remain the majority party, state Rep. Andrew Natsios [R]-Holliston, said last night at the University of Massachusetts.

Natsios, the state party chairman, told an audience of about 30 people that President Ronald Reagan's landslide victory marks a major political change. "Many historians believe that the change has now taken place," he said.

"The agenda of the Reagan administration has now been accepted by the American people," Natsios said. People now believe that the Republican Party is more competent to handle the economy and not the Democratic Party, he said.

"The change is critical. The problem with the Democratic Party is the problem [the Republican Party] has had for 50 years. That is, we had for 50 years criticized what the Democrats proposed and proposed no clear alternate vision," Natsios said.

"Now what the Democrats are proposing nationally and Michael Dukakis is a good example of this, is to propose more of the same," he said.

Seventy percent of the 18-35 age group voted for President Reagan, according to Natsios. "The president took 66 percent of the vote under the age of 30," he added.

Mass. Republican Party chairman Andrew Natsios.

The Democrats have re-arranged state districts to their advantage in congressional elections, Natsios said. "Had the country been objectively redistricted we would now have practical control of Congress," he said.

Commenting on Gov. Michael Dukakis Natsios said,"80 percent of the jobs created in the new high technology industry are directly attributable to the [U.S.] Defense Department."

"If the President ever cut what Dukakis wants to cut out of the defense budget, there would be no jobs and we would have an unemployment rate of about 12 percent," Natsios said.

Boston Univ. break is over, but measles hype continues

BOSTON (AP) — Lines were forming all over the Boston University campus yesterday as students returning from spring break were checked for protection against a measles epidemic that struck shortly before the vacation began.

University officials vowed they would take disciplinary action which could include suspension against students who could not provide proof of immunity within 24 hours of their return.

"Those are not idle threats at all," Christopher Queen, assistant dean of students, said of the promised disciplinary action.

Stickers to be placed on student identification cards and necessary for admission to public events on campus were handed out by dormitory counselors and the dean of students' office to those who complied with the regulation.

Nurses at the university clinic inoculated those who did not have immunity, either through vaccination after 1968 or as a result of having the disease.

A total of 63 cases of measles have been confirmed on campus, said university spokesman Jon Keller. Health officials have estimated between 5,000 and 6,000 of the school's 28,000 students could be susceptible to the disease.

Geneva arms talks will begin today

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Nuclear arms talks between the United States and the Soviet Union are expected to start today as scheduled, despite the death of Soviet President Konstantin U. Chernenko.

But, it was unclear whether substantive bargaining over missiles and space weaponry would proceed quickly. Ambassador Max. M. Kampelman, leader of the U.S. delegation, said Chernenko's death Sunday would not delay the start of the talks in Geneva.

Kampelman's spokesman said, however, the United States had offered to consider a delay if the Soviets wished.

"Naturally our first concern was to make sure we made it clear to the Soviets that their needs in respect to these times would certainly be accommodated," spokesman Joseph Lehman said.

The United States had not formally suggested a postponement, he added, but had left it to the Soviets to make clear their desires.

There was no direct word from the Soviet mission, where telephones were either busy or went unanswered most of the day.

But Kampelman's statement, plus details given by Lehman, indicated there was no change in previous expectations for the initial meeting.

Lehman told a news conference the framework for today's session was worked out in an hour long meeting between delegation aides yesterday at Geneva offices of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

Lehman said Kampelman and his co-negotiators, John G. Tower and veteran negotiator Maynard W. Glitman, would meet with the Soviet delegation at the Soviet mission at 11 a.m. Tuesday, 5 p.m. EST.

Kampelman, a Democrat who negotiated with the Soviets for three years at the Madrid European Security Conference, will handle space arms.

Israeli troops attack Shiite village

ARZAY, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli troops and armor stormed a southern Lebanon village outside the occupation zone yesterday, overpowered the Lebanese army garrison and killed at least 24 people said to be guerrillas by the military command.

The dawn assault on the Shiite Moslem town of Zrariye followed a night-long artillery bombardment. Residents who fled the village said the shelling began a few hours after a suicide bomber in a pickup truck filled with explosives killed 12 Israeli soldiers and wounded 14 near the Israeli border.

Israeli's military command said its forces took 10 Lebanese soldiers prisoner when they ignored a warning not to resist. "Many guerrilla suspects and weapons in great quantities" also were captured, the command said.

Israeli Radio reported that Israeli troops killed 30 guerrillas and destroyed 10 houses. It said many guerrillas were caught trying to flee with loads of weapons and explosives.

The Lebanese army gave no information on its casualties, but a Shiite militia spokesman said two soldiers were killed and four wounded.

State and private Lebanese radio stations maintained most of those killed in Zrariye, which has a population of 8,000 to 10,000, were civilian villagers.

Reporters who reached this village about a mile from Zrariye heard gunfire and loud explosions through most of the day and saw two houses burning.

Villagers, militiamen and soldiers in Arzay said Israeli forces began pounding Zrariye with field artillery and tank cannons at 11 p.m. Sunday and pushed into the town from three directions at 6 a.m. yesterday.

D.A. probing mall shooting

By LAURA KOESTER
Collegian Staff

There have been no arrests in the weekend shooting of a 23-year-old McDonald's restaurant employee, and the District Attorney's Office is investigating the possibility of a personal motive in what was characterized by State Police as a particularly vicious and violent crime.

Ed Etheredge, assistant to District Attorney Michael Ryan, said the woman left McDonald's on Route 9 in Hadley at about 2 a.m. Saturday to make a night deposit at the Bank of Boston in the Hampshire Mall. In front of the mall, a man wearing a ski mask stepped out and fired at her with a shotgun. He gave no warning and made no demands.

Etheredge said no words were exchanged by the victim and her assailant, who shot her nine times before grabbing the night deposit bag with $2,000 and running off.

The victim is listed in satisfactory condition at Cooley Dickinson Hospital with severe injuries to her hands.

The woman, who is an Amherst resident, was saved from death by the canvas deposit bag which she was holding in front of her chest. Etheredge said the woman's fingers and the canvas bag absorbed most of the force of the shots.

The D.A.'s office is not releasing the description of the suspect, but Etheredge said it was definitely a male.

"This is not the type of robbery we're accustomed to in Hampshire and Franklin counties," he said, adding there have not been any other recent robberies of night deposits.

Etheredge requested that anyone who observed anything suspicious at the Hampshire Mall Saturday night contact State Police. He also warned people who make such deposits to vary their routines to minimize the risk of a similar incident.

Elections running 'smoothly'

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association elections began yesterday with a "pretty good turnout," elections coordinator John Crowley said.

"Things are running pretty smoothly," Crowley said. He said he did not have as much trouble as he expected in getting people to staff the polls.

Crowley said the SGA is monitoring the polls out of concern that those who are staffing the boxes may try to stuff the ballots for one candidacy.

"I'm relying on mutual suspicion," he said.

Voting will continue today for SGA presidents, Campus Center Board of Governors, Residential Committees and open senate positions.

There are also two referendum questions on the ballot, one asking if students support the establishment of a $50,000 Spring Concert fund, another asking students to approve funding of the Student Senate Association of Massachusetts at a cost of one dollar per student, per semester.

On campus students may vote today in their dining halls, and off campus students can vote at the Hatch cafeteria. Polling will also be available at Iota Gamma Upsilon sorority for Greek area residents, and at the New Africa House.

Amherst plans another gym

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Staff

Only days after Amherst College's New Gymnasium was destroyed by fire, college officials are discussing plans for construction of a new facility.

The gymnasium, built in 1976, was ruined within minutes early Saturday morning by flames 30 feet high. By 1:30 a.m., "we knew the whole structure had been lost," Peter Pouncey, president of the college said.

Victor Zumbruski, Amherst Fire Department chief, said firefighters had difficulty putting out the blaze due to a lack of fire hydrants close enough to the scene.

Referring to the older gym, which was attached to the new one, Pouncey said, "Luckily it was not a windy night because if it was, we could have lost the whole structure."

Reconstruction of the building will begin in early April and may be completed as early as the fall, Donald DeManzo, director of the Amherst College physical plant said. The same building design and base of the former structure will be used, he said.

The building did not have a direct sprinkler or alarm system to the fire department. "A smoke detector system would have helped," Zumbruski said.

The new facility will include better prevention systems including using less wood and additional fire protection, DeManzo said.

Until reconstruction is complete, the college will make alternate plans for their athletic programs.

"For the rest of the school year we'll move outside, a little earlier than we'd like to," Peter Gooding, director of the physical education department said. Since the facility was used for indoor basketball, racquetball and tennis courts, the season has been slightly disrupted, he said. Hampshire College has offered its pool facilities, and Mount Holyoke College has also offered use of its gymnasium, he said.

SGA presidential candidates have past actions scrutinized

Court clears Roth and Burgess

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association co-presidential candidates Stacy Roth and Dan Burgess were cleared of all campaign violation charges in a unanimous decision by the University of Massachusetts Student Supreme Court Sunday night.

The candidates, along with Chris Sullivan, a campaign aide, were charged with spending money on campaign posters in advance of the official campaign season and not accounting for money spent. The charges were filed by Southwest area senator Autumn Maki.

The candidates' campaign was given credit on the work done and will be paid for when the bill is processed according to Sullivan.

The court ruled that the campaign had not violated any campaign by-laws but recommended the by-laws be revised to be more specific.

Scott McCracken, advocate for the prosecution, asked the court to disqualify the Roth/Burgess candidacy and remove Sullivan's power to authorize spending for the campaign. The court does not have the authority to restrict spending power.

The defendants said they did not know what the specific allegations were until the trial had begun. Student Attorney General Pia Giamassi made a pre-trial motion to dismiss the case on grounds that no specific charges were made and, therefore, no defense could be prepared. "This wasn't a trial. This was an investigation," she said.

Koehan charged with stealing

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

A candidate for co-president of the Student Government Association yesterday confirmed that he tried to shoplift from the University Store in January.

Patrick Keohan, who is running with Teresa Sbardella for the SGA presidency, said that while attempting to steal a package of hot tamales (a cinnamon-coated candy) from the University store, he was caught by the store's security officer and sent to the office of the Clerk of Courts which is the standard procedure for students caught shoplifting merchandise under $100.

The Clerk of Courts levied a fine against him, Keohan said, but he refused to say what the fine was.

The standard fine, however, is usually three times the amount of the total stolen, according to the Clerk's office.

"I did that act (shoplift) and it was wrong. You can print that under my name and that would be great for your newspaper, but as far as my candidacy, well, we represent certain issues," Keohan said.

The shoplifting allegation first came to light when a man, who refused to identify himself, called the Collegian Friday and said one of the candidates was picked up for shoplifting. The man said, "he was concerned that the same candidate might get elected."

The director of security at the University Store could not be reached for confirmation of the allegation.

When asked yesterday if he was ever picked up at the store for shoplifting, Keohan at first said he had not, but after being told of the date, he said he "recalled having been found with a package of hot tamales, valued at 10 cents."

"If people are that afraid of my candidacy that they would bring up that, well then I think you should know that I was also arrested at (the) Whitmore (snack bar) for stealing a piece of cake," Keohan said.

Keohan would not say when he was arrested for stealing a piece of cake, but did say he was taken to the University of Massachusetts police station for the incident.

"I was handcuffed, put in the squad car, booked, the whole bit, but that's a whole other story, and I really don't want to go into it," he said.

the Soviet people and of the whole of progressive mankind."

A later medical bulletin said he died of the lung disease emphysema, complicated by unspecified cardiac difficulties and chronic hepatitis that worsened into cirrhosis of his liver.

Yesterday evening, Gorbachev led Politburo members into the House of Unions, where Chernenko lay in state in a flower-decked coffin, to pay respects to the deceased leader.

The ruddy faced, white-haired Chernenko, a Brezhnev protoge and longtime party stalwart, reached the pinnacle of Kremlin power in February 1984 when he was chosen Communist chief on the death of Andropov, the former KGB secret police chief who had taken over after Brezhnev died in November 1982.

Collegian captures awards in college press competition

The Collegian won five Gold Circle Awards for its efforts in 1984, the Columbia Scholastic Press Association has announced.

Out of 3200 college and university entries nationwide for 60 different categories, 709 received Gold Circle Awards.

Former Managing Editor John O'Connell was awarded first place in the Individual Page One Design category for the layout of the Dec. 7, 1984 issue.

Current Managing Editor Anne McCrory won third place in the News Writing category for her story "Arson Suspect Files Suit" last May. The story detailed Yvette Henry's multi-million dollar lawsuit against the University and law enforcement officials in which she claimed her civil rights were violated.

Executive Editor Rita Murphy won a third place award for overall Opinion Page Design for last semester, as did the Collegian staff for the "Night Life" special in the Feature Page Design category.

The Collegian was also awarded a certificate of merit for Overall Design (Tabloid).

Administrative assistant of the Press Association Tom Duval said yesterday that Collegian entries were competing with a record number of entries from colleges and universities nationwide.

"The first place award is very prestigious," he said. "There were many different criteria used to evaluate the entries."

Vandals hit cars

University of Massachusetts police reported several cases of automobile vandalism this weekend.

The front and rear windshield of a Volkswagen were smashed by glass beer bottles, causing more than $300 in damage, police said. The car was parked on Clark Hill Road near Chadbourne dormitory.

Two cars were vandalized on the second level of the Campus Center Parking Garage. The tires of a student's car were slashed and a side mirror was broken. The damage is valued at $210. Also, four custom emblems were stolen from a 1985 BMW parked in the garage, but the car received no other damage.

Police said there were many other car vandalism reports in P-Lot by the Physical Plant and near Alumni Stadium.

An intoxicated man was arrested Friday night on the third floor of Cance House. Police charged him with disorderly conduct and said he was throwing beer bottles against the hall walls and would not calm down when they tried to restrain him.

A student was pelted with chunks of ice while getting out of his car near Patterson House. The victim, who was struck in the head and upper body with the ice, said someone was throwing the ice from the third floor lounge of the building.

When the advancement of medicine brings us down

Diane Lane

Imagine my surprise, when in the midst of some enlightening reading on a wonderful new obstetrics procedure that could replace amniocentesis as a means of early detection of birth defects, I found, hidden in the obscurity of the 22nd paragraph, a casual observation by one of the doctors interviewed that the procedure, called chorionic villi sampling, could be used as a means of sex selection and that because "many people prefer to have boys, girl fetuses may be aborted, a rejection of healthy females merely on the grounds that they are female."

The doctor went on to say that though physicians will refuse to perform the test for that purpose "a few parents who claim they want the test for approriate reasons actually use it to ascertain the sex."

Keeping in mind that the new procedure is an advance in current medical technology in that it can be performed earlier than amniocentesis, and the results obtained sooner, the overall tone of the article was one of praise. And yet it seems to me, in light of what I consider to be an increasingly confusing mess of ethical questions which continue to go unanswered, that humanity is far ahead of itself in terms of technical capabilities than its philosophical thoughts on the "rightness" of things would indicate.

We are, it seems, determined to play God in proportions unmatched by any parallel increase in the wisdom we bring to these difficult decisions. Quality of life is hardly a consideration in the current frenzied implantation of plastic hearts in patients who cling to the hope of longer life, if only by a few hours; and if I had earlier felt some vague qualms of uneasiness at medicine's readiness to take on the role of savior, those qualms have now become full-fledged waves of fear and anger.

The murder of female children at birth has an illustrious history, and is brought thoroughly up-to-date by the present situation in China, where government policy allows the majority of parents only one child, in a serious effort to control the burgeoning population. Because of the desire to pass on a family name, and because of a strange, almost universal belief that only a man is capable of this difficult and important task, China's citizens are killing their girl babies at an alarming rate.

In the United States, I cannot help but wonder exactly who these "few parents" are who so prefer to have a boy that they would abort their healthy daughter, presumably conceived in love and with sincere desire to have a child. I like to think that I would be able to recognize these people on the street--perhaps by a satanic growth of horns on their head, or by a certain furtiveness common to criminals and thieves--but I know these thoughts are fantasy and that they will live their lives unnoticed by me, or by their neighbors and friends.

Of even more curiosity to me is the mother of this unwanted girl child. Does she look in the mirror every morning so filled with self-hate that she cannot bear to bring another like herself into the world? Is her life a torment of unfulfillment due to her gender, and so seeks to avoid inflicting the same pain on a daughter? Or does she assume the superior desirability of a male child as a matter of course?

In many cases advances in medicine bring renewed hope and life to those who were on the verge of losing both. Today, similar advances are used by people whose moral and intellectual short-sightedness takes life away--based on subjective judgments of the value of human life, and in this case, the value of a woman's life.

Spilling over its contained edges, this situation represents the ultimate expression of the pervasive feeling in our culture that women, and those who will be born disabled or deformed--the association between the two being no accident--are to be despised.

The question remains unanswered--indeed, even unasked--by many who would do well to consider it: does a medical procedure that allows, and after all, encourages the outfoxing of nature have any place in a world full of people so sadly lacking in basic sensitivity that the potential criminal abuse of that procedure will not deter its use?

Not so easy to participate

Laura Yee

For the past few years there have been complaints about the lack of student activism on campus. These complaints are legitimate ones that can be seen and heard through the insignificant to almost obsolete student representation on committees, lower turnout in organized rallies and protests as compared to prior years and sporadic attendance of senators in the Undergraduate Student Senate.

It was only last year when industrial engineering Professor Klaus Kroner was concerned that there was no student representation on his space and calendar committee of the Faculty Senate since these decisions on policy directly affect students. He complained that students fought for representation in the 1970s and only a few years later, that desire for student input has significantly decreased. Is this an indication that student input may be obsolete some day?

Today is the last opportunity undergraduates have to choose their student leaders for the next academic year. The importance of having strong and dedicated representation on a campus where bureaucracy and lack of student consideration prevails cannot be stressed enough.

With the fervor and desire to vote, not just to have the candidate of my choice win but more importantly, to show that some students are still concerned with representation, I was told that I could not. Student senator Charles Jabri said I needed a student I.D. and that a driver's license and other identification would not suffice, although he had a list of all registered students. With an aloof attitude, Jabri turned away without any comment or explanation of why I could not vote. When I returned later, I was told that a license or anything with a picture would have been accepted.

How many others concerned with student issues did Jabri turn away who did not have a UMass ID but did have other sources of identification?

Is this a reflection of how 19,000 UMass students are being represented? Does student representation at UMass mean that the SGA is not concerned with a student who wants to ensure that she is represented? Furthermore, is this an indication of what the future will bring if the current administration's endorsed candidates win today?

A 20 percent voter turnout for the SGA presidential elections is pitiful and the lack of its commitment to increase this by ignoring students who want to participate is inexcusable.

These questions need to be addressed, especially if there really is a wave towards decreasing student activism or else students will not have grounds to land on when the carpet of input is pulled from under them.

Setting the record straight about campaign

In last Thursday's Collegian there appeared a front page story that reported the call for an investigation into our campaign funds for the Student Government Association presidency. As the candidates who were charged, we would like to respond.

Let us first say that these allegations were vague and unfounded. In running for the SGA presidency a candidacy is alloted $250. Not a dime more can be spent on the campaign. Not only have we abided by this rule, we are more than willing to undergo a thorough investigation into our purchase orders.

Perhaps the best way to win an election, to some people, is to draw attention to yourself by shedding negative light on your opponents. This is exactly what has happened.

Bill Collins, the student who called for the investigation, claims to be "just a concerned student." He must be a very concerned student. So concerned, in fact, that he felt the obligation to coach Kim Hackett and Mike Cerrato prior to the SGA debate last Tuesday night, broadcast on WMUA radio. When a story like this appears in the Collegian people too often think guilty until proven innocent. Certainly we have seen what can happen when people are wrongly accused on this campus. Very simply, this allegation is wrong. And by his association on the Hackett-Cerrato campaign we feel this an ugly reflection on their candidacy.

Looking forward to a 'real' compromise

We are appalled at the proposal submitted by University officials which seeks to reduce the powers of the Board of Governors from a governing board to a programming board. As was illustrated in a Collegian article last Friday, the proposal "would give the Director of Student Activities Office (SAO) the ultimate authority over allocating student space in the Campus Center/Student Union." Students would be denied their right to allocate student space in the CC/SU Complex. This proposal is not a compromise. It is an abridgement of student rights. We applaud the BOG's rejection of this proposal, and we look forward to reading about a real "compromise" set forth by the administration.

This is an open letter to the 2500 students who signed the MassPIRG petition and the 40 petitioners who helped gather the signatures. We want to thank you for your time, your sense of responsibility, and most importantly, your dedication to students and their right to organize around the issues that they want. Having so many of you show your support in the one week that we petitioned, revitalized our spirit for the student movement and its importance to all. We want you to know where we stand in our efforts to create a referendum question and to confirm student support.

In order to have a binding referendum it is necessary for 20 percent of the student population to vote. The fact that only 17 percent of the population voted in last year's well-publicized election would indicate the SGA election in two weeks will not have an adequate turn out without a strong "get out the vote" campaign. This effort would be too great for UMassPIRG to take on alone at this time and therefore we regret to announce that our referendum question has been postponed until the next election.

It would have been possible to make this referendum question binding by taking it to the board of trustees. We chose not to take this route because we felt that it would not be a legitimate way of reaffirming wide student support for UMassPIRG.

Our week's effort was not in vain: we talked with and collected signatures from 2500 people. We explained to those unfamiliar with MassPIRG what we are and what we do. Several of those students are now involved with one of the seven projects ranging from acid rain to statehouse watch.

Planning to go to LAW SCHOOL?
CONSIDER HOFSTRA UNIVERSITY'S SCHOOL OF LAW PRE-LAW SUMMER INSTITUTE

The Hofstra University School of Law will offer a Pre-Law Summer Institute for five weeks from May 28 to June 27 for the weekday section and for the evening section (split 37 hours between Tuesdays and Thursdays and from June 1 to June 29 for the Saturday section). The Institute will be of interest to those already planning to attend law school or those who undecided. Taught by the Hofstra Law School faculty, the Institute seeks to develop analytical skills and to introduce the student to the study and case-briefing techniques. Classes are presented from the perspective of the law school curriculum. The Institute has been designed for the summer student planning to attend law school and for those who have graduated from college and are between jobs or between careers.

Black soldiers had to carry greatest burdens in Vietnam

By LAURA KOESTER
Collegian Staff

Putting a capacity crowd in the Student Union Ballroom last night into the mood of the Vietnam era with music from the '60s, Wallace Terry charged that, "it was black soldiers who had to carry the greatest burdens of all," in the Vietnam war.

Terry said this was not a result of using blacks as cannon fodder or a case of intentional genocide but, "a reflection of an unequal society where Uncle Sam was an equal opportunity employer."

Terry was a Time magazine correspondent who was stationed in Saigon from 1967-1969.

In the Vietnam War, 32 percent of all early casualties were black (15 percent overall) while they represented 11 percent of the U.S. population.

"The war was fought by minorities and working class whites. Fewer than 12 Ivy League graduates died (in the war)," Terry said.

Terry said the only positive result of the war was the friendship and closeness developed on the front lines between blacks and whites. "If we had listened to the vets when they came home, we could have moved this country forward a hundred years in human relations," he said.

While observing the relationship between white and black soldiers and the condition of black soldiers in general, Terry chronicled the emergence of the "bloods," which is also the title of his book.

The "bloods" were very influenced by both the civil rights and the black power movements and politicized themselves by reading the works of black leaders such as W.E.B. Dubois, Malcolm X, and Richard Wright.

"The bloods had a new awareness of brotherhood. When they saw confederacy flags or cross burnings they rebelled, held meetings, developed their own handshakes, and even their own flags. They refused to take slights and insults," Terry explained.

Wallace Terry, noted author, professor and journalist speaking on black soldier in the Vietnam War.

Terry said one "blood" noted that nobody called him a nigger when he was carrying a grenade launcher.

Terry emphasized that it was very important to the bloods to be cool, which included wearing black beads, armbands, and berets and even sunglasses into battle.

Terry said other soldiers handled the pressure and stress by drinking, smoking "funny cigarettes," playing cards, or overeating. "Drinking was a way to cope, but when many vets returned home, they discovered they had developed a real alcohol dependency," he added.

As a correspondent in Saigon, Terry observed many of the horrors and atrocities that comprised the Vietnam War, but this was supplemented by stories from the bloods, which caused him to wonder whether he had been in the same war.

"Soldiers were dropped out of planes as an example to their fellow prisoners. Children were turned into walking time bombs who exploded when you picked them up. I heard about a game called 'guts' in which an entire company had to line up and take a hunk of flesh out of a captured man to show what would happen if you let yourself get captured," Terry said.

Terry was born in New York and raised in Indianapolis, educated at Brown, Chicago, and Harvard Universities and ordained in the Disciples of Christ ministry. As a journalist, he covered much of the civil rights movement in the 1960s for the Washington Post and Time magazine. He is a professor at Howard University and an editor of U.S.A. Today.

Teachers must challenge students to do more, says educator

By KIMBERLY BURGE
Collegian Staff

Internationally known author, educator, and sociologist Paulo Freire talked about the general state of education to a packed audience in Thompson Hall at the University of Massachusetts.

His lecture focused on the tensions students and teachers face and the relationship between them.

When speaking about the tensions students and teachers face, Freire said, "there is the tension of silence and speech. The silence of the students and the speech of the teacher."

In order to deal with the tension, Freire said one "must experience tension in order to learn." He added teachers must be patient in their task, and regularly change the focus of their teaching. "If they don't, instead of improving their speech students don't apprehend, they eat."

Because students sometimes ask questions in a provocative way, teachers react angrily, therefore the student didn't understand the tension.

"It is up to the teacher to figure out why the student asked the question," he said.

"Never consider any question as a stupid question. All questions deserve to be answered." When one hears a question, you have to "receive it without expression in your face or gestures," Freire stated.

Internationally known Brazilian educator Paulo Freire speaking last night on education.

He feels the institution of education "Should create a pedagogy of questions, not a pedagogy of answers." Freire warned that people should "never think that their answer is the one, the only one."

"Teaching has to be something humble and very creative. Teachers have to challenge their students to do more than they have done," Freire said.

Education is a certain theory of knowledge that is put into practice. During his lecture, Freire stated that "education is a certain theory of knowledge that is put into practice and is a political act."

"Those who know are teachers, those who don't know are students. A teacher's job is to transfer knowledge to those who don't know," he said.

Freire strongly believes "All politicians are educators and all educators are politicians."

He related a story about a man who was clever and made a public speech in Brazil saying the education in that country was neutral while in other areas the education is political. "This is not true. Education everywhere is political."

Freire's name is synonimous with liberty and social justice. He is dedicated to the humanity of the oppressed people. He was beginning to devote his life to advancing the lives and the fortunes of the oppressed people through education when he was exiled from his native Brazil in 1964.

Queen Ida shows good time

THE QUEEN IDA BOMTEMPS ZYDECO BAND
Saturday, March 9th
At the Northampton Center for the Arts

By HEATHER LEVI

If you're reading this review, you probably didn't catch Queen Ida this time around. I think I was one of very few people under thirty in the audience which means that you probably weren't there, which is your loss! Now, you might have been busy, or not had the bucks, but it's also possible you just didn't know what Zydeco was to begin with.

Zydeco is basically black Cajun music from the bayou country in Louisiana. It's kind of a French-influenced cross between blues, rock'n'roll, and bluegrass. People who know Zydeco know two things which you probably don't: French, at least the twangy Cajun variety, is a fine language for rock'n'roll, and the accordion is a real instrument when put to good use.

Saturday night, Queen Ida, the Grammy award winning "Queen of Zydeco" brought her particular brand of this infectious music to the new Northampton Center for the Arts, where "Yankee s'ammuse comme bon Cajun" indeed. The first set seemed relatively subdued, but by the second set the band the crowd were well warmed up for some pretty serious good-times, and by 11:00 or so the joint was definitely jumping to that bilingual bayou beat, from the bouncier, more "typical" numbers like "Bonjour" to the frenchified cowboy ballad "C'est La Vie."

The Northampton Center for the Arts looks like it's going to be a pretty interesting place to hold concerts in the future. During intermissions, the audience can hang out in the carpeted shopping emporium downstairs. Since there's no smoking, dancing is less of the pulmonary challenge than usual, and when everybody's dancing, the floor moves, which makes things more adventurous than in the Blue Wall.

"The team knows me, who hits will play," Bergquist said. "We play a tough schedule and there's no time to fool around. We will be looking to get into the NCAA tournament."

To make that tourney, the Minutemen must win the Atlantic 10 playoffs or garner a tough-to-get at large bid.

UMass is in the Eastern Conference with Temple, St. Joseph's, Rhode Island and Rutgers. Temple is the favorite.

UMass, after ten games in Florida starting Saturday, plays Temple three games at home, hosts Connecticut and goes to St. Joseph's for three games the weekend after. By April 6, UM will be halfway through its league schedule and know what's going to happen.

"Those first few games will tell us a lot," Bergquist said. "But I think we'll come through pretty good. We have the ability to make some noise."

"With eight seniors, they should want to win pretty badly," Bergquist said. "I'm an optimist always, but I think that this year we could have an excellent team."

Strong season expected from UM baseball

Experienced team returning

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

"Looking at the talent we have and who we have returning, if we don't do well, it will be our own fault."

Sophomore lefthander Steve Allard, in that one sentence, summed up the thoughts of most of the University of Massachusetts baseball team.

After an 18-26 campaign last season, the Minutemen hope to be back in the Atlantic 10 Eastern Conference playoff hunt this year.

UMass returns six starters and three starting pitchers, including eight seniors that saw a lot of action. If anything, manager Dick Bergquist will have trouble juggling his talented team and keeping everybody happy.

"It's a good problem, having this much to work with," Bergquist, who is entering his 19th year as manager, said. "We have a lot of hitters returning, but as always the pitching is the key."

UMass hit .303 as a team last season, but the pitching staff had an earned run average of 6.56, the highest in Minuteman history.

Returning to the staff are three starters including senior righthander Jim Knoph (1-2, 5.85 ERA last season), junior righty Bob Kostro (4-4, 9.12) and Allard (0-2, 10.08).

All three suffered through their worst seasons a year ago, getting hammered during UM's trip to New Mexico during which the Minutemen went 4-9.

"I really think that people like Knoph and Kostro can get their acts together and come on for good seasons," Bergquist said. "They have a lot of starts in their time here and should be at the point where they can produce."

Allard came in with a lot of promise last season after a great high school career, but faltered early on and never regained his confidence.

"Steve seems to have a better attitude this season and I look for him to do well," Bergquist said.

The surprise of the staff may be freshman Steve Allen. A hard throwing righthander from New Hampshire, Allen was tabbed as an infielder after the fall season (he is a good hitter and fielder) but Bergquist sees him as a possible starter.

"Steve has the best arm on the team," the coach said. "He throws with a lot of speed and I'd like to bring him along slowly and develop him into a front line pitcher."

In relief, Bergquist has junior Matt Suboez (4-3, 4.30) in short relief, Jon Martin (1-0, 6.43) in middle relief and Jeff Jensen (0-2, 6.00). All are righthanders.

Other pitchers who may figure in Bergquist's plans are righthanders Tom Pia and Mick Wydra. Both spent last season on the junior varsity. Matt Sheran, now an outfielder, could also see action in short relief.

In the field, UMass will send out one of its best hitting teams in some time. Shortstop Angelo Salustri (.322, 29 RBIs, 5 home runs) is one of the best in the East. He scored a team high 37 runs and stole 15 bases.

First baseman Todd Comeau (.372, 32, 11) is one of college baseball's premier hitters. A football linebacker at 6-2, 210, Comeau has tremendous power and good speed (17 steals). He was all-New England last season and the team MVP.

Centerfielder Steve Messina (.328, 41, 5) set a school record in RBIs last season. He is a good outfielder and contributed six steals.

Catcher Todd Ezold (.302, 19, 0) was selected to try out for the U.S. Olympic team last year. He is a good defensive catcher with a good arm.

Second baseman Jack Bloise (.299, 13, 1) had a strong first half of the season before tailing off. He stole 17 bases and works the double play well with Salustri.

Leftfielder Bruce Kingman (.356, 13, 1) hit well for average last year and played himself into a starting spot this year.

Designated hitter Jeff Cimini (.240, 17, 3) also plays first base but with Comeau on institution in the field, the junior will be used primarily as a hitter.

At third base, sophomore Tom Fabian has the inside track. He hit .292 as a freshman with 12 RBIs and a homer. Allen and junior Doug Wright will also challenge. Rightfield is another battle with Sheran currently the favorite but junior Tony Szklany (.270, 12, 2) also a factor and sophomore Jay Zerner, who led the junior varsity from the plate, impressive during the fall games.

Others who will compete for time are catchers Dan Clifford and Sean Flint (who hit .533 in limited at bats.), freshman Darrin O'Connor (infield), and freshman pitcher Brett Valenti.

Minutemen gymnasts take fifth place in Easterns

By KATHLEEN HANNAN
Collegian Correspondent

The Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Championships this weekend at Springfield College finalized the season for the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team, who tied Army for fifth place of eight teams.

In rotation style the meet began on vaulting for UMass where a conglomeration of difficult tricks racked up an impressive total of 45.1 points. Phil Gorgone placed first for UMass with a handspring front tuck earing a 9.25. However, the score wasn't high enough to qualify for the finals, where he would have needed a 9.3.

University of Massachusetts junior Joe DeMarco, seen here on the still rings, placed second on the team in all-around competition at the Eastern Regionals.

Ken Dougherty started off on the parallel bars with an 8.65, but a good routine with an underrotated dismount by Eric Ciccone began a "judges-rut" to grant sevens and mid-eights for the following routines--routines which were expected to score high eights to low nines. Peter Lucchini (predicted to achieve a 9.0) received an 8.85, not quite high enough to qualify for the finals where he would have needed an 8.95.

The rotation then went to high bar where Tony Sbarra "swung pipe" to capture a 9.4, showing off his double lay-out flyaway dismount easing his way into the finals.

On floor exercise, with four tumbling passes and a 9.45 junior all-arounder Joe DeMarco tumbled his way into the finals as well. Lucchini and Gorgone also performed well in the event earing a 9.2 and 9.0 respectively. However, teams such as East Stroudsburg and Temple controlled the qualifying scores for admittance to the finals, scoring high nines.

With a 9.2, Dougherty took the Minutemen into the pommel horse finals as Coach Johnson expected. DeMarco, Ciccone, Roberto Weil, and specialist Steve Baia all aided in receiving a 41 point total.

Weil took first for UMass on the still rings earning a 9.0, but he still remained nearly half a point behind the qualifying score for the finals.

In the all-around for UMass were Weil with 53.35, DeMarco with a 52.0, and Dougherty with a 51.45. Ciccone began in the all-around, but two consecutive head injuries on the parallel bars and high bar influenced his performance and he chose to scratch his remaining events.

The finals Saturday began with DeMarco on floor exercise earning a 8.95. A half point was deducted for a slight under rotation from a double back tuck, causing a minor nose and mouth injury. His average then became a 9.2, and he cleared tenth place.

"My first pass was a double back pike, and my last was a double back tuck, so I knew I didn't need as much energy for my last run. I made sure I didn't overrotate, which I obviously didn't," said DeMarco.

Dougherty had it tough in the pommel horse finals, earning an 8.35. Combined with his previous 9.2, his average came to be an 8.77, capturing tenth place.

Sbarra swung flawlessly throughout his set on high bar. The judges seemed to pull deductions from out of the air, awarding Sbarra with a 9.25. "I can't understand how the judges came up with a 9.25, and unlike women's gymnastics you cannot dispute scores in men's gymnastics," said Johnson. Sbarra, combined with his previous score of a 9.4, received a 9.33 average and sixth place.

Women's status to see advances

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

A commitment to comparable worth and an $18 million provision to upgrade child care facilities are the two major efforts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis will be making this year to improve the economic status of women in Massachusetts, his advisor on women's issues said last night.

Joan Quinlan, who spoke to the undergraduate senate, said these two measures are necessary because, "the economic condition of women has worsened over the last 10 years."

One indication of this is that "we are not doing as well in wages as we were ten years ago," she said, noting that today women earn $.59-$.63 for every $1.00 earned by a man, while in the 70s they earned $.64.

Quinlan attributed women's low wages to a job market in which women can only find jobs in traditionally female occupations.

"Occupational segregation is a big problem," she said, noting that 80 percent of women are in low paying, traditionally female positions such as nursing and teaching.

She said that the law that demands equal pay for equal work is irrelevant in the face of occupational segregation because women rarely have men who work in identical jobs to compare themselves to.

On the other hand "comparable worth asks that if a job is comparable in skill, effort and responsibility it be paid equally," she said, stressing that although "the concept is revolutionary it is critical in improving the status of women."

She said that Dukakis is "making an effort to become a model employer" by offering the state unions the chance to bargain on the issue of comparable worth now, even though their contracts are not up for negotiation until 1986.

Joan Quinlan, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' advisor on women's issues.

Quinlan said that another indication of women's deteriorating economic status is the fact that "more women are poor than ever before in history."

This she attributed to the changing nature of the family, which has led to a large increase in the number of female heads of households.

Such women are aided in to poverty by the cost of day care for their children and "day care is right now a key piece of economic development," Quinlan said.

Senate elects new speaker and treasurer

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

The undergraduate Student Senate last night elected John Ruddock as Speaker and Diane Rossi as Treasurer and confirmed the results of the student government elections.

In the speaker race, Ruddock received 45 votes, Jay Flynn, 37, and Dennis Martin, 3. The senate debated over and questioned the candidates for more than one hour.

"To quote Dan Burgess,'I'm like so very psyched,'" Ruddock said after the election. "I think the SGA (Student Government Association) is a psyched place." Ruddock said the main theme of his term as speaker will be unity in the senate.

"Forget everything else, the main thing is unity," he said.

Rossi, who worked in the office of former treasurer John Mooradian, was elected in about five minutes at the end of the meeting. Rossi ran unopposed and was elected unanimously.

"I realize there is a severe financial crisis facing the SGA and I am dedicated to work on that crisis," Rossi said in her acceptance speech.

In other action, the senate accepted the results of the SGA presidential and senatorial elections. The senate also accepted the result of the referendum question which asked students if they approved a motion to establish a $50,000 spring concert fund.

Dukakis crime bill opposed on issues of women's equity

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

When Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' tough "presumptive sentencing" bill passed the Massachusetts House by a vote of 122-18 last year, final approval by the Senate seemed assured.

Yet the Senate failed to act on the legislation, reacting to strong opposition to such issues as the effect of the bill on already crowded prison conditions, and its rejection of the importance of rehabilitation, as well as its impact on women and minorities.

The bill, which Dukakis refiled earlier this year, would set narrow ranges of sentences for judges to apply to persons convicted of violent crimes, would introduce the notion that degree of injury rather than intent should govern sentencing, would lengthen prison sentences and reduce eligibility for parole.

A number of women activists have been critical of the bill and see its implementation as having an adverse effect on the number of women prisoners and the length of their sentences.

Sen. Jack H. Backman (D-Brookline), testifying against the bill at a hearing before the committee on Criminal Justice last month, estimated that the number and length of female inmates' sentences would triple under the new legislation.

Those opposed to the bill say that becaue the bill shifts emphasis from the traditional focus on criminal intent to actual harm suffered by the victim, women acting in self-defense may be unfairly and severely punished.

Karen Hudner, lobbyist with the Mass. Civil Liberties Union explained its this way:

"If I push a man away because he is stealing my pocketbook and he falls over, hits his head and dies then I am guilty of murder and will be punished for that."

Betsy Dunn, who represented the National Organization of Women (NOW) at the hearing, agreed and said the legislation is a "classic example of public policy which is drafted with the male norm as its model, with little or no thought given to the impact on women who are objects of male violence."

"A woman convicted for defending herself against rape or domestic violence would receive a sentence, the severity of which would be proportionately related to her success in physically defending herself," Dunn said.

Also testifying against the bill was Rep. Saundra Graham (D-Cambridge), chairwoman of the Legislative Black Caucus, who voiced her fear that minorities would be the main recipients of tougher sentences.

Graham said the bill affects only crimes against people, and therefore deals with crimes for which people of color are arrested and tried in the greatest disproportion to their numbers. She commented that the bill did nothing about "white collar crime," referring to crimes committed by "white men of means" such as embezzlement and fraud.

"Judges can still give blacks and hispanics longer sentences, even within the presumptive ranges," Graham said, adding "Where were people of color on the commission that drew up the bill? So far we have not had the participation to know if

Panel denounces CIA actions cites torture, phone tapping

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

According to the four panelists at last night's discussion of CIA involvement in covert foreign and domestic policy, the nation's largest intelligence force consists of torturers, liars, phone tappers and assassins—all financed in great part by the U.S. government.

The 200-strong audience in the Student Union's Commonwealth Room listened with intense silence as panelist after panelist listed various illegal operations the CIA has allegedly been involved with since its inception.

"The CIA has never been a central intelligence agency with honorable intentions," said former CIA agent and author Ralph McGeehee. "After I quit, my phone was tapped, they followed me while I went jogging...In one instance a moderator tapping my phone broke into the line and argued with me."

The discussion occurred as a response to and a show of support for two area activists recently arrested for questioning the presence of the CIA in campus recruitment drives. Perry Amsellem, a senior legal studies major, and Lisa Sheehy, a University of Massachusetts graduate and Amherst resident, were arrested Nov. 5 after they occupied an office where CIA interviews were being held. Both are to be tried today in Northampton District Court.

The panelists included McGeehee; Joy Hackel, author and researcher who has written a book on CIA covert operations; Richard Falk, an international law scholar; and Louis Wolf, editor of Covert Action Information Bulletin magazine.

Wolf, a journalist who broke the Vietnam Mai Lai massacre story, said, "I can give you hundreds of examples of torture. I know of one Contra officer who wore a belt fashioned out of human ears. These people are not freedom fighters. They're villians. And the worst part is that we're financing them."

Hackel listed such U.S. violations of international agreements as violation of air space, and the distribution of U.S. written and published "killing manuals." "We are hiring out professional animals to carry out specific, selected objectives like the assassination of officials and the rigging of elections..."

All panelists, who will testify in favor of Sheehy and Amsellem, were received warmly.

Ice cream shop may replace Union Records next semester

By VICKI A. SPAGNOLI
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors will vote after spring break on proposals which include a possible ice cream shop to fill the defunct Union Records Unlimited in the Student Union.

BOG chairwoman Jane Donohue said the board will postpone voting at today's meeting because not enough members will be present to vote on the proposals. A majority of the 32 member board will be leaving early for spring break, she said.

The Campus Center Administration submitted a proposal for an ice cream shop that would be financed by the Food Services. According to Campus Center Director William Harris, the ice cream shop would be run by students and food service staff, and would not open until next fall.

The record store space, which has been Vacant since last fall, is considered student-controlled space, Donohue said. She said the Campus Center Administration's proposal would transfer the control of the URU space from the students to the administration.

"The URU space is student space and should continue to be a student-controlled space," Donohue said. "I would assume that individuals of the board will respect the fact that it's student space."

Student space includes any office space in the Campus Center/Student Union complex, Donohue said. The student offices on the fourth floor of the Student Union are considered student space, as are the Collegian office and WMUA in the basement.

A second ice cream shop proposal was submitted by two students, BOG Food Services Coordinator Ginger LaVoi, and BOG member Bob Cohen. Their shop would be financed by the Hood Corporation, and by a proposed loan through Student Government Association funds.

The second ice cream proposal is not a BOG proposal, according to Donohue, although Cohen is a voting member of the BOG. "Space allocation is a democratic process, and every proposal gets reviewed," Donohue said.

Two other proposals were submitted by members of student-run businesses on the third floor of the Student Union. The sports cooperative, Teamworks, and the bicycle cooperative are all interested in moving into the URU space.

New SCERA position filled

Action spurred by rally

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Correspondent

Some people may have forgotten the gay rights rally last December but Ellen Olmstead remembers it and says it is one of the reasons she has her job.

Olmstead works as the gay and lesbian awareness educator for the Student Center for Educational Research Advocacy, a position that came about only after members of the People's Gay Alliance held the rally outside the Whitmore Administration Building last December.

Originally, The Undergraduate Student Senate voted to deny funding for such a position in October because they did not have money available.

After the rally, the Administration agreed to fund the position for the first year if the SGA would provide funding after that, Olmstead said.

Olmstead said her job provides educational service for people who have questions or problems about heterosexism and homophobia.

"Heterosexism is the assumption that everyone is or ought to be heterosexual, that heterosexuality is superior to all other forms," she said. "Homophobia is not only the fear of lesbians and gay men, but also latent fears of lesbian or gay feelings inside yourself."

Ellen Olmstead

Part of the job also offers information to students, faculty and staff that will help eliminate some of the fear and misconceptions about gay, lesbian, and bisexual people on campus.

"Most people have myths about lesbians, bisexuals, and gay men. They haven't been forced to experience reality, that some of their peers on campus are (homosexual)," she said. "Gay students do not want to change the lifestyles of heterosexual students. They are not posing a threat as is perceived by some people," she said.

According to SCERA director Debbie Pilteh, "Ellen is a very qualified person. We wouldn't have hired her if she wasn't. She has a lot to offer to university students and the community at large."

Stock market to boom says analyst

By JOHN BEAN
Collegian Correspondent

The stock market will have one of its best periods in history in the coming year, according to Bernard Doherty, senior vice president of Mosely, Inc. of Boston, who spoke to about 30 members of the investment club last night.

Doherty, who graduated with a Bachelor's degree in marketing in 1959 and a Master's degree in Economics at the University of Massachusetts, told members of the group what to look for in the future of the stock market and how to best invest their money while in school.

"Start out by investing in secure companies, make some money, then you can start taking some chances," Doherty said.

"To make money in the stock market," he said, "buy a small, quality company at a low price. Then you have to wait for other people to notice it. It takes patience."

Doherty said he feels that the stock market will have one of its best periods in history in the coming year. He pointed to railroads, oil companies, and telephone companies as the best areas to invest.

"There have been big discoveries of oil in California and Texas," he said. "This will result in lower prices for oil products but the investment will be sound. "Also, railroad companies have been improving their service and are starting to regain some of what they lost to the trucking industry," he said.

Doherty said that the field of robotics will be one of the fastest growing areas in the near future.

"To make money in the stock market, buy a small, quality company at a low price. Then you have to wait for other people to notice it. It takes patience."
—Bernard Doherty, senior vice president of Mosely, Inc.

"The U.S. has been slow to accept the idea of robots," he said, "but I think it will take off in about two years. The Japanese are already using robots and it will take a while for us to catch up to them."

Doherty was an alternate on the 1960 Olympic Boxing Team on which Cassius Clay won a Gold Medal. He was the all service boxing champion while in the Army in 1960.

Results of the Board of Governors Residential Committee and the State Student Association of Massachusetts referenda will be disclosed after Spring Break.

★ SGA

The concert referendum passed 3,024 to 720, Governmental Affairs Chairman John Crowley said. It was not known whether 15 percent of the undergraduate student body voted on the referendum, which would make it binding.

Crowley also released the final official figures of the presidential election. The results reported in yesterday's Collegian were not official, because all the ballots had not been officially counted.

Stacy Roth and Dan Burgess won the election with 2,077 votes to 1,381 votes for Kim Hackett and Mike Cerrato and 117 votes for Teresa Sbardella and Patrick Keohan. The total voter turnout was 3,575.

In the 1984 presidential election, about 3500 students voted; in 1983, 4,838 voted and in 1982, 4162 voted.

Crowley said the election results of the Campus Center Board of Governors and campus Residential Committee will not be released until after Spring Break.

The results of the referendum, which asked students if they favor funding the State Student Association of Massachusetts, may be released today, Crowley said. Complications arose over the actual counting of the ballots, he said, because SSAM members had said they would help count them, and haven't yet.

"I have to prioritize which ballots I count first," Crowley said. The SSAM ballots were scheduled to be counted after presidential and other SGA elections, he said.

Martha Porter, campus treasurer of SSAM, said the association agreed to help count the ballots because they wanted students to know the results of the referendum before Spring Break.

Faculty Senate meeting canceled

Today's Faculty Senate meeting has been canceled because the agenda for it, "would have been so slight," Senate Sec. Robert Jones said yesterday.

Jones said the meeting was canceled because there was not enough prepared business ready. When questioned whether there were not other topics to discuss, Jones replied, "we have meetings on motions, not campus issues."

"The Collegian may think that canceling the meeting is a conspiracy on the part of the senate to suppress the (Yvette) Henry report," Jones said, "but it really is not an uncommon move."

Jones said the decision to cancel the meeting was made by the chairman of the Rules Committee, David Booth, and himself. He said no meetings were canceled last semester because "general education kept us tied up."

Most of the senate meetings last semester were devoted to debate on the general education requirements which will replace the current system of core requirements in 1986.

Last week the Rules Committee met with the Committee on the Status of Minorities and agreed the report on Yvette Henry "be presented shortly to the senate."

this is a good bill."

Another major concern expressed by critics of the bill is the impact it would have on the over-crowded prison population in Massachusetts.

Sen. Backman said he strongly opposed the legislation which "will add 3,000 to 5,000 inmates to an already overcrowded system."

"The public has the right to have the present system rectified," said Backman, adding "the proposed legislation does not improve the prison structure, but exacerbates the conditions."

According to figures presented at the hearing on February 28, there are currently 8,500 prisoners in a system designed to hold 5,800. In addition, state prisons are operating at 160 percent of capacity, county jails at 140 percent of capacity and eight of the twelve county jails are under federal court order because of overcrowding.

In an attempt to reduce uncertainty about the bill's impact on overcrowding, Dukakis announced at the hearing that later this month he will file a special legislative message containing a "prison plan" to reduce overcrowding.

Opponents remain skeptical, however, noting that their concern lies not only with overcrowding, but also with the bill's heavy emphasis on punishment rather than rehabilitation.

Backman testified that the bill would "waste tax dollars on a prison system so lawless and brutal that prisoners would return to our streets less likely to function safely and productively than before they went in."

Warhol wizardry on display

Ten Jews of the Twentieth Century
Silkscreens by Andy Warhol
Herter Gallery
Until Friday, March 15

By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL
Collegian Staff

Andy Warhol, at 55, is at the height of his creative power. Known to the general public for such popular serial imagery as his Campbell Soup Cans, Warhol's fascination qua imfatuation for prominent figures of the twentieth century, whom he refers to as "stars," has prompted some of his greated works, from Marilyn to Mao. The current exhibit at Herter Gallery is no exception.

And yet "Ten Jews of the Twentieth Century" is exceptional! Warhol's use of color to interpret exceeds even his beautiful "Endangered Species" series of recent years, and his subject matter is just as delicate. Some people may be put off by the grouping of these extraordinary individuals on the basis of their being Jews. However, I think that would be to misunderstand their creator's intentions. These ten portraits are more than portraits, they are tributes, a reminder of the immeasurable contributions and achievements of the Jewish imagination and conscience in this their most difficult century.

Beyond the commemoration of their subjects, these photo silkscreens reveal Warhol's emotional responses, perhaps even debt, to each of his subjects. As a poet I found myself entralled by these sensitive renditions: none of Warhol's prior works that I have seen, works which have generally excited me, have so moved me. If I may indulge the reader, I would like to describe my impressions to "Ten Jews."

Sarah Bernhardt has an almost angelic expression which is substantiated by the colors: warm pink, red, and violets tumble into an abstract, cool blue field. She is a fountain of artistic inspiration in a pool of innocence. Bernhardt's prominent position as the first person in the series is no accident by Warhol.

Louis Brandeis is not only conveyed in human fleshtones, but, his peach-cheeked face highlighted by red drawn over the photographic details of its features, conveys him passionately humane. The dark frame around him could stand for the darkness of the world he so singularly confronted and attempted to illuminate. His blue crown is deserved, the torch of his courage, his intellect.

Martin Buber gazes out at "thou" from under his blue-green brow with all the philosophical depth of a deep wellspring of mystic wisdom, which he was.

The simple sketching of Albert Einstein is with the least presence of photographic detail. The rich array of grays, eight in all, suggests the infinite range of grays between black and white. One eye reflects the observable universe, the other looks beyond.

The seductive Sigmund Freud is unusually soft and sensual. The right side of the face is multi-colored as was Freud's multifaceted personality; the left side is a juxtaposition of light and dark, not unlike the juxtaposition of Eros and Thanatos, or the Ego and the Id.

The drawing of George Gershwin also juxtaposes elements against one another, but in a distinctly different manner than the tone-deaf Freud. Appropriately, the colors are arranged musically with scribbled melodies at the back of Gershwin's head playing over the harmony and balance of the underlying color themes.

Warhol's Gertrude Stein is more Picasso that Picasso's Stein. The overlapping red (rose?) triangles beneath the massive brooding head for all its bare essentials of line, is suggestive of so much more than what is stated, not by association, but by being bare and essential.

Franz Kafka's luminescent visage looks calmly out of the dark mystery of life, undisturbed by the slashes of blue and yellow. The gold drawing of his eyes makes them penetrating, yet his overall countenance is pensive, not anxious.

A kindly Golda Meir looks ever forward to a brighter future in the empty, unanswering expanse of yellow in front of her. What she sees gives her faith: hers is a portrait of hope.

And lastly, the Marx Bros.—Chico, Groucho, and Harpo— in triplicate, I suppose to demonstrate their intensity, their vitality, and their creativity as they literally leap across the stage of Warhol's museum board.

So there they are, Warhol's "Ten Jews of the Twentieth Century" and even though I count twelve, they are wonderful. I walked into the gallery for a quick look and stayed for more than an hour. As unsighly a distraction as the shopping bags are to their exhibition, I couldn't help from raving about the show.

Lesley Ann Warren stars in Choose Me, a highly-acclaimed drama, premiering today at the Pleasant St. Theater.

Acoustic guitarist Al Di Meola will perform at 8 p.m. on Thursday, March 28 in the Student Union Ballroom. Tickets are at sale at the FAC Box Office.

Letters to the Editor—

SAFA trip a success for all

Last week, SAFA (Students Advocating Financial Assistance) went to Washington, D.C. to encourage members of Congress to support financial aid programs and mass transit funding. We believe it was a worthwhile and successful project.

The support of the entire University community was essential to our efforts. Funds provided by area governments, the undergraduate and graduate student senates, and the administration were greatly appreciated by our organization, as were the more than 5800 signatures to a petition we gave to House Speaker Tip O'Neill.

In addition, I would like to thank Michelle Hyde and Joel Coffidis for the professional manner in which they covered our trip for the Collegian.

The task of obtaining sufficient funds for financial aid is not over. You can help by writing to your Congressman and Senators, or visiting their district offices during spring vacation.

Explain the policy change

Last Tuesday, we went to the Blue Wall for Killer Comedy Night. We have gone every Tuesday night all semester and most of last. While only 18, we have never had any problems getting in.

Much to our surprise, when we did get there we were not allowed in. In an unannounced reversal of their policy the Blue Wall was no longer allowing in people between the ages of 18 and 20. Only people over the age of 20 were being let in.

Up to this time people under 20 could enter the bar. They were restricted to a special area where no alcohol was allowed. We didn't mind this since we were there for the entertainment, not the alcohol.

We would like the Blue Wall to discontinue this policy of only allowing people over the age of 20 in for Killer Comedy Night. If this policy is not going to be changed back to the way it was we would like the management of the Blue Wall to publicize why there was a change in the original policy of allowing 18-year-old people in.

Stop blaming the victim

In response to Judy Harkins' letter in Thursday's Collegian concerning the Goldberg column, "Where have all the people gone?". I'm glad you have all the solutions to this problem. However, I have a few comments I would like to add on the issue.

For one, your suggestion that Goldberg leave the bar (that she freely chose to go to) upon being harassed highly conflicts with my belief of the basic freedom of choice. The places one chooses to go to reflects his/her personal preference. No one should be forced to forfeit this right because some loser decides to harass them.

Secondly, as to your suggestion of ignoring and/or moving away from the bully—this is precisely what Goldberg did, only to be further harassed later in the evening. Some bullies, Harkins, are goaded further when they do not get the reaction they were hoping for and will usually persist until they get it.

I agree, however, with your view that a bouncer or bartender should have been notified. Unfortunately, in upsetting situations such as these, the most obvious solutions are not among the first to come to mind. (Although I do remember Goldberg stating that a bouncer(s) saw the mishap and nothing was done to stop the harassment.)

I can and will stand behind all of my arguments. I have been both verbally and physically harassed before (for no apparent reason) and can testify to the fact that it can be an upsetting and embarrassing situation. As a 5-10 female who has been disquieted by something like this, I can just imagine how someone who is 5-3 must have felt. In this way, I can identify with Goldberg.

I cannot, however, identify with you, Harkins. Unlike yourself, I will not conclude with any "perfect" solution, (as each situation differs indeterminably), but I will offer you this: If you are willing to give up your right of free choice and satisfy some loser while you're at it —go right ahead. But please don't criticize others (who choose to stand up for this right) by blaming the victim.

Was it a dream or reality?

The strangest thing happened to me the other day. So strange I am compelled to tell people about it. It all began as I started to lather up for my morning shave. No sooner had I finished applying a popular gel-type shaving cream to my face than figures started appearing in the maze-like layers of foam. Figures of women, some scantily clad, others totally nude. As I opened my mouth in amazement I was met by another bizarre surprise. A miniature replica of myself began surfing off my tongue and down the pipeline of foam protruding from my chin, bumping the disposable razor out of my hand as he swept by. Scared and with lightning reflexes I pushed my entire head under the running faucet thereby rinsing all this madness away. "Take that," I said to myself quietly as I removed my sopping Bruins cap. Could this have been a dream I thought? Saying yes, I reassured myself. But perhaps it is now time to sport a beard.

Suppressing diversity here

The denial of tenure for family researcher, theorist, and sexologist Dr. Roger Libby is a harsh example of the administration and certain faculty wishes to suppress diversity of thought within the University. The administration and faculty offer no explanation for their actions. One must assume the reason behind such actions is the subject matter and expertise of Libby. The course topics include homosexuality, bisexuality, problems with monogamy, and the role of alternative lifestyles within our society. Our society puts sex-related problems on the back burner rather than dealing with them openly. The administration and faculty are therefore upholding the tradition of ignorance that keeps the larger part of American society in the sexual dark ages. Additionally, judging from the overall satisfaction among Libby's students, I'm certain that if student evaluations were criteria for tenure, the University would not be so critically hampered by the narrow-minded concerns of a few faculty and administration.

Heading for a catastrophe

Sal Assad

I would like to challenge some of the premises upon which the current consensus inside the liberal press is founded, concerning the tragic issue of Central America.

Whether these premises stem from collective historical amnesia, ideological misunderstandings, or malicious distortions does not concern us here. Nevertheless, the potential consequences and outcomes of such perceptions could be considerable, lest we forget the impact these perceptions could exert upon the policy making process in the highest levels. An example:

The Globe editorial on President Reagan's Central America policy ("Ducking the World Court," Jan. 25) which is certainly to be applauded for its timely indictment of the illegal nature of the actions taken by the Reagan administration against Nicaragua. However, in this editorial, the legitimacy of a government responsible for the murder of 50,000 civilians in El Salvador (as acknowledged by our own ex-ambassador in San Salvador, Robert White), a legitimacy not recognized by any of our NATO allies except Kohl and Thatcher, is not even questioned.

Are we to forget that most of our own allies have not recognized the legality of Duarte's elections? Since when has it become legal to hold elections during civil wars? If we agree that Nicaragua does not pose any serious threat to any of its neighbors (as the authors of the mentioned editorial frankly recognize), then what is the point of supplying military aid to Costa Rica (a country without armed forces) or to Honduras. If it is legitimate and justifiable to supply military aid to the right-wing regime of El Salvador simply because that aid had been "requested," then on what grounds would we oppose the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Had not that regime "requested" the aid, too?

To any neutral bystander it must be clear by now that the violent nature of the Salvadorean conflict if anything has become more bloody, that the influence of "pathological killers" (to use Robert White's expression) has anything but decreased.

To anyone concerned with human rights rather than blinded by the cynical considerations of "geo-politics," it should be evident that the only major difference between the Nicaraguan contras and the Salvadorean army is that one holds the state power and the other one does not.

It is not extremism to assert that the Salvadorean regime is paralyzed by an all powerful army confident of strong support from the White House in most of its engagements, regardless of how barbaric it acts.

Moreover, the current negotiations will lead to nowhere unless the Salvadorean rulers are persuaded that no more aid will be given to them by the U.S. without:

- an unconditional and immediate cease-fire for an indefinite period, without the disarming of the belligerent factions.
- an immediate halt to all activities by the right-wing death squads.
- a freeing of all political prisoners and guerrillas by the Salvadorean army, and all the POWs who are in the rebel hands.

Without these steps, I am afraid, we are heading toward a catastrophe, potentially more dangerous than in Vietnam.

Gorbachev: Time will tell

Anne McCrory

I wish I could view Mikhail Gorbachev's appointment as general secretary of the Soviet Communist Party with the shining optimism that some people seem to.

While it is true that Gorbachev's relative youth, amiability with the Western press and reform-minded ambitions (as evidenced by his close association with Yuri Andropov who, as the 15-year chief of the KGB, began a leadership full of initiative but died after 15 months in power) promise to bring new life to the Soviet leadership, these assets cannot go unscrutinized.

Gorbachev, it must be remembered, is a politician, and his cooperation with the press is to his advantage; what remains to be seen is the level at which that cooperation persists now that he is at the top. And we'll have to see how his vibrant personality, which is, of course, welcome, will affect his stance at the bargaining table, where hardline Soviet policy could easily prevail. His age, too, is a definite asset in that it represents a change from the "old guard" to a new generation that did not even serve in World War II; it's also likely he will be around long enough to see his policies implemented, a plus for stability. But one must take into account that only a man devoted to the party—the policies of its past leaders as well as its ideology—could rise to power as quickly as he; his youth, therefore, is not necessarily indicative of more liberal policies, as some people seem to be hoping. And while Gorbachev is now at the helm of the party, one must remember that the composition of the Politburo itself, over which he rules, remains unchanged. A member of that body only since 1980, Gorbachev will need time to develop his power base before he becomes its unequivocal leader.

In addition, Gorbachev is now but the head of the Communist Party, one of the two top institutions that form the government of the Soviet Union. He has not (yet) been elected to head the state apparatus itself (the Supreme Soviet) and while it is likely this appointment will come with time, it is possible that another will be chosen to head the state, resulting in a ruling duo or triumvirate. (Yesterday's New York Times speculated that Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko might have a shot at it.) The party, and thus Gorbachev, to be sure greatly influence the government, but it cannot be assumed that this man alone will rule the Soviet Union.

Yes, Gorbachev is young and amiable, a definite change from Chernenko. But to view his assets as we do those of Western politicians can be deceiving; we are talking about the Soviet Union here, where a leader's charisma has little to do with his competence or policies. I too am optimistic about Gorbachev as a sign of change and stability in the Soviet leadership, but not without reservations. (Stalin, too, became party chief in his 50s, and we all know the kind of "change" he brought.) Only time will tell.

Different name, same man

Rita Murphy

Okay, quiz time.

How many of you voted in the Student Government Association election Monday and Tuesday?

Not many of you have your hands up, but that's okay, Roth and Burgess are going to stretch out their arms and by this time next year all of you will be voting.

Okay, back to the quiz. How many of you who voted in the election, voted for Patrick Keohan just because you like Hot Tomales? Don't be ashamed, lots of people like Hot Tomales; they are real good, and voting for a man who admits he has stolen food a couple of times is no big deal. Hey, when I was seven I stole a piece of bazooka from the store up the street.

Now, here's a tough question. How many of you voted for a man named Paul Kaz? Okay, he won so some of you voted for him. Now, for those who did, how many of you wouldn't have voted for him if you knew his real name was Paul Kasman? Yup, that's right, they are one and the same. Only Paul Kaz was probably a ploy by Paul Kasman to get elected without people really knowing who his is.

You see there's a funny little story about Paul Kasman—the real one, that is. Now think for a moment. Why does his name sound familiar? Well, remember the Ferraro rally last semester? Paul Kasman is the man whom a woman spit on. Paul Kasman is also the same man who told that same woman she should be screwed against a wall, and that she would probably love it.

Paul Kasman is also the same man who came by the Collegian one day and almost started a mini riot, because he wanted to clarify what he had said. You see, he said, the woman shouldn't be raped, she just needed to be screwed up against a wall; she just needed sex because, as he put it, "girls who are that uptight need to have some real good sex."

On a personal note, Paul Kasman is the same man over whose head I poured a medium coke in the back of the Hatch last month because he said he really wanted to get it on in bed with me.

Paul Kasman is now a SGA senator. Of course, everyone who voted for him really voted for Paul Kaz, who doesn't exist. If it all seems a little weird, it is, but it is also typical of how things are run in the SGA. So very typical.

Criticism 'missed the point' of debate

Last Thursday I had the singularly stimulating experience of finding myself condemned by name in the pages of the Collegian. My first thought was to thank Michael Sophinos for providing me with this long awaited milestone in my political career. I then decided that I owed this gentleman (and the impartial students of UMass) a response to his flatteringly absurd charges.

That Sophinos came to Monday's (March 4) debate already biased is quite obvious. He offers nothing but praise for WMLASC calling them "rational" and "more genuinely informed and prepared." He apparently was not in the least perturbed by any of the outrageous remarks made by the left-wing panelists. They suggested, for example, that Jews should feel sympathy, even solidarity, with Palestinian terrorists such as Yasser Arafat who are responsible for the butchering of Israeli women and children. Also, they called me "racist" for citing the almost universally accepted concept that the predominant factor in international relations around the world today is the bi-polar struggle between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R.

Having viewed WMLASC through rose-tinted glasses, Sophinos went on to criticize me for my statements on the Contadora peace proposals. He accused me of "selective ignorance" and implied that I had said that the Contadora Proposal had no mechanisms for enforcement. Sophinos, a man whose ignorance is obviously not selective, missed the point.

For the record: I said that the Contadora Proposal did not provide enforcement for its provisions regarding fair elections and human rights. It would definitely have forced the U.S. to stop aiding our allies in the region, leaving Nicaragua with its grotesquely oversized army free to terrorize, dominate and even invade its neighbors.

Duo is dynamite

By JASON TALERMAN
Collegian Staff

There are many who will argue that Bruce Lee is the all time great among kung fu screen idols. Not me; I was born too late to fully appreciate Bruce Lee's ubiquitous talents. To me the words 'Chuck Norris' have always been synonymous with 'kung fu'.

I saw such Chuck Norris classics as the Octagon and Lone Wolf McQuade for the fighting. Missmg in Action II simply did not have enough fight action. Call me a fascist if you want, but I enjoy watching Chuck Norris kick some mighty ass a hell of a lot more than watching him try to act while dragging his buddies out of a Vietnam work camp.

Kung Fu movies have just become more complicated than their feeble budgets can allow. Who needs to see a mirror of society when you're all primed to see some super human freak kick someone's teeth out. Moreover while trying to state its message the film becomes horribly stereotypical.

Due to probable budgetary problems more than one common movie stereotype were placed on some of the characters. A smart mouthed, inner city Italian baseball fan domesticates a rooster who plays a proxy, and later a martyr, for the son that he has never seen. In addition the same character plays a Christ figure...the most versatile performance since Donald Sutherland donned the robes in Johnny Get Your Gun...

Where's the kung fu? Over an hour and a half of film goes by before Norris puts more than two kicks together. Instead, Missing in Action II is, essentially, a propaganda film, coinciding with America's "new and strong" image. The expression of U.S. supremacy is not a traditional practice of the basic martial arts movie. Nonetheless Missing in Action II stumbles through its patriotic duties as aptly as a grade B "We want more violence!" movie can. Ronald Reagan even makes a cameo appearance via the wonders of the always heart touching documentary film clip.

Col. Braddock hangs up his shackles and the bloody trail of vengeance begins. He takes back stolen American weapons, conceals bombs in American flags, and flies away in an American helicopter.

Guts and glory are fine but where's the kung fu? We finally get quality kung fun, and plenty of it, in the film's sequence, but with a new twist. As Norris squared off against his arch enemy, I expected him to see a fairly even and seemingly endless fight, with Norris just barely scraping his way to victory. Instead Norris blocks everything that his foe can muster up. Norris does more than roll to an easy victory, he completely destroys and embarasses his opponent, yet another example of the expression of U.S. supremacy.

You might be surprised that I haven't disregarded Missing in Action II as a complete piece of trash. I could go on arguing that kung fu movies have their place in the cinematic experience...but I won't. This movie was bad. When I go to see a kung fu movie all I want to see is kung fu. I can put up with bad acting but Missing in Action II had embarassingly bad stereotypes, a bad theme, and bad action, or lack thereof. That's a lot of badness.

Violent veterans

By TOM VINCENT
Collegian Correspondent

Many folks link Hall and Oates brand of music to that of mindless pop, but Sunday's performance proved that the duo can blend professional craftsmanship with their long string of hits.

During their hour and a half show the two front men gave plenty of room for their band to exercise their musical talents. At one point in the show both Hall and Oates left the stage, and bassist Tom (T-Bone) Wolk took over the microphone to do a series of humorous raps. Drummer Mickey Curry, and lead guitar player G.E. Smith also got into the action, but the highlight of these solos took place when Charlie DeChant took the stage and did a sax solo that would have raised a couple of Clarence Clemons' eyebrows.

Daryl Hall, whose incredible voice made him the focal point of the evening, gave a flawless performance, and he also added to the excitement by dancing all over the stage. However, John Oates seemed somewhat overshadowed by everything. He played only one or two leads, and only sang one song on his own. Mostly Oates stuck to the harmonizing, and rhythm guitar.

The shows opener was a song from their most recent album Big Bam Boom called "Out Of Touch." However the musical highpoints were the older hits like "Rich Girl" and the Ritious Brothers remake of "You've Lost That Loving Feeling." The feeling of boredom never entered their show. The hits just kept on coming!

The stage set up for the show looked like something out of Star Wars. Huge light columns surrounded the stage giving the audience an excellent visual sensation, and the PA system was hung off the stage giving the band plenty of room to play.

The band only gave two encores, but they were filled with musical diversions added to their familiar hits. While performing one of their last songs ("Adult Education") the band stopped playing and all joined in on harmonizing which has been a trademark of Hall and Oates from the beginning.

If you set out to Springfield last Sunday to hear profound lyrics put to complicated music you were in the wrong arena; but if you went to dance and enjoy soulful rock and roll you probably went to one of the best shows of your life.

To make the evening even better Springfield's Civic Center also sells alcohol at their events. What more could person ask for?

Garber's '85 ambition: a championship season

Experienced Lacrosse team shooting for tourney

BY PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

In the 31 years he has coached men's lacrosse at the University of Massachusetts, Richard Garber hasn't been prone to making rash predictions.

So when Garber lists his goals as competing for a New England championship and a shot at the national title, it's not just another eternally-optimistic coach talking.

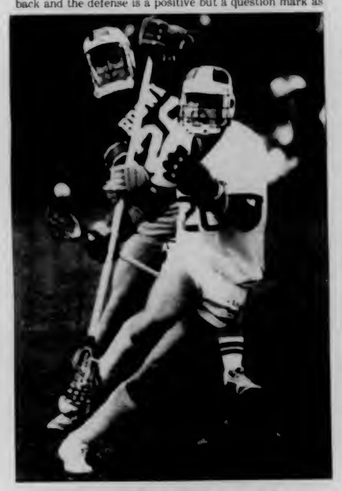
"I really believe that we have a chance at making the national tournament this season," Garber said. "This is a solid team that returns a lot of experienced players."

The Gorillas went 8-4 last season and finished the season ranked tenth nationally. The top eight teams compete in the tourney and a 10-7 loss to Harvard kept UMass out of consideration.

UMass last made the tournament in 1981 after a 13-2 record but have dominated New England winning nine of the last 18 titles.

UMass returns 11 starters and 20 lettermen, including the starting attack line and four midfielders. The defense, that was anchored by graduated all-American Barry Cain, is a question mark although three starters return.

"The attack has several proven scorers back and several younger players have really looked sharp in early practice," Garber said. "The midfield has a lot of players back and the defense is a positive but a question mark as far as depth."



Senior attackman Ken Freeman is one of 20 returning lettermen for the UMass Lacrosse team. The Gorillas open March 30th against Delaware.

Here, broken down into positions, are a look at the Gorillas:

ATTACK: Seniors Bubba Sanford, Mike Fiorini, Kenny Freeman and junior Tom Lukacovic combined for 72 of UMass' 134 goals last season. All four are proven scorers and run the patended UMass fast break to perfection.

Two sophomores, Doug Musco and Ed Boardman, along with junior college transfer Tom Carmean have blended together into a potent unit as well. Carmean, from Farmingdale Community College on lax-mad Long Island, played alongside Musco in high school.

Two freshmen, Kelley Carr and Pat Cain, could also contribute.

MIDFIELD: All-American Karl Hatton returns after a 13-goal season along with all-New England pick Greg Fisk, who tallied 15 last year. Matt O'Reilly, who according to Garber has had a great pre-season, is also a returning starter. A second line of sophomore Neal Cunningham, junior Stephen Moreland and junior Rich Abbot are very quick and will also see a lot of action.

Faceoffs will go to one of the best diggers in the East, junior Seamus McGovern. Defensive middies include Ed Spencer, Pat Craig, Jim Farrall and Scott Ciampa. Freshman Brad Carr, Glenn Stephens and Alan Rotatori will also factor in along with sophomores Mark Cavallon and Scott Santarella.

DEFENSE: Four players, Tommy Aldrich, Gerry Byrne, Mark Stratton and former midfielder Perry Seale, will have much of the responsibility in what is a thin defensive corps.

"Aldrich and Statton are two of the best defensive players around, you don't get much better than these two," Garber said. "Perry has done a good job and it looks like he'll go to defense."

Freshman Scott Craig and junior John Stefanini will need to continue to develop to help the depth of the corps.

GOAL: Surprise opponents. Gerry Moreau is back. The thought-to-be-graduated Moreau actually did get his degree, but has another year of eligibility after sitting out his sophomore season.

"That should shake up a few coaches who thought we'd have a hole to fill," Garber said. "Gerry is a fine goalie, he has a good outlet pass on the break and handles the stick well."

Sophomore Rich Klares and freshman Charlie Moores and Paul McCarty will backup Moreau.

"No surprises from us," Garber said. "We'll fast break whenever we can. I expect a lot of teams, like in basketball, to try and slow the tempo down on us."

"We'd like to score a lot of quick goals and bury our opponents early. I like seeing us running. The players like it and the fans do too."

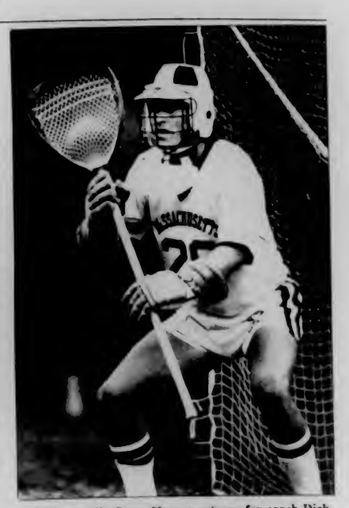
The Gorillas are in Florida, facing three club teams, before returning home to face Delaware (eighth nationally last season) at home on March 30th. They host seven games at Boyden Field, finishing with Syracuse on May 10.

"Every team we face, with the possible exception of Boston College, is capable of beating us," Garber said. "Our schedule is one that will get us national recognition if we do well. Almost every team is a power."

"I'm worried only about the defense, and chances are pretty good that they'll come along and do well," the coach said. "We have a great balance of players from different classes and from being with them it seems like they think they're going to have a good season."

That's good, I like a lot of confidence, but we have to temper that with our play on the field. I try to keep low key with the players about our chances, but we have a hell of a team and I'd be disappointed if we didn't do well."

Doing well for the Gorillas isn't just attaining a winning record, it's reaching for national glory. For long-suffering UMass sports fans, the Gorillas may prove to be the reward they're looking for.



UMass goalie Gerry Moreau returns for coach Dick Garber's Gorillas this season.

Georgetown and St. John's begin NCAA play

Hoyas face Lehigh

(AP) Lightly regarded Fairleigh Dickinson will be thrown to the Wolverines, and Lehigh, North Carolina A&T and Southern University also face difficult first-round tests in the NCAA basketball playoffs starting today.

Each of those schools has the dubious distinction of facing the top ranked teams in the four divisions—Lehigh against Georgetown in the East Regional, North Carolina A&T against Oklahoma in the Midwest and Southern against St. John's in the West today and Fairleigh Dickinson takes on Michigan in the Southeast tomorrow.

"Lehigh players prepared themselves for what they want," said Lehigh forward Daren Queenan. "Words don't win a game."

Oddsmakers installed the Engineers as 30-point plus underdogs for their first round meeting this afternoon with the No. 1-ranked Hoyas. And while some observers have called the match between Georgetown, 30-2, and Lehigh, 12-18, a farce, Lehigh Coach Tom Schdneider insisted, "These guys can hold their own. They've played some good teams before."

But Lehigh's strongest opponent of the year was probably Marquette and the Engineers lost that contest by 29 points. They also lost by 31 points to Rider College and by 27 to George Washington. Lehigh got into the NCAAs by virtue of its upset victory in the East Coast Conference tournament.

Thompson said his defending national champions are vulnerable to a letdown and that he was concerned about being so highly touted.

"When people try and make me believe that something's going to come that easy, I get nervous ... very nervous," Thompson said.

In other first-round East games today at the Hartford Civic Center, Temple will meet Virginia Tech, Loyola will play Iona and Southern Methodist takes on Old Dominion.

As for Oklahoma's opponent, Sooner Coach Billy Tubbs said he was sure that North Carolina A&T "would like to slow things down a bit. But we're going to do our best not to let them."

Oklahoma leads the nation in scoring with an average of more than 91 points per game, while the Aggies have allowed opponents an average of 66 points. With no shot clock in the NCAA tournament, the Aggies will be able to exploit that aspect by slowing down the game.

The Aggies lost to Georgetown by only 61-56 earlier in the season and held All-American center Patrick Ewing to 11 points.

"I was impressed with the way they played Georgetown so close," Tubbs said. "Anybody that plays Georgetown to a five-point game gets my attention real quickly."

Oklahoma and North Carolina A&T meet in the third game of the first round today. The survivor plays the winner of the Southern California-Illinois State game, also scheduled Thursday night.

Demonstration supports CIA protesters at trial

UMass student and graduate fined

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

While 150 people protested outside, a University of Massachusetts student and an Amherst resident charged with disrupting CIA recruitment on campus had their case continued without a finding yesterday in Hampshire County District Court.

Perry M. Amsellem, a legal studies major, and Lisa Sheehy, 25, were arrested Nov. 5 for trespassing and interfering with CIA interviews which were taking place at the University Placement Service Office in Hampshire House.

Judge Alvertus J. Morse sentenced the two to perform 15 hours of community service.

Clarkson Edwards, associate director of the University Placement Service, testified that Amsellem, 27, and Sheehy, a 1980 UMass graduate, entered the office and attempted to speak to the CIA recruiters and would not allow them to continue their interviews. They also questioned the recruiters about the legality and morality of CIA support to the Contras in Nicaragua, Edwards said. The police were called when the two would not leave.

Four other witnesses for the prosecution gave similar testimony.

In his defense, Amsellem said, "I feel it is my obligation as a citizen of this country to stop my government from acts so heinous that they're on a level with Nazi war crimes."

Citing international law, which prohibits powers like the U.S. from interfering with legitimate governments, Amsellem said, "We were in fact exercising reasonable actions, in asking their agency (CIA) to comply with that law."

Assistant District Attorney Rosemary Tarantino said the recruiters were merely functionaries and had nothing to do with CIA policy making, so they should have been allowed to continue their interviewing.

In his decision, Judge Alvertus J. Morse said he "firmly believes citizens have rights to petition their governments. The defendants had a right to be on campus to inform the public."

But, he said Amsellem and Sheehy had had enough time to voice their grievances and they should have left when asked.

"The judge's decision was political, not judicial," Amsellem said after the trial. "It would have created waves of civil disobedience," if they had been found not guilty because it might have set a precedent for future protestors being safe from prosecution.

Before the trial began, a crowd of 150 to 200 protestors picketed outside the courthouse, brandishing banners and shouting slogans. Banners reading, "Put the CIA on Trial," and "CIA Murders" were supported with changes of "Stop the Lies, Get Rid of the Spies," as passing cars honked in support.

"We are here to protest CIA recruitment on campus and the legal action being taken against UMass students and alumni who, because of their political consciousness, found it necessary to protest in the strongest, nonviolent fashion possible," said Matthew Shakespeare, a 21-year-old Northampton resident.

Alan D. Minsky, 19, a Yale University student, said he and five other Yale students are facing similar charges and he came to show his support.

"We're here as a show of our solidarity," he said.

Jean M. Caiani, 27, of Worthington, said, "As a U.S. citizen, I feel responsible. Unless we get out there with civil disobedience and active protest the genocide is going to continue."

"I am a white, middle class, American lady," Arky Markham, a 69-year-old Northampton resident said, "but I still feel strongly about this. This is not the way a democracy should be run."

Fraternities try to dispel poor image with awards

By DANIEL WHITE
Collegian Staff

Members of the University of Massachusetts Interfraternity and Panhellenic Councils said they feel their criticized reputations around campus are unjustified and point to their winning of this year's Larry Lunsford and Rush Promotion and Outreach awards as examples of their goodness.

The two councils are proud of these awards not only because they make them look good, but because they reflect favorably on UMass in general, Richard Sherman, vice-president of the Interfraternity Council said.

The Lunsford Award is given to the Northeastern Interfraternity Council which best serves its member fraternities, school and community through its standards of scholarship, leadership, and individual development.

"We feel to know us is to love us," said Sherman, adding that most people don't look at the charity work many fraternities and sororities do.

"We don't claim to be perfect," said Lori Swanson of the Panhellenic Council. "We know we have problems, but we are trying."

Sherman said that the councils have been emphasizing unity between the houses by coordinating various events held by each house. Each week, the councils get together to discuss upcoming events and problems, and try to work together on them.

They are also trying to motivate their members more to get involved in their house's activities.

UMass was also one of the first shcools in the country to have dry rushes, Sherman said.

Last weekend, the two councils held a conference in Petersborough, N.H., which emphasized workshops on unity, leadership skills, and trust. Three members from each house went and discussed what happened with the members of their house when they returned.

Swanson attributes part of Greek area's bad reputation to parties which non-members come to and start trouble. This reflects on the Greek system and makes it look bad, she said.

Measles don't deter students

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

As a multitude of University students descend upon warm and sunny lands for spring break, Health Services has recovered from a "landslide" week in which more than 400 students were inoculated against the threat of measles.

Despite the recent outbreak of the highly contagious disease in area colleges, travelling for spring break has not lost its appeal.

"I got my measles shot today so I can be sure I won't come back sterile," Todd Macomber, a 20-year-old psychology major from Newton, said.

Mindy Harris of Carroll Travel in Amherst said the volume of people making reservations was "a bit larger than last year. It's been pretty hectic."

Shaun Walsh, 20, an exercise science major from New Bedford, undaunted by the measles threat, said he is looking forward to his trip to the Bahamas, "big time. If I have too good of a time I'm not coming back."

John Milkiewicz, 24, a political science major, is headed to Ft. Lauderdale, along with the rest of the rugby team, in a van.

"I'll be staying with some unsuspecting relatives and friends," Milkiewicz said, "I plan on having some fun, and possibly getting bailed out of jail."

"We're going to attack Nassau," Jane Perlmutter, 21 a communications major from New Rochelle, N.Y., said, "I can't wait to go, this will be my first spring break; eight single women alone in Nassau."

David Kraft, director of Health Services, said the majority of people vaccinated this week mentioned spring break.

"Measles would go through the student body rather quickly if just one person came back with it," he said.

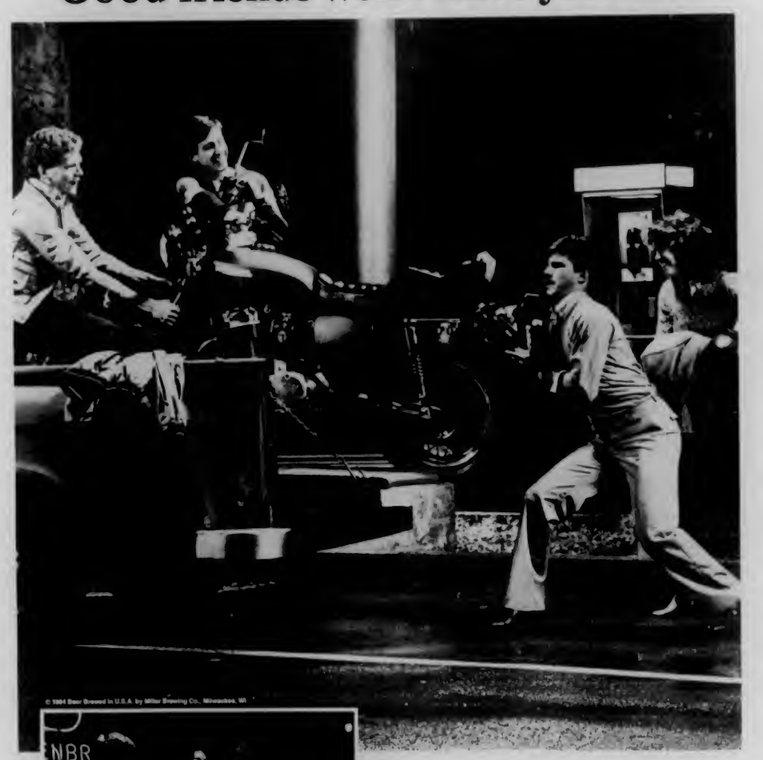
Good friends won't leave you flat.



The moon was up, the stars were out and—pfftt!—your rear tire was down. Good thing there was a phone nearby. And a few good friends who were willing to drive a dozen miles, on a Saturday night, to give you a lift. When you get back, you want to do more than just say "thanks." So tonight, let it be Löwenbräu.

Phone company will not give up bills

By JOHN BEAN
Collegian Correspondent

On-campus students who think they can get away without paying their phone bills are in for a big surprise.

Jack Briggs, public relations director for New England Telephone, said the first step the phone company will take when a student fails to pay his or her bill is to disconnect the phone.

Gerald A. Quarles, director of the Housing Assignments Office, said that there were 345 campus phones shut off this semester.

Quarles said, "The University will assist the phone company in tracking down these students. We will give them the student's room number if they move to a new room on campus, or their home address if they move off campus."

The University can release this information under the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act, which is printed in the Student Telephone Directory. It permits the University to "release, without students' permission, 'directory information'." This includes the student's local address, local phone number, and home address.

If these efforts fail, the account is sent to the company's Internal Final Collection Center. If the bill is still not paid, it is sent to a private collection agency. At no time, however, does the phone company give up on the account.

"We will always talk to a student who calls us," Briggs said. "We'll never say 'Your account is now being handled by the collection agency, you'll have to call them.'"

Briggs warned students against thinking that they will get away without paying their bill.

"As far as we're concerned," he said, "our attempts to collect on a bill end when it is collected."

A PVTA bus plowed into the rear end of a pickup truck causing a three vehicle accident in front of Morill Science Center yesterday afternoon, Amherst police said.

Police said Suzanne Moore, 21, Amherst, the bus driver, was cited for failure to use care in stopping. No one was injured.

Moore was heading north on North Pleasant at 1:37 p.m. when she hit a truck driven by James Wale, 26, of South Deerfield. Wale's truck then hit a car driven by Lucy Alman, 24, of Belchertown. Alman was stopped for pedestrians crossing.

The PVTA had no comment and damage estimates were unavailable.

Treatment of alcoholism deemed sexist

Nursing lecturer Nancy Fisk.

By SANDY BAILEY
Collegian Correspondent

Alcoholism among women is largely undetected because information about the disease is based predominantly on males, according to a University of Massachusetts nursing lecturer who has worked in the alcoholism field for 15 years.

Nancy Fisk, who spoke Wednesday night to UMass students in a colloquium on "Women and Alcohol," said "in spite of the changes feminism and the women's movement have made, there is still a double standard for alcoholism."

"Nine out of 10 women stick by their alcoholic husbands but the opposite is true of men. Nine out of 10 men leave their alcoholic wives," she said, speculated that men are more apt to blame problems on other things than accept alcohol as the problem.

In addition, Fisk noted that the alcoholism in women is aggravated by doctors too willing to prescribe drugs.

"Women don't usually go to the doctor and say 'I'm an alcoholic.' They complain of nerves and depression. Doctors don't examine what is behind the problem," Fisk said.

Speaking on the physical problems associated with women alcoholics, Fisk said that miscarriages, higher incidence of hysterectomies, trouble conceiving, and fetal alcohol syndrome are the major gynecological disturbances.

She added, "Fetal alcohol syndrome is the one leading birth defect that is 100 percent preventable."

"The evidence is very clear that it is probably not safe to drink at all when pregnant," she said, stressing that although one or two drinks might not hurt, "we just do not know where the line is."

Fisk, who is also founder and former director of the women's alcoholism program "My Sister's House" in Springfield, said that the challenge for nurses is to get alcoholic women into specific programs designed to treat the problem, rather than psychiatric or drug care.

"The idea as a nurse is to start that little ripple that will get the alcoholic, and perhaps the whole family into treatment," she said.

Nutrition campaign kicks off this week

University Health Services is sponsoring an educational campaign designed to help students at the University of Massachusetts improve their nutritional health.

Catherine McKaig, co-ordinator of the campaign that began last week, said she hopes it will "influence the long term nutritional habits of students by helping them to establish good eating patterns early in life."

The campaign, which includes posters and fact sheets available at the Franklin Munchy Store and at the U.H.S. table on the Campus Center Concourse on Tuesdays, will focus on a specific area for a two week period: fat, sugar, calcium, and nutrient density (the nutrient/calorie ratio of food).

The focus this week is on fat. McKaig said that although whole milk and red meat are high in fat, they are important parts of a balanced diet and should be eaten in moderation.

ARTS

BIBLIOFILE
BY BRADFORD VERTER

There have been numerous attempts to make complex science and mathematics comprehensible to the layman. The best and most recent of these is The 4th Dimension; Towards a Geometry Reality (Houghton Mifflin, $17.95) by Rudy Rucker.

In witty and direct language, he explains tesseracts (hypercubes), supports the possibility of time travel, and deals with the nuances of curved space. Rucker makes it all the more enjoyable by relating anecdotes and stories and puzzles to illustrate concepts and amuse the reader. The 4th Dimension is a wonderful book, highly recommended.

While Rucker analyzes the world of the fourth dimension, Martha Himmelfarb explores a much darker world. In Tours of Hell; An Apocalyptic form in Jewish and Christian Literature (Fortress Press, $12.95 paper), Himmelfarb compares the views of Hell found in various Biblical texts.

Himmelfarb traces the development of these visions, and details the various sins and punishments that the apocalyptic prophets describe. Unfortunately, the scope of her study does not extend to the decensus ad inferno in works of poetry or fiction, or in the visions of saints. The book is dryly written, which is understandable considering its subject. Nevertheless, Tours of Hell is an intriguing read.

Anton Chekov, better known for his plays, has also written a number of short stories. Late-Blooming Flowers, translated by I.C. Chertok and Jean Gardner (Carroll & Graf, $8.95 paper) collects eight of them.

The title story, written when Chekov was twenty two, is a beautiful and evocative piece of romanticism. Poetic and lyrical, these stories demonstrate Chekov's well-deserved reputation as one of the greatest writers of the last century.

The British writer Saki is primarily known for his delightful short stories. Many modern readers, however, have forgotten that he wrote in other media as well. These are collected in The Complete Novels and Plays of Saki (Carroll & Graf, $8.95 paper).

Saki's novels, contemporary satires, are as delightful as his short stories. The Westminister Alice in particular, which is an extrapolation of Lewis Carroll's character: Alice is a vehicle to parody the Victorian administration. Luckily there are footnotes to explain references, otherwise many of the jokes would go over the head of the modern reader. Saki's plays have been favorably compared to Wilde and Shaw.

Daniel Hoffman's much lauded biography, poe poe poe Poe poe poe poe poe has been rereleased (Vintage, $5.95 paper), offering an insightful and unusual interpretation of the life of the first great American man of letters after Charles B. Brown.

Blow Up and Other Stories* by Julio Cortazar is a stunning collection of stories by the celebrated writer. (Pantheon, $6.95 paper).

Landis' Night is endless

INTO THE NIGHT
Starring Jeff Goldblum, Michelle Pfeiffer and David Bowie
At the Mt. Farm Cinemas

By DANIEL CALNAN
Collegian Correspondent

Into The Night is John Landis' first film since he directed the tragic Twilight Zone, the Movie. After the trauma he had to face as a result of the accidental deaths of actor Vic Morrow and two Vietnamese children, and the ensuing court battles, it is good to see Landis back doing what he does best - directing movies. But if Into The Night is to serve as Landis' triumphant return to the big screen, I think he should have waited for something else to come along.

It is the story of Ed Okin, an aerospace engineer who is anything but happy with his routine, mundane existence. He is played superbly by Jeff (The Big Chill) Goldblum, in his first major leading role. Okin has difficulty sleeping at night as he lies awake contemplating his misery and searching for that missing something in his life. He hasn't had a good night's sleep in 5 years.

After finding his wife in bed with another man, Okin decides to take the half-joking advice of his friend and co-worker, played briefly but effectively by Dan Aykroyd. Aykroyd suggested he fly out to Las Vegas for the night, because nobody sleeps there either. It is at the airport where Okin stumbles across a desperate but beautiful jewel smuggler, played by Michelle Pfeiffer, and helps her escape from a band of crazed Iranian Gestapo agents. They manage to ditch their bumbling pursuers, and "into the night" they go.

This movie could have been better. Landis, who appears in the film as one of the Iranian agents who shoot at any thing that moves, (i.e. dogs, parrots, etc...), does a sufficient directing job. It is not his fault. The acting is first rate, and should lead to bigger and better things for Goldblum and Pfeiffer. David Bowie has a short but fascinating cameo appearance and dominates the screen for the entire 3 minutes or so that we see him. The problem was not the acting either.

The story is at fault. After taking what seemed like an eternity to get moving, the story suddenly gets too complicated and moves too quickly. Before long, there are so many people after the jewels, that it becomes difficult to keep track of who is who. It becomes so caught up in it's own action that it becomes unrealistic and holes begin to develop in the story line.

And of course, there is the violence. When I go to a "comedy", I neither expect nor want to see slashed throats and people being tortured and drowned in the ocean. It seemed as if every scene had blood in it.

I am not quite sure whether or not I liked Into The Night. True, Jeff Goldblum is perfect as the Ed Okin. True, David Bowie does give a great but short performance. True, I did fall in love with Michelle Pfeiffer, (and she can act too!), but it didn't make me laugh and isn't that what a comedy is supposed to do? I suppose that Into The Night was worth the price of admission, but then again, I got in free.

A future tale for UMass

Herb Ramy

Not too long from now, on a dry campus not so far away, one of the children is being tucked in. This is his story.

"Miss R.A. can I ask you some questions please?"

"Now Tommy, you know that nine o'clock is your bedtime on Fridays."

"I know it is, but when I was at the library today I saw some weird stuff in the old newspapers. The stories were supposed to be about UMass, but nothing in them seemed very familiar."

"You shouldn't be reading newspapers hon, you're only 20 years old. The articles in there are much too hard for you, but if you really want to know about the bad times before here at UMass I'll answer your questions."

"Would you?"

"Sure I would, but you'll have to promise to go to bed as soon as I'm finished. Do you promise?"

"Yes, I promise!"

"Good boy, now go ahead."

" Well, one of the stories was about a disagreement between two members of the student senate. What's a student senate?"

"A student senate was a group of students who were elected to make decisions about things that happen on campus."

"Who voted for them?"

"Other students."

"Other students? You mean students were allowed to vote?"

"Yes they were, but that was before everyone figured out that making too many decisions wasn't good for students. You wouldn't want to have to decide on who to vote for would you Tommy?"

"No, Ma'am."

"Of course you wouldn't. I didn't think so. Are there any more questions you want me to answer for you Tom?"

"Just one more. Another story was about a boy who got arrested for drinking too much. Was he drinking too much soda, is that why he got in trouble?"

"He might have been, we all know the caffeine in soda makes you act funny. It probably was alcohol though."

"Alcohol! They were crazy back then! How could they let little kids drink like that?"

"I don't know Tommy, I'm just glad that people now have a lot more common sense."

"Me, too."

"Well hon, I guess that's it, time for bed."

"Do I have to?"

"Yes you do. Tomorrow's the last day that your counselor will pick your classes for you. If you don't get there in time you'll have to pick them yourself."

"Don't worry, I'm going to bed. Thanks for setting me straight Miss R.A."

"Think nothing of it hon. Nighty night."

"G'night Ma'am. Isn't America wonderful."

"Yes it is Tommy. Yes it is."

When fun in the sun and measles meet

Matthew Benedict

Every UMass student knows spring break begins this weekend. What an absolute joy to goof off and do nothing, similar to going to school, except there are no classes, exams, lectures, or assignments. One whole week of doing absolutely nothing. Or at least what one feels like doing. Again, like school.

Florida, at this time of year, is swamped with students looking for one whole week of sun, sex, and partying. What better way to spend a financial aid refund check, or savings, or a "gift" from parents. And why not? We deserve it. We work hard. So why not enjoy what little we can before we have to leave this ivory tower and go into the dreadful, horrid, dangerous, outside world, right? Screw the divesture — this is our time in the sun!

This year's spring break in Ft. Lauderdale will go down in history. I have inside information. The following is what I've been told will occur.

Thousands of students descend on the beaches of Florida, living, eating, showering, sleeping together for one whole month.

One student (a male) from the University of Michigan/Ann Arbor goes to Lauderdale. He does not know he has the measles. He meets six women — from different parts of the country — and sleeps with them. Now, seven people have the measles.

In turn, each woman sleeps with five different people from different parts of the country. She infects five people. And so on,...

All across the U.S. (New York, Massachusetts, California, Texas, Iowa, Michigan), a measles epidemic is spreading throughout universities and colleges. Health officials cannot find a cause. They conclude the average student is over-worked, underfed, and toxic from too much alcohol and drugs.

One Month Later,...ABC Nightline News does a report on Measles: The Collegie Epidemic. Several universities have been closed. They conclude the measle epidemic is a "social disease," communicable by having too many sex partners.

The May issue of "The John Birch Society Magazine" offers a new reason and cause for the epidemic: it was started by the Russians. It is a Soviet plot to kill the United States with a simple disease which will not allow adults to procreate. CNN News interviews the author of the article. He has "conclusive evidence" from a "reliable source."

Both these reports make big news. People begin to take notice.

Both reports reach the president one morning in Washington while he eats breakfast. He calls an Emergency Cabinet meeting. They discuss not the validity of the reports, but reaction to their apparent and undeniable truth.

Special Report: Presidential Address to the Nation. "The Soviets have finally succeeded in infiltrating us through germ warfare. We are not quite sure, but there are reliable sources. We must take action. Thank-you for electing me president so I may act for all of you. For us all.

Consequences: increased aid to Central America; all financial aid cancelled and sent to government labs for germ warfare research; unemployed farmers assigned to work in military factories; Geneva arm talks cancelled.

The rest is history.

A plea from mothers

Spring Break time is almost here and we hope many of you will come to Florida for well earned vacations. We hope you will unwind on our beaches, try boardsailing, if you haven't, get great tans and return safely.

But please do not come to Florida to drink and drive. Drugged and drunk driving have caused too many needless tragedies in our communities. Drugged and drunk driving are not welcome.

We are parents and we look forward to your being here because we share your love of good times even as we remember our own sons and daughters, victims of drunk driving, who will never again be part of Spring Break.

Do this and this and...

The reason for this letter is not to complain or criticize but is to suggest some improvements for an already reputable newspaper. I think I am speaking for a majority of the student population when I say that we are sick and tired of reading about oppression and liberal one-sided views in our paper on a daily basis. I feel that the views of the Collegian has been taking are not representative of the students at this University and that this trend needs to be altered. The following are a list of improvements I have formulated through reading other credible college newspapers as well as through my own personal findings:

- Subject matter more geared toward the student
- Surveys and polls to illicit the true opinions of the students
- More investigative reporting
- Continuing stories that will make the reader want to read the next issue
- A "living-section" with reviews of stores, restaurants, bars, vacation ideas, etc.
- Writing about the future for us students including job-markets and long range implications
- Fashion and latest fad news
- Faculty profiles and opinions
- An "advice column"
- Entertainment alternatives for those affected by the rise in the drinking-age

Art put to good use

I would like to offer praise to the UMass art students who contributed to the recent Art Against Apartheid exhibit in the Student Union. I was overwhelmed by their ability to portray the human suffering in so many ways. These works powerfully communicated the oppression in South Africa. Creative students put their minds, hearts and souls into communicating what they believed in: human rights. Their art educated me about oppression in a way mere words could not. As an art student, I have struggled against a widespread belief that art is basically unimportant in today's world. Upon viewing this exhibit, however, I found once again that art contributes more than I can imagine to promoting the ideas and feelings necessary to improve the welfare of the world. Art is the universal language of humanity - it can also be the catalyst of action.

Art Against Apartheid demands action. I hope that all who viewed this exhibit were inspired to stand up and speak out against apartheid's ruthless violations of human rights.

Remembering the war

After reading some of Abdul Mumeet's comments in Fridays Collegian: "Black veterans still face prejudice" I have to respond. I am a white who came home from a tour of Vietnam and was called a baby killer at J.F.K. Airport in New York. I can remember like it was yesterday, waking up a black friend of mine in the pouring rain for his watch, wrapping up in his soaking wet poncholiner, and shivering until the warmth from his body heat in that poncho warmed my body to sleep. I can remember sharing my packages from home with my black friends, and I can also remember carrying a black friend's body across a bridge to be taken home.

I can remember going back to our rear area, and getting the "cold shoulder" by some blacks I knew because some of their other black friends were there with them. I was naive and could not understand why.

I know there was and still is prejudice both in the military and elsewhere. It's caused by both blacks and whites. I'll stand back to back anywhere, anytime, to help a fellow Vietnam Veteran, black or white. I'm one of those white men who's not afraid of black people, I'm afraid of prejudice.

Senior Pam Moryl returns for the fifth-ranked Minutewomen lacrosse team. She had 51 goals last season.

Gazelles have some questions, but will contend nationally

Moryl leads fifth-ranked lax , Hixon trying no new combos

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team plays its season opener in a little over two weeks. But if you ask coach Pam Hixon how her team looks, she will probably respond flatout that she does not know.

This response might worry some. However, it does not bother Hixon. She is patient. She can wait until after her team travels to Williamsburg, Virginia next week, after her players get outside for the first time this year and face an opponent (even if only in a scrimmage). Then the coach will be able to give a concrete analysis of her team as a team, not just a group of individuals wearing the same color jerseys.

"It's too early to tell right now," Hixon said. "We've got many people in many positions but really have not found a cohesive unit. We're looking at a relatively young group of people and many of those who returned from last year's team are in different positions."

"It's not that we are inexperienced, we're just looking for the right combinations. We are not strong or weak right now. We have a lot of players but we do not have the roles.

This trip to William and Mary is important for us. It will give players a chance to show what they can do," Hixon said.

Down South, the Gazelles, who are ranked fifth nationally in pre-season polls, will participate in a scrimmage weekend with twenty other east coast teams on March 16 and 17. Monday and Tuesday, UMass will play William and Mary, the University of Richmond and possibly the University of Vermont. The remainder of the time will be spent practicing.

"We'll use this trip to see how we react as a unit offensively and defensively, on both ends of the field," Hixon said. "We'll get a chance to see what we are going to do, who's strong, and what combinations (of players) work, and where. We'll have the video equipment with us so everyone will get a few looks."

Hixon feels the team has a strong nucleus built from players returning from last year's team that went 9-7 overall and placed fourth in the NCAA tournament. While the team lost its playmaker and second leading scorer Linda Haytayan (33 goals, 16 assists) and All American defender Carol Progulske, seven starters return.

UMass returns last year's leading scorer senior Pam Moryl (51 goals, 15 assists) and goalie Debbie DeJesus (6.6 goals per game average). Both players are four year starters and will be counted on heavily. Besides Moryl, Hixon looks to Becky Bekampis (3 goals, 4 assists) to add some scoring punch. Along with DeJesus on defense, Hixon expects Lana Nesmith to play an important role.

"Lana has really improved a lot from last year and I think she's going to give us some good strong leadership," Hixon said.

The attack will see Barbara (Bunny) Forbes and Mary Scott also return along with defender Chris Kocot.

Joining the veterans will be Ginny Armstrong, a freshman from Souderton High School in Pennsylvania. Hixon expects her to provide more scoring opportunities for UMass with her excellent speed and good instincts around the goal.

Junior Liz Schuler joins the Gazelles after spending a year abroad on exchange. She is another fast attacker and should take on some of the play-making duties.

"Right now I'm not real sure about our game plan but I would like to play more of a fast-breaking game. We have good speed and strength in our midfielders so we have the potential to do it but it will take some time to develop," Hixon said.

"We'll use a defense that is a combination zone and man-to-man. Our goaltending is solid with Debbie and our midfielders have that good speed. But our attackmen need to play together and gel in order to get the strong pursuit around the goal," Hixon said.

"I think our experienced players will really help the youngsters. We have that good nucleus now we're looking at a lot of players to fill around that nucleus," Hixon added.

UMass will have another week to develop after they return from Virginia. But the team faces its first test in its season opener on March 30 at Boston University.

Throughout April, the Gazelles will face teams from New England including the University of New Hampshire. Temple University and Rutgers are also on tap. Temple, the defending national champion, defeated UMass 13-5 last year.

"It's a small schedule but we play most (seven of 10) of our games at home (NOPE athletic fields). Next year we hope to expand on it. But as far as this year is concerned we'll be facing some strong and physical teams in Temple and Rutgers. The toughest team this year sounds like UNH though. I haven't seen them but I've heard through the grapevine that they are very strong," Hixon said.

As far as goals are concerned, Hixon still needs to see the team play before she can set them.

"Every coach is in this position every year. It's a point where you just don't know. We are in a better position than last year. We need to find a cohesive group but without being able to practice outside we just don't know," Hixon said.

"I'll definitely know more when we get back," she added.

Georgetown, St. John's roll in tournament

Hoyas maim Lehigh, 68-43

(AP) — Top-ranked Georgetown began defense of its national title yesterday with a 68-43 first-round victory over Lehigh in the NCAA basketball tournament, behind the sharp-shootings of Reggie Williams and David Wingate.

The Hoyas, 31-2 and winners of the Big East Conference tournament, bolted to a 28-point halftime lead, then coasted in the second half of their East Regional victory at Hartford, Conn.

Lehigh, the only team in the field of 64 with a losing mark 12-19, got within 63-41 with 2:26 left but never threatened the powerful Hoyas.

"After we got up, it was difficult to maintain a certain level of concentration," Hoyas Coach John Thompson said. "It's tough when you have a lead like that to keep that team-oriented defense."

In the second round tomorrow, the Hoyas face Temple, a 60-57 first-round winner over Virginia Tech.

In the Southeast Regional at South Bend, Ind., No. 13 Kansas defeated Ohio University 49-38, and Auburn beat Purdue 59-58. Ohio State defeated Iowa State 75-64, and No. 8 Louisiana Tech beat Pittsburgh 78-54 in the Midwest Regional at Tulsa, Okla. In the West Regional at Salt Lake City, No. 3 St. John's clobbered Southern University 83-59.

Granger Hall scored 22 points and had 13 rebounds as Temple held off a late Virginia Tech rally. Temple, 25-5, winner of the Atlantic 10 tournament, used a combination of zone defenses to hold the 20-9 Hokies nearly 25 points below their scoring average.

Calvin Thompson's 12 points led Kansas over Ohio University, which took advantage of the NCAA's decision not to use a shot clock in the tournament to play a spread offense almost the entire game.

Kansas, of the Big Eight, had averaged 76 points per game. The season was the Jayhawks did not begin to pull away from the Mid-American champions until the second half. Kansas took a 22-21 lead by the end of the first half and led 41-38 at intermission.

Kosar decides to go with the pros

Miami quarterback to leave school early for NFL

NILES, Ohio (AP) — Quarterback Bernie Kosar, whose strong arm led the University of Miami to the 1983 national championship, said yesterday he would cut short his college career to play professional football.

Kosar said he would make himself available for the National Football League's April 30 draft and that he would like to play for the Cleveland Browns in his native Ohio.

"I followed the Browns my whole life," Kosar said at a news conference. "That would be the ideal situation."

The Browns, however, would have to improve their draft position to get Kosar. As of now, they have the seventh selection.

The Buffalo Bills, with the first pick in this year's draft, already have made Bruce Smith of Virginia Tech their No. 1 choice. The Houston Oilers have the second pick.

In Phoenix, Ariz., where the NFL's team executives are meeting this week, sources said the Browns had made an offer to acquire Houston's first-round pick.

Kosar said he currently has an 18-hour credit load, meaning he would need to complete six credit hours this summer to graduate. He said he could complete the courses by the end of June or July or in time for NFL summer training camps.

Kosar, whose family lives in nearby Boardman, Ohio, said he had no agent but believed he was worth as much as another college star, Doug Flutie.

The Heisman Trophy winner from Boston College signed a five-year deal with the New Jersey Generals of the United States Football League worth a reported $5 million to $8 million.

"From what I hear from a lot of people, that's about what I've heard I should be making," Kosar said. "But I think that'll be an individual thing with the club."

Kosar said he had made no decision on whether to consider a USFL offer.

Kosar said the University of Miami had been "nothing but first-class to me in my three years there."

"It's tough. I made some really good friends," he said. "I feel an obligation to them, but I think it's best to take advantage of the opportunities the NFL presents me now."

Miami Coach Jimmy Johnson said Kosar told him of the decision to turn pro earlier yesterday.

BOSTON — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy will use the testimony of education officials, university administrators, businesses, parents and students in Washington next week to fight the Reagan Administration's proposal to slash financial aid funding.

At Northeastern University last week, Kennedy held a three-panel discussion to record testimony of the harmful effects of the proposed cuts.

The Senate Budget Committee recently rejected the proposal by a narrow margin of 10-11.

"These proposals constitute the most serious assault on the quality and availability of higher education in America," he said. "The information gained today will be used to rebut the false, unsensitive, flagrantly misinformed Secretary of Education" William J. Bennett's reasoning behind the cuts.

The Administration's attempt to slash about $2.3 billion from financial aid and to cut another $100 million in higher education programs to reduce the deficit would affect millions of students on a national scale, Kennedy said. About 808,000 students would be barred from the Pell Grant program because of the $32,500 income ceiling and 450,000 low-income students would lose about $1,290 because of $4,000 cap on all aid regardless of income. He added that almost a million students would be ineligible for guaranteed student loans and another two million would be affected by the proposal to eliminate seven other aid programs.

At the University of Massachusetts, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, one of the panelists, said the 70 percent of students receiving "some kind of aid" will be affected. He added that 4,810 students currently receiving guaranteed student loans would no longer be eligible and 2,262 students would lose Pell Grants, work study and other grants under the proposal.

At the first panel discussion which included students and parents, Steve Barrows, president of the state student association said, "There is no reason to open the doors to any college with the $4,000 cap on all aid because it severely limits access to the institution of your choice."

Regents gather Administrators

Review college hiring records

By DEBORAH ROSS

Top administrators at Massachusetts' 29 public colleges and universities will be called before the Board of Regents of Higher Education to be questioned about their efforts to improve the hiring and promoting of women and minorities.

This is the first time the policy-setting body for public higher education has decided to make affirmative action "very high priority," said Estelle Shanley, Board of Regents Director of Public Information.

The Board, which began interviewing last Wednesday, has scheduled to meet with Presidents in order to review their affirmative action records, with UMass Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey being scheduled to appear on April 3.

Chancellor Duffey, in a telephone interview, described the board's move as "the appropriate thing to do" to express their concern about the position on women and minorities in public higher education.

Thelma Griffith-Johnson, Director of the Office of Affirmative Action at UMass, described the board's move as "wonderful" because "it puts people on notice that affirmative action is not dead in Massachusetts."

She said it shows that the "people with money and power are interested in it," (affirmative action) and as a result such campuses will be less able to avoid their affirmative action responsibilities.

According to Shanley, the decision to make the issue a top priority this year was made as a result of changes in the membership of the Board.

She noted that although the board presently includes four women and two minorities "in the past it had been largely white males not too interested in inequality."

She said the purpose of the interviews is to ask the heads of institutions with good records how they have managed it, and to ask the heads of institutions with poor records what they are doing about it.

She said that questioning the Presidents will make them more accountable to their goals, and that their answers will help the Board "form a direction on how to ensure affirmative action is being met on campuses."

The record at UMass is "not very impressive" and "certainly not as good as it should or could be" Shanley said, commenting on the following figures based on a March 1984 census date:

- Ninety-two percent of the entire faculty is caucasian and of these, 82 percent is male.
- Three percent of the entire faculty is black. Less than 1 percent is female.
- Those of Asian Pacific origin comprise 3 percent of the faculty and less than 1 percent of these is female.
- Hispanic faculty account for 2 percent and there is only one faculty member in the American Indian/Alaskan Native category.

According to Shanley, UMass Amherst has a particular problem with implementing affirmative action because much of the faculty hiring was done when the pool of available candidates consisted mainly of white males.

UMass at Boston has a better record, she said, because as an institution only 20 years old, much of it's faculty recruitment took place when "women's liberation and equality were at the forefront."

Although she described UMass at Amherst as presently having "a solid male front," she predicts, "as the good old boys begin to retire I think you will see a changing profile."

Griffith-Johnson, however, attributes the poor representation of women and minorities at UMass Amherst to the Universities' lack of effort to enforce affirmative action principles, lack of any consistent leadership on the issue, and lack of support from top administrators.

But she added that the situation is getting better, and she credits this improvement to the efforts of Provost Richard O'Brien who "has been willing to take a leadership role on this issue," she said.

In particular, Johnson was referring to O'Brien's announcement earlier this year that $250,000 will be set aside annually as a "Special Opportunity Fund" specifically for the recruitment of women and minorities.

Griffith-Johnson said she is reassured by the commitment of O'Brien who she described as "a man of ideas supportive of affirmative action."

Code of Conduct ensures discipline

Vandalism, safety hazards may provoke loss of housing

By DAVID BURGESS
Collegian Staff

So you got drunk and rowdy at the dormitory party last night and, after redecorating the fifth floor with toilet paper and a magic market, you decided to show off your good taste in heavy metal at 4 a.m. at a volume matching that of a supersonic transport jet. Will you get away with it? Probably not.

A total of 1,023 undergraduate students who performed these and other antics were charged with violating the Code of Student Conduct in the last academic year. Two hundred and twenty people were put on housing probation, a sanction usually invoked for minor violations or first offenses. One hundred and fifteen were placed in housing jeopardy for a more severe violation or repeated offense. Sixteen students were removed entirely from on-campus housing which includes dormitories and the fraternity-sorority system.

According to the Code of Student Conduct, a student who is "disruptive to the reasonable organization and continuity of the residence hall" or demonstrates a safety hazard within the residence hall system may be required to leave and seek off-campus housing.

Charmaine Wijeyesinghe, judicial liaison in the Dean of Students Office, said, most of the cases are resolved at the informal pre-hearing level. For instance, a first-time offender is given a warning and if the student confesses, a resolution of the case will be attempted which may include a small sanction coupled with education workshops. This allows a student to remain in the residence hall while being made aware of his or her responsibility as a resident, she said.

According to the Code of Student Conduct, a student who is "disruptive to the reasonable organization and continuity of the residence hall" or demonstrates a safety hazard may be required to leave and seek off-campus housing.

Should a student contest the charge at the pre-hearing level, he or she has the right to a hearing. If the hearing board upholds the finding and the charge the student has the right to two levels of appeal.

A student may appeal a charge before a student board. If the finding and charge is upheld by the student board, then the student has a final route of appeal before the University Discipline Board. While this is a current policy, the Code of Student Conduct is still being revised.

Rules concerning on campus housing are listed in the Residence Hall Manual which is given to all on-campus residents at the beginning of the semester.

Wijeyesinghe said once a student charged with a violation has exhausted all routes of appeal, he or she is sanctioned or is removed from campus housing.

"Some students may be removed permanently," she said, "but that is rare. Usually removal is for a specified period of time, such as a semester or a year."

If a student loses his or her housing after the fifth week of the semester a refund for rent paid is usually not given. After the sanction has expired the student may re-apply to the housing office or the Greek system for on-campus housing.

Students offer free tax-form aid

Free assistance in filling out tax forms will be offered by the Beta Alpha Psi accounting honors society on Saturdays: March 30, April 6, and 13.

The service "is open to the general public, who don't have the time or the money to do their own taxes," said Nick Katsoulis, a senior accounting major and vice president of Beta Alpha Psi.

Katsoulis said there are rental deduction benefits of up to 50 percent, (up to a maximum of $2,500) for independents who live in one place year-round.

For example, if qualified, a permanent resident in the Amherst area who pays $2,400 a year in rent is entitled to a $1,200 return at the end of the year.

The three workshops will take place in the Campus Center: March 30 in Room 803, April 6 in Room 162, and April 13 in Room 163.

Schultz says Khomeini's speech may indicate peace

BOSTON (AP)—Secretary of State George P. Shultz says a recent address by Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini may indicate he is ready to end the war with Iraq, according to an interview published in The Boston Sunday Globe.

"The ayatollah made a rather interesting speech the other day," Shultz said.

Noting he didn't want to "overinterpret" the address, Shultz said American analysts believe "it's possible to interpret the speech as meaning that now that they have, in a sense, clean hands, having tried as they see it to pursue the war, they might be prepared to try to work something out," he said.

The speech was made Thursday before civil and military officials in Tehran. In it, Khomeini said the most important thing for Moslem believers is not victory or defeat but whether they do God's will.

"Victory or defeat loses any meaning," Khomeini said, "because serving God and obeying his orders is all victory.... Even if we are defeated or not defeated...it makes no difference.

"God has said that we should go and cut off the hand of the oppressor," he said, referring to the Iraquis. "We go, and as much as we are able and have the power, we cut off the hands of the oppressors."

Then, in a passage analysts say is significant, he said, "If we cannot do this, we have done our duty anyway."

Shultz said Iran may have decided that after more than four years of war another big defeat it is ready to end the fighting.

Iraq is believed to have expanded the war by launching widespread air strikes against Iranian cities, reportedly in hopes of building popular pressure on Khomeini to conclude a peace settlement. Khomeini has said there could be no peace until longtime enemy Saddam Hussein was overthrown.

Probe of CBS deaths ends

JERUSALEM (AP)— Israel's police minister said yesterday there was no reason for a formal inquiry into the killing of two CBS television crewmen by Israeli soldiers because "there is nothing unclear to be investigated."

Also a CBS vice president, Ernest Leiser, said during a visit here that the deaths Thursday of the cameraman and soundman both Lebanese, "may simply have been a tragic error."

The network had said earlier, in a letter to Prime Minister Shimon Peres, that the tank fire that killed the two men was "unprovoked" and had called for a government inquiry.

"There is nothing for the government to debate about the issue, because nobody, of course, feels it was done on purpose. It was a wartime incident," Cabinet Secretary Yossi Beilin said.

Peres' spokesman, Uri Savir, and an Israeli army spokesman met for an hour and 15 minutes Sunday with Leiser to discuss the deaths of the men.

Savir said he told Leiser "there was no intention whatsoever to hurt any journalists or crew members of CBS."

6 students forsake fun for homeless

BOSTON (AP)-While hordes of college students basked on beaches of Florida during their spring break, six classmates from a small Massachusetts school forsook indulgent days and hot nights for a week of volunteer work at an innercity shelter for abused, homeless and neglected teenagers.

"I was planning to go to Florida," said Anne Sullivan, a sophomore at Merrimack College in North Andover. "But I was sitting in my room watching TV and they were describing the famine in Ethiopia, and then on came a commercial for Florida, and it got me thinking.

"I just decided I could spend my money and not help anybody," she said, "or I could spend my time and help a lot of people."

Miss Sullivan and five others spent last week filing papers, sorting clothes and cleaning rooms at New York's Covenant House, located in Times Square. Each night, the shelter houses about 225 teenagers, many of them runaways, victims of abuse or kids trying to escape their jobs in pornography and prostitution.

The students are part of a 25-year-old campus volunteer group called "Merrimaction." In recent years, the group of 20 students, faculty and staff members of the Catholic, four-year school not far from the New Hampshire border have spend vacations working in soup kitchens and chopping wood for poor senior citizens in Maine.

Miss Sullivan, who hopes to be a doctor someday, said she never regreted passing up a trip to Fort Lauderdale.

5 riders injured in "T" robbery

BOSTON (AP)—Transit police yesterday investigated a gang of youths who terrorized and robbed passengers aboard a subway train, authorities said.

At least five Orange Line passengers were injured in the violence shortly after midnight Saturday, said Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority spokesman Lasto Fisher.

None of the injuries was serious and no one was hospitalized, police said.

"It all happened in a matter of minutes while the train was moving from Essex Station to the Dudley stop," Fisher said. "Toward the end of the ride, it just escalated."

MBTA policeman John McKenna said no one was arrested and the incident was under investigation.

The passengers were punched and roughed up by the teenagers, who fled when the train stopped in the Roxbury section at Dudley Station, Fisher told the Sunday Boston Herald.

The youths allegedly grabbed a bag of groceries out of one man's hands, threw its contents on the train, robbed the passengers of small bills and forced one person to give up $50, Fisher said.

Waterbury bishop to defend Pastoral letter

The auxiliary bishop of Hartford will discuss the "Bishop's Pastoral Letter on the U.S. and Catholic Social Thought" tomorrow at 1:30 p.m in Room 120 of the School of Management.

The lecture, which is part of the Chancellor's Seminar on the New American Economy series will have Bishop Peter A. Rosazza address the debate of the pastoral letter that purports that it provides a theological base for a critique of American capitalism.

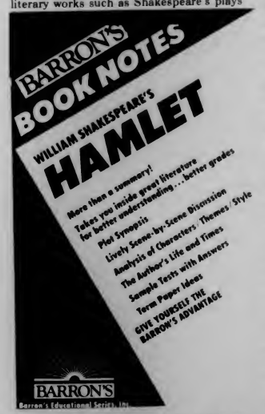
Bishop Rosazza, a native of New Haven, Conn., attended Dartmouth College and received theological training from Seminaire Saint Sulpice in Paris where he was ordained in 1961. He serves on the National Catholic Bishops' Committee for Hispanic Affairs, the Committee for the Campaign for Human Development and the Committee Studying the American Economy. He is a resident of St. Margaret Parish in Waterbury, Conn.

Professors say booknotes discourage creative thinking

By INGRID DYCK
Collegian Correspondent

While some students find literary guides helpful to their studies, English professors at the University of Massachusetts generally do not recommend them, and even say they are harmful.

Common guides include "Monarch", "Cliff's", or "Barron's" notes, where major literary works such as Shakespeare's plays are analyzed in depth.



This is one literary study guide used by students, a practice frowned upon by UMass professors.

According to a pamphlet by the publishers of Barron's notes, the guides "provide the tools to develop creative and critical thinking."

But Professor Bernard Bell considers such notes "a disservice in terms of moral and intellectual development." He stressed the importance of students interpreting and discovering their own meaning in literature. By relying on booknotes, students are denying themselves the opportunity to do their own thinking and learning, he said.

Professor Robert French said the notes, "inhibit the process of thought from the student. The student is cheating himself" in resorting to these notes, he said. In general, professors seem to agree that notes hinder rather than help learning, and that using the notes is "letting someone else think for you," French said.

Sophomore English major Doug Lang said that he, "finds ideas for his essays through 'Monarch Notes.'" An English major who asked not to be identified said that they are, "the best way out when you have to read and write an essay on a book for the next day." First year student Jeanne Bulla said she only refers to them when she needs help in understanding a work. One student said he felt it was a minor form of cheating, and that he never uses them. Bell said that the guides might be useful for studying for finals, but otherwise they are useless.

Professors agreed that the action taken against a student who has borrowed material from the notes depended on how extensive the borrowing was, and the student's past performance. There would be sympathy for the student who has been working hard all along, but not for the student who has been missing class and showing no effort. Bell said that such a clear-cut case of dishonesty would receive an F, or no grade at all.

Prof studies shrimp imitation

By TIM O' LEARY
Collegian Correspondent

A food scientist here is developing a technique to process popular imitation seafood used as a substitute for crabmeat and shrimp.

Ernest Buck, a UMass food science and nutrition professor, is working to develop a technique for American companies to produce the imitation seafood, now a Japanese trade secret.

Last year, Americans consumed 75 million pounds of the imitation fish, called surimi, and were unaware of it, said Buck. The Japanese have processed cheap, abundant fish into imitation expensive seafood since 1957, Buck said.

The surimi is "100 percent fish" but the cheap fish are processed to look and taste like more expensive seafoods such as scallops, shrimp and crab, Buck said.

"Companies don't like to use the words 'imitation crab', and they don't want to turn off their customers. But consumers like surimi, and buy it in large quantities," he said.

"The surimi has a big cost advantage. Crabmeat is $20 per pound, and the substitutions are three to four dollars a pound," Buck said. "These simulated products are higher in protein and have significantly less cholesterol compared to the real fish."

The Japanese process of making surimi involves washing the fish several times in cold water, adding sugar and sorbitol, freezing the fish into blocks of surimi, gelling the surimi and finally processing it into the imitation seafoods.

"The Japanese have superior knowledge because they developed the process and have used it for years," said Buck. "Our goals are to make the process more efficient, adapt it to American methods, increase the yields and reduce costs," he said.

"Within two to three years we will have a thriving surimi industry in this country and we will have some very exciting new products," he said.

"There's opportunity to make these products from underutilized fish," he said. One fish Buck favors using is the red hake, an abundant fish

Mathematicians to discuss teaching problems

The concerns of mathematic instructors will be addressed through panel discussions today from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m. in the math lounge of the Graduate Center as part of the spring meeting of school and college mathematics teachers.

The event, sponsored by the department of mathematics and statistics will have secondary school teachers who have participated in UMass' Computer Assisted Mathematics Project and the School-College Transition Mathematics Project conduct the panel discussions.

Tong-ich Sze, a graduate teaching assistant in the department and his wife have been selected as the discussion's special guests. He has taught calculus on Chinese television and she teaches mathematics in middle school in China.

UMass has been offering two week summer courses in computer assisted mathematics to high school teachers for the past two summers. The course focuses on abgoritms, what they are, how they can be improved by suitable mathematics and how they may be used to make discoveries in mathematics.

Arthur Paven, a Braintree resident with four children in college who receive financial aid said, "The goals for our children may go down the drain" because the $4,000 cap does not consider family size or the number of students in college.

Duffey, who was on a second panel with college and university presidents said the proposed cuts are "ill tempered and mean spirited," and added that the degree and severity of the effects of the cuts "strikes me as totally unacceptable."

"I predict that these cuts will cause a schism in the country. The rich can continue to attend private schools while the middle class and the poor will be forced to attend only state supported colleges and universities," John B. Duff, chancellor of the state Board of Regents of Higher Education said in a written testimony, "The strength of this nation has always been in its diversity and the belief that anyone given the right opportunity could be successful. The proposed cuts would eliminate that help."

"We should be opposed to any reduction in education," Rev. Bartley McPhaidin, president of Stonehill College said. He also asked Kennedy to "shout it out loud and clear" that his school opposes the financial aid cuts.

In the third panel, Alan McDonald, manager of government relations at General Electric said the cuts "will eliminate the availability of graduates going into engineering fields."

Also on that panel, John Hoy, president of the New England Board of Higher Education said in reference to the 13 per cent increase in military spending, interests ought to be in human investment in this country, not destruction.

How the Commonwealth almost killed him

Scene: the dungeon of South College. I am showing off our new space to some friends, space that we, like most other nonadministrative units at UMass, Amherst, have been busting for for the last 11 years.

And this, I say, will be my new office. No one will be able to disturb me here, and for graduate students having trouble getting their general papers or dissertations done.... This while clanking shut the first of two ancient quarter inch steelplate safe doors with a resounding innersanctum THLUNK, turning the big handle that controls the heavy bars of the latching system with a deadly THWICK. But when I try to open it again- I had tested it and the second inner one several times- I can't move it. I can hear the latchbars slide back and forth, but try as I can with all my strength I can't get the damn thing to budge.

I had thought that the guts of the combination lock were gone but no use. I simply can't get the vault door open again. I had been in the innerest sanctissimum of the former main administration building before, two days before, in fact, when I was finally able to figure out how to access it. Mailroom? No, cuz it connected directly to the South College Copy Center. Janitors' entrance? No, cuz timeclocks, supplies, etc. The only access that would work at all was through some t.v. film classrooms that the technical assistants for that department had been kind enough to let me sign out a key for. Ed had been glad to get rid of the space and given me a key to the padlock on the narrow door that led to the downstairs stairwell. Then I finally lit a match in the ultimate visible space to see our new resource I had thought to myself; those guys are missing a bet. What a place to film a modern day dracula or phantom of the administration piece....

What is the new color of Guess jeans?

Hooray! A voice from the 1980s student population finally speaks up. Jeff Davis' March 15 letter was superb. In it he states that students do not want to hear about oppression and liberal bias in the Collegian. Instead, the Collegian should be filled with "fashion and fad" sections, more "entertainment" sections, "job-market" columns, and "subject matter more geared towards the student".

He is right. Reading about oppression is boring. It is the same old stuff. I mean, who really cares about injustice, apartheid in South Africa, civil rights violations, sexist and racist policies, and all the rest of the same old complaints? Let us hear about the important stuff, such as Prince's latest video, or what the new color of Guess jeans is going to be, or maybe that new trendy nightspot where we can all go and get sloshed. And instead of hearing about that multi-national corporation who is exploiting Third World workers, let us hear about how we can get a job with it, so we can make lots of money in order to buy all those nice, shiny items we read about in the "fad" section. Social injustice? That has nothing to do with students! But that new haircut does.

Respect and consideration needed, not insults

This letter is addressed to the two "boys" sitting in front of me on the bus Thursday morning before Spring Break. You were discussing your trip to Florida and joking about how your friends were having a contest to see who could pick up the "ugliest girl", remember? You both seemed to think it was pretty funny. Well, I have a few thoughts for you. It just so happens that the outside isn't all that counts. Every woman carries with her a collage of history, thoughts, dreams and aspirations. Every woman is beautiful in many, many different ways. How dare you discuss us as though we are to be classified as "grade A" and "grade B"! Furthermore, you might want to contemplate the direction in which your classifications and manner of thinking about other people is taking our world today.

There is nothing more humiliating and infuriating than having to be subjected to your thoughtless little "jokes" on the bus. Try having some consideration for the human beings around you.

IT'S TIME WE IN CANADA AND YOU IN THE U.S. ACTED TO STOP ACID RAIN
I'M NOT SURE... MAYBE WE NEED A STUDY OF THE PROBLEM
WELL, WE'VE HAD STUDIES, MAYBE WE NEED A HIGH-LEVEL STUDY
DO YOU SEE MY POINT?
OH, VERY CLEARLY

When will the killings end?

Lorena Nozzolillo

There is a song by the popular Irish band which asks the simple, yet profound question: "What more in the name of love?" This is an appropriate enough question for this band's homeland, which, for years, has been a country constantly plagued by violent attacks in the name of love, or other noble causes. Most recently of which was the bombing of a police compound in Belfast by the Irish Republican Army (IRA). The blast killed nine officers of the Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC).

Of the nine people killed, one was only 19 years old, and was only part of the constabulary reserve. Another IRA horror story occurred only 4 days later, when Sgt. Hugh McCormac, a RUC training officer, was shot to death on his way to church. His 14 year-old son and his 15 year-old daughter had the privilege of watching him die, courtesy of the IRA.

Violent acts like these are now commonplace in Northern Ireland. The IRA sees itself as the army of the people, fighting for the equality of Irish-Catholics in Northern Ireland.

The RUC was established by the British Government in 1969, after a series of riots that year. Their purpose was, and still is, to maintain peace in the community and to help control the outbreak of riots. However, there have been reports contrary to this and many Irish-Catholics believe their civil rights have been violated by the RUC.

No one can deny the IRA's desire to fight against oppression by the RUC, or any other British organization. The point, though, is not the IRA's justifiable desire for freedom, but the extremes the army goes to in obtaining that freedom.

Quite frankly, the actions of the IRA are those of extremists and terrorists, and should no more be supported by so-called freedom fighters anymore than pro-lifers should support the bombings of abortion clinics. It may be romantic to think of the IRA as a peoples front, fighting for justice, but the reality is that Ireland has become a battle ground, where not even innocent civilians can escape the violence.

If you want to speak of noble causes, granted, the IRA has one. Great Britain has long had an oppressive grip on Northern Ireland's six counties. Journalist Kevin Kelley reports in his book The Longest War: Northern Ireland and the IRA, that statistics prove that Catholics earn less, are more often unemployed, live in worse surroundings, and experience worse health than Protestants in Northern Ireland.

After years of that sort of treatment, it is an understandable urge of the Irish people to take to forms of violent revolution. But where, and when, will they draw the line on the violence? And what of the innocent people who suffer through the IRA's self-righteous spurts of anger? For example, in December 1983, a bomb was planted in Harrods (a major department store) seven days before Christmas. Five people were killed and 91 were injured. What do you say to the family and friends of one of the five people who died? "So sorry, but don't worry, he or she died for a noble cause."

No matter how noble the cause, one life lost, is one life too many. Unlike innocent civilians, members of the RUC are probably are not without guilt, but even still, the IRA has no right to execute these people at their will. For example, let's say a black American is disgusted with the way blacks are treated in this country. He may have a right to be angry, but he doesn't have the right to assassinate people whom he feels are bigots, or to plant bombs left and right just to draw attention to his cause.

Random acts of violence by the IRA, or any other radical group, will not lead to a solution of any sort. There may not by an immediate solution in the near future for either Ireland or Britain. But until the senseless bombing and killings stop, there may never be a solution for either country.

It keeps getting crazier

Lawrence Soucie

I sometimes wonder if I have gone insane. Almost every day I read something in the newspaper that seems to me so absurd that either the world is crazy or I've lost my marbles.

For example, during his recent summit meeting with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney of Canada, President Reagan agreed to appoint a special envoy to study the effects of acid rain. To me, the idea of a special envoy to study acid rain is at this point so absurd that it couldn't be put forth by another thinking human being. We have known for years the causes, the consequences, and the cure for acid rain, but this administration has for the last four years used the rhetoric that it needs more study as an excuse to do nothing. Japan used to have the worst air pollution of any nation. Then they installed appropriate pollution control technology, and now their air quality is the envy of the industrial world.

There are many other absurdities in the news that are even worse. For example, 55 U.S. Senators recently voted to base 21 MX missles in existing minuteman silos. The MX, as you should know, is a highly accurate weapon capable of destroying Soviet missiles in their silos. Presumably, the United States would never launch a first strike against the Russians, so why do we need a weapon that can destroy Soviet silos? It just doesn't make sense. The argument a few years ago was to have a mobile missile system that the Soviets wouldn't be able to destroy in a first strike. Now that we are placing the MX in minuteman silos, aren't we making it even more tempting for the Russians to launch a first strike? Is this absurd or have I gone off the deep end and don't know it.

Still more absurdities. I went to the Republican club-WMLASC forum on Nicaragua a couple of weeks ago. One of the questions that I wanted to ask was: is the Nicaraguan equivalent of the CIA were to supervise the mining of Boston harbor, blow up the Brooklyn bridge, and dynamite a power plant or two, would that be considered an act of war, and if so, how in the name of God can we justify doing such things to the people of Nicaragua? It just doesn't make sense.

All of us have been taught to live by the Golden Rule: do unto others what you would have them do unto you. The Republicans seem to have stuck an extra not in there: do unto others what you would not want them to do to you. President Reagan has even gone so far as to call this murderous bunch of thugs, who rape women and murder people at random, the moral equivalent of our Founding Fathers. George Washington and Thomas Jefferson are probably rolling in their graves at such an absurd statement.

There are many other absurdities: voting and draft registration at 18, but drinking age at 21, separation of church and state, but vocal prayer in the classroom; send a teacher into space, but cut student financial aid; double defense spending in four years and cut taxes by 25 percent, and then hope to balance the budget, etc.

But enough of the absurdities. I think I know why all this is happening. Reason is being destroyed. Make a statement so absurd that nobody in their right mind would make (i.e. "acid rain needs to be studied", "we need the MX in minuteman silos", "the contras are the moral equivalent of our founding fathers") and people will believe you because they are good and trusting and are hesitant to believe anyone would pervert reason so freely. Ronald Reagan, the great communicator, figured this out years ago.

It's a question of priorities

Baub Menzel

The university administration has finally revealed it's true nature in view of it's political and economic standing. For two years I've had an impression of the nature of the administration as conveyed by their actions: inefficiency, inability, and inconsideration being key-note words in my mind. However, the actions of the past semester have opened my eyes to the real mindset behind the seemingly innocuous lethargy of the bureaucrats.

On Thursday March 7, there was a phrase scrawled across the side of the Fine Arts Center in bright red spray paint which read, "UMass is an assembly line for capitalism - who will buy you?" This is not a pitch supporting the defacement of public property, but the amazing reaction of the university hierarchy merits a discussion of the contents of that phrase and its obvious connotations to the university regime.

Graffiti is not a new phenomenon here at UMass, but the reaction to this piece certainly was. Remember some of the other phrases which lasted for weeks before any action was taken? The phrase in focus lasted until 11:00 Thursday morning - the administration was immediately motivated and acted quickly for once. The same administration which hasn't released or acted on the Yvette Henry report (how many years has it been?) felt so threatened by this slogan that it stimulates my imagination and curiosity. What is it that they really stand for?

It is very easy to begin this analysis by looking at what they obviously don't care about. Foremost is the Yvette Henry cover-up case. It's obvious that they don't care about due process or human (student?) rights, and this notion can easily be reinforced with a look at this year's actions. Already we've seen an attempt to usurp student input and control of fundings, through a series of secret meetings and decisions made at the end of last semester, when all concerned students had returned home for break. In addition, the administration has also tried to raise more money by charging graduate students for buildings that they don't even use.

Another issue to consider is the fact that this university still hasn't divested from South Africa. This action (or lack thereof) correlates quite well with the removal of anticapitalism graffiti at such a rapid rate. The administration feels threatened by such rhetoric because it strikes too close to the very foundations upon which it rests its usually inefficient and apathetic ideology. The bottom line is money, and manipulation of students and their funds is the major concern of a machine which would be better off concerning itself with the issues which mold a campus environment.

Such issues should include: combatting oppression (again the Henry case, as well as the other forms of human oppression - sexism, racism, homophobia, anti-semitism, et. al. - which are painfully prevelant on our campus), contributing to a safer environment (the physical plant is still in violation of the Clean Air Act), and a better educational facility for our money.

It's time to question the priorities of the current administration, and to act for better representation and expansion of our rights as students and human beings.

Big Beast adds two more to Final 4

N.C. State falls to St. John's in the West ...

DENVER (AP)—Swingman Chris Mullin scored 25 points and forward Walter Berry added 19 as third-ranked St. John's defeated North Carolina State 69-60 Sunday in the NCAA West Regional final, sending the Redmen to a Final Four rematch next Saturday with No. 1 Georgetown.

St. John's, 31-3 and the top seed in the West, will be in the Final Four for the first time since 1952, when it lost to Kansas in the championship game.

The Redmen's victory capped a successful day for the Big East Conference, which will send a record three teams to the national semifinals Saturday at Lexington, Ky. Villanova joined St. John's and Georgetown by upsetting North Carolina 56-44 in the Southeast Regional championship game and will meet Metro Conference champion Memphis State in the other semifinal, also on Saturday.

St. John's, which hit 25 of 31 free throws to 18 of 23 for N.C. State, didn't pull away from North Carolina State until the final two minutes.

Mullin's rebound basket and two subsequent free throws stoked the Redmen to a 17-12 advantage midway through the second half. To that point, the Redmen had converted all 13 of their free throw attempts.

With 9:18 left, the ball to Mullin in a mismatch against State's 6-7 guard Anthony Speed. Webb went inside for a three-point play. A minute later he popped a 15-foot jumper over Webb to give St. John's a commanding 56-50 lead.

The Wolfpack got no closer than four points after that, even though St. John's free-throw shooting was shaky down the stretch, missing five of the last 14, most in the final two minutes.

Sidney Lorenzo Charles, who started slowly and didn't score his first points until late in the first half, led a Wolfpack rally early in the second half as his team drew within 13-12 with 14:21 to play. But a rollapalong St. John's defense inside held Charles to only two points the remainder of the game and he finished with a team high 15. Webb had 14 for the Wolfpack, 23-10.

Center Bill Wennington added 14 for St. John's.

In the NCAA women's Division II championships at the Springfield Civic Center, 6-0 senior center Vickie Mitchell scored 14 points in the first 10 minutes as California State Polytechnic Institute at Pomona raced to a 26-14 lead against defending champion Central Missouri State on way to an 80-69 victory.

Rosie Jones, the Division II women's player of the year, took scoring honors with 28 to Mitchell's 24. But Mitchell controlled the boards, finishing with 12 rebounds, while Jones, who had been averaging nine, was held to just two.

With Mitchell, the tournament's most valuable player, controlling the inside game, 5-11 senior guard Kelley Fraser took charge outside for the Broncos.

Central Missouri's 5-6 and 5-8 guards could not handle the taller Fraser, who picked apart the Central Missouri defenses to feed Mitchell and 5-10 forward Sheri Jennum underneath when she wasn't bombing from 25 feet.

Fraser finished with eight points, 13 assists and two steals, while Jennum had 15 points for the 26-7 Broncos.

"It might have hurt that they went to a zone," said Cal Coach Darlene May, who this summer became the first woman to referee a woman's basketball game in the Olympics.

North Carolina's Joe Wolf (24) runs into Villanova's Gary McLain (22) in NCAA Southeast Regional final action Saturday in Birmingham. Villanova advanced to the Final Four, winning 56-44.

... while Villanova rebounds to deck North Carolina

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP)-Harold Pressley, Dwayne McClain and Harold Jensen put Villanova in control with six points each early in the second half as the Wildcats knocked off seventh-ranked North Carolina 56-44 Sunday to advance to the NCAA Final Four.

The Wildcats redeemed themselves in the second half after shooting only 23 percent in the first.

By winning the Southeast Regional championship, Villanova, 23-10, is one of three Big East Conference teams to reach the national semifinals. The Wildcats will face No. 5 Memphis State, 30-3, at Lexington, Ky., Saturday. Memphis State won the Midwest Regional Saturday 65-61 over Oklahoma.

Villanova, which last appeared in the Final Four in 1971, was led by Pressley with 15 points, McClain and Gary McLain with 11 each and Jensen with 10.

Brad Daugherty had 17 points for North Carolina, 27-9, which led 22-17 at the half.

Villanova trailed 26-21 after Daugherty hit a layup two minutes into the second half before Ed Pinckney started a 10-0 spurt by hitting a layup.

McLain had the last two baskets to give the Wildcats a 31-26 lead with 14:29 to go.

After North Carolina cut the lead to one on two baskets by Daugherty, Jensen hit three baskets in the 15-18 foot range and Pressley added two buckets, including a slam dunk off a steal that provided a 43-33 lead with 8:13 to play.

North Carolina was never able to get closer than seven points the rest of the way.

It was only Villanova's second victory over North Carolina in six meeting, including a loss to the Tar Heels in the 1982 East Regional finals. Villanova also lost to Houston in a regional championship game in 1983 and fell to Duke in a 1978 regional championship contest.

It was the second time in three years that North Carolina lost in the regional championship game, following an upset by Georgia in the East finals two years ago. The Tar Heels lost to Indiana in the reginal semifinals last year.

Villanova, which finished third in the Big East, had entered the NCAA as the eighth seed and knocked off top-seeded and second-ranked Michigan in the second round and fifth-seeded Maryland Friday night.

Georgetown's there, but is their best yet to come?

Hoyas advanced without looking good, and that's the scariest thing

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP)- Georgetown is in the Final Four for the third time in four years. But are the top-ranked Hoyas playing the way they want to play?

"We're winning, so I guess we are," said point guard Michael Jackson.

The end is more important than the means to the Hoyas because they have so many means to achieve their desired end a second consecutive NCAA basketball tournament title.

"We gear everything we do to the tournament," said Georgetown Coach John Thompson. "This is the Big Top, where the pressure is, where the excitement is. We consider ourselves America's team."

The powerhouse from the nation's capital used an unusual route to get to the tournament semifinals next Saturday in Lexington, Ky.

Saddled with four fouls, All-American center Patrick Ewing missed most of the second half and Jackson missed half of it. But the Hoyas still stopped a tough Georgia Tech team 60-54 to win the East Regional finals Saturday.

Ralph Dalton stepped in for Ewing and Horace Broadnax filled Jackson's playmaking role.

Georgetown trailed 42-38 when Jackson sat down with 10:15 left in the game but outscored the sixth-ranked Yellow Jackets 22-12 the rest of the way.

Broadnax had seven points and Dalton six in that rally. Dalton also led all players with six rebounds and sank both ends of the crucial one-and-one foul situation to give Georgetown a 58-54 edge with 14 seconds to go.

"It's not a strange way to win," said Jackson. "We've been doing that all year. You never know on our team who is going to come out and be the hero...We have that type of team because we have that type of talent.

"I knew I had to hit those free throws or I couldn't go back to the bench," said Dalton.

"Other people realize their responsibilities when Patrick is not in the game," Thompson said.

Yellow Jackets Coach Bobby Cremins called Georgetown "a tremendous team. They never give up. They play with a lot of confidence. They're great fighters."

Georgia Tech, 27-8, had the Hoyas on the ropes with its 12-38 lead and Ewing, who led Georgetown with 14 points, and Jackson on the bench. But it couldn't deliver the knockout punch.

"We wanted to attack," Cremins said. "We had a turnover when we had a chance to tie. We did not capitalize enough."

A big reason was that the Yellow Jackets' Sunday punch, Mark Price's jumper, took the day off.

The second team All-American who had a 19.3 field goal percentage and who led Georgia Tech with a 16.8 point scoring average, hit just 3 of 16 shots.

So Georgetown kept rolling toward its goal of becoming the first team to repeat as national champions since UCLA won for the seventh consecutive time in 1973.

With a 34-2 record, a 16-game winning streak, 45 victories in its last season and tournament experience, Georgetown's goal seems quite attainable.

"There is no pressure like the NCAA tournament," said Thompson. "There's only going to be one team, in the final analysis, that's going to be happy."

Killing Fields, Amadeus capture Oscars

Movie rekindles terror of Cambodian's past

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

NEW YORK - More than five years after his escape from Cambodia, Dith Pran, 42, New York Times photographer and co-subject of The Killing Fields, continues to feel the pain of nearly a half decade of life under communist rule.

"The movie is very hard for me to watch, even the clips," the slim Asian said at a luncheon last week in New York. "The movie people did a good job of showing the horrors--they listened to me a lot."

Those "movie people" not only did a good job, but also captured three Oscars last night. Hain S. Ngor, the man who portrayed Pran in the movie, received an Oscar for best supporting actor. The film also won best cinematography and best film editing.

Dressed in a navy blue suit, his hair slightly dishevelled, Pran--in Cambodia, the family name comes first--told the crowd of about 100 his feelings abut the Cambodian situation, his partner in Cambodia--N.Y. Times correspondent Sydney Schanberg and the realities of the fall of Phnom Penh to Khmer Rouge communists in 1975.

Schanberg's story, which appeared in the New York Times Magazine on Jan. 20, 1980, focused on how he and Pran chose to stay in Cambodia, against the advice of Americans, to report the war between the Khmer Rouge and the American-supported Lon Nol government.

"We were married to the story," Pran said, his small figure behind the podium seeming larger as he continued with his story. "No one ever thought the Khmer Rouge was going to come. We believed they would kill the high officials, but not children and people with a pad and camera."

"I told Sydney it was important he get my family out (of Cambodia) so we could concentrate on our job," Pran said. Schanberg arranged for Pran's wife and children to get to the United States, then the two got down to work. From April 12, 1975, until Pran and Schanberg were separated eight days later, the story of the overthrow of Lon Nol dominated their lives.

But their belief that the Khmer Rouge coup would not be bloody was soon proved wrong. It was a short time later when they came close to dying at the hands of the revolutionaries and they knew for sure that the Khmer Rouge was prepared to use any means to achieve its revolution.

"We learned during the war that the Khmer Rouge would also kill some civilians, but after they liberated the village, we didn't expect any more killing," Pran said.

Pran discovered that was also untrue after he and Schanberg were separated when efforts to forge a British passport for Pran were unsuccessful. Schanberg fled the country with French officers, but Pran had to be left behind. The French feared that if the communists were not fooled by the forgery, they would all be killed. The

Lawsuit threat spurs start-up of baghouse

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

Faced with a federal order forcing the University of Massachusetts' heating plant to be in compliance with the Clean Air Act by April 6, Physical Plant officials hope to begin operating the plant's newly constructed exhaust filtration system today.

A letter officials received March 7 from the Environmental Protection Agency gave the University 30 days to start up its $5 million "baghouse" connected to the heating plant's three main coal fired boilers. If this deadline is not met, the University may be taken to court, officials said.

The boilers cough up about 300 tons of unburnt coal dust every year almost five times the legal limit, according to the EPA and the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE). Since 1980, UMass has missed four DEQE deadlines to comply with the 1970 federal anti pollution law.

Construction on the baghouse, which is intended to catch dust and ashes before they go up the chimney, began in 1983, but delays in equipment deliveries and a series of technical problems set back its completion.

Physical Plant Director Roger Cherewatti said yesterday that additional mechanical and electrical difficulties complicated two attempts earlier this month to operate the system. Today's start depends on whether Physical Plant workers succeeded late last night in fixing faulty wiring and aligning fans to propel the exhaust, he said. "This is normal in any starting up of a $5 million operation."

Catherine McNair, a compliance engineer at the EPA's Boston office, said the University has not contacted the agency since the letter was sent.

"They keep telling me that the baghouse is very near completion," she said. "But I haven't heard back from them, so I don't know what kind of glitches they might be having."

McNair also said she "couldn't say" whether the EPA will, as it has threatened, refer the case to the U.S. Justice Department if the baghouse is not operating by April 6.

Cherewatti said once the baghouse is on line, the state Department of Capital Planning and Operations, which handles state building contracts, the DEQE and the EPA will conduct smokestack tests to ensure that coal emissions are within legal limits.

UMass professor continues battle to aid handicapped

By BRION McALARNEY
Collegian Correspondent

Professor Benjamin Ricci is a fighter.

And it is that attitude along with regard for his mentally retarded son that has drawn Ricci into the ring against the state over poor conditions in facilities for the mentally handicapped.

"I think whenever anyone tries to effect social reform, one needs to be persistent," the University of Massachusetts exercise science professor said.

In recognition of that attitude and persistence, Ricci was awarded the 1985 Humanitarian Award by the National Association of Superintendents of Public Residential Facilities for the Mentally Retarded at the group's annual conference last month.

For Ricci, the battle began in 1968 when he "began to realize that the state was derelict in its duties" of maintaining adequate conditions for the mentally handicapped.

"The state was the biggest drug pusher of all time," Ricci said. "They were dispensing psychotropic (mind controlling) drugs at an incredible rate."

"The conditions at the state school in Belchertown were inhumane," he said. "There were no therapists, not enough staff, not enough privacy, toilets without seats."

Ricci set a national precedent by filing a lawsuit against the state, asserting that "rights of protection" under the constitution had been violated.

Ricci won the lawsuit, Ricci v. State Commissioner of Health (1972), and the presiding judge "ordered the state to get to work."

Ricci said his actions did not fare well with some UMass administrators who feared the lawsuit would threaten state funding to the University. "The provost, (at that time) Robert Gluckstein, called me a disgrace to the University," he said.

Ricci is currently writing a book about his experience in court and with the UMass administration during the time of the lawsuit.

"They were weak-kneed," he said of that administration. "They talked about social obligation but never practiced it."

WORLD AND NATIONAL NEWS

Spotlight forces N.U. action

BOSTON (AP) - Northeastern University has suspended several faculty members and cut its spring courses for police officers by nearly two-thirds while it investigates allegations of teacher misconduct, officials said yesterday.

The announcement followed disclosures in The Boston Globe about teaching practices at the University's law enforcement program. The newspaper reported that some faculty members in the night school falsified attendance records, let classes out hours early and gave students answers to exams.

At a news conference, Associate Provost Arthur B. Smith said the allegations came as a surprise to University officials, who began an investigation on March 14, the day they learned of the charges.

"How this went undetected? I don't know," Smith said. "Embarrassing? It's more than embarrassing. It's shocking. It's totally, at this point, unexpected."

"I want to make it very clear that Northeastern University does not condone and will not tolerate activity of the type reported today," he said. "Individuals found to be engaged in such activity, after a full and due process hearing, will be dealt with swiftly and severely."

The Globe's report focused on the state's $12 million-a-year Police Pay Incentive Program. Under the 15-year-old program, officers attending night school for law enforcement courses receive a 10 percent raise for an associate degree, a 20 percent hike for a bachelor's degree and a 25 percent increase for a master's degree.

Of the 1,811 police officers who have earned degrees since 1970, a total of 775 have graduated from Northeastern.

Faculty members who were "alluded to in any way" in The Globe have been suspended and their courses eliminated for the spring semester. He refused to name those who had been suspended, but said they included "four of five" teachers.

According to The Globe, Brockton Police Lt. Peter V. Crone, an 11-year instructor in criminology, told officers that they did not have to show up at his Wednesday classes if they instead wrote five-page papers on "any subject that interests you."

Man killed, another injured outside Grateful Dead show

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - A Northampton man was killed and a Hingham teen-ager critically injured in separate falls as thousands of Grateful Dead rock fans jammed downtown streets and parking lots.

Matthew Ringey, 22 of Northampton had been in Springfield Sunday night in hopes of attending a concert by the rock group at the Civic Center, but was unable to get in. Police were unsure whether James S. Wrede, 17, of Hingham was also here for the concert.

"We don't know whether they jumped or fell," said Detective Capt. Ernest Stelzer.

Police said the incidents occurred during a concert by the Grateful Dead at the nearby Civic Center attended by 10,000, and during a time when there were heavy concentrations of young people downtown. Six narcotics arrests were also made and one man complained of being assaulted, police said.

Civic Center director Paul T. Whitehead estimated up to 3,000 fans were turned away Sunday night.

Ringey was pronounced dead on arrival at Baystate Medical Center's Springfield unit after he plummeted from the fourth level of the Forbes and Wallace parking garage about 10:30 p.m. Sunday.

"At this point, we don't know exactly what happened," Stelzer said. "We have people who saw him go up there, but nobody actually saw him go off."

About a half-hour later and a block away, Wrede went off an elevated portion of Interstate 91 and landed in the parking lot of the Marriott Hotel, Stelzer said.

Wrede was listed in critical condition Monday in Baystate Medical Center's Wesson Unit, Stelzer said.

Tufts opens arms to refugees

MEDFORD, Mass. (AP) - Tufts University has opened the pulpit of Goddard Chapel to political refugees from El Salvador and Guatemala who want to explain why they fled Central America. University officials announced yesterday.

The refugees, who are in the United States illegally, will be given sanctuary while in the chapel, although the university will not provide them with housing, said the Rev. William "Scotty" McLennan, the University's chaplain.

"What we're trying to do is what we think is appropriate to a university, a place for learning, and part of that is to provide an opportunity for refugees to speak out about their plight," said McLennan,a member of the Tufts Sanctuary Study Committee.

"Sanctuary is such a clear humanitarian response" to refugees who fear death, imprisonment or torture if they return to their native countries, he added.

It's still day only for Cubs

CHICAGO (AP) - There will be joy in Wrigleyville, the mighty Cubs have struck out.

"Yes, you're out, O-U-T. The Cubs are out," Circuit Judge Richard Curry said yesterday in upholding state and city laws that effectively ban night baseball at Wrigley Field, the only major league ballpark in America without lights.

Curry's ruling came in response to a suit filed in December by the Cubs seeking to have those laws declared unconstitutional.

General Manager Dallas Green said in Mesa, Ariz., where the Cubs are in spring training, that he was "very, very disappointed" with the ruling.

While he made no reference to rumors that the Cubs would move from Wrigley Field if they couldn't get lights, he said, "We consider this very, very serious business."

Many residents, including a few bleacher bums, an often rowdy collection of die-hard fans rejoiced at Curry's ruling.

NORTHAMPTON — When most people clean out their attics, history does not change, but when your name is John and you're the son of the late President Calvin Coolidge the possibility of change exists.

The Forbes Library here recently acquired the only known collection of correspondences from Coolidge's presidential years. The collection, previously believed destroyed, was given to the library by John Coolidge, who made the discovery last summer while cleaning out his attic in Plymouth Notch, VT.

The correspondences are of "particular significance" because they are a new primary source of information for the Forbes collection directly related to the Coolidge years at the White House, Lilai Bisaillon, director of the library said.

The collection began in 1920 when Coolidge was nominated for vice president. In addition to the recent donation, the collection includes his pre- and post presidential correspondences and personal library memorabilia from his life.

The new find includes more than 150 separate files of personal correspondences that arrived in a large carton with some of the folders partially mice eaten, Larry Wikander, a former librarian, said.

The correspondences include a congratulatory letter to the recently nominated vice president candidate Herbert Hoover and letters from Will Rogers, Joseph Pulitzer and David Lawrence soliciting Coolidge for an editorial. Lawrence later founded U.S. News and World Report.

The Forbes library is currently sorting the donation to be indexed and put on microfilm in anticipation of opening it to the public.

"Ninety nine and a half percent of anything that anyone would want to know about Coolidge would find it here," Bisaillon said, adding that the Forbes owns the single largest collection on Coolidge outside the Library of Congress.

Calvin Coolidge was born in Plymouth, VT. in 1872 and graduated from Amherst College in 1895. He then began practicing law in Northampton in 1897 and later became mayor of that city in 1909. He served in various state offices from state Senator to Governor. He was elected vice president in 1920 and President in 1924. He served until 1928 and died in Northampton in 1933.

Professor Benjamin Ricci.

These administrators have since retired from the University.

Though Ricci had problems with officials, he received support from the faculty.

"He has worked very hard and made considerable progress in his field, and this reflects well on the department," said Priscilla Clarkson, acting chairwoman of the exercise science department.

Ricci emphasizes that his first priority is teaching at the University, which he has been doing since 1950. But he works "summers, weekends, and breaks," fighting for the rights of the mentally retarded not only in Massachusetts, but in other states including Florida, Kansas, Iowa, and California, Clarkson said.

Since the original lawsuit, the other four state schools for the mentally retarded in Massachusetts also filed suit at his urging, Ricci said.

Ricci asserts that the bulging bureaucracy is the underlying problem of mental health care. "Mental retardation has become a justification for hiring a huge bureaucracy," he said.

"Give me a core of people who work with people period, and pay them well...let them develop pride in their work. Local problems can be handled better without a huge overhead."

Ricci said he came to this conclusion while travelling in Norway in 1971.

"Their (mental health) buildings were clean, comfortable...they were light years ahead of us...they recognized the worth of an individual called retarded.

"They had 12 people in their office, we have 300-400 in Boston," he said.

In reference to the recent state policy of deinstitutionalizing state school residents, Ricci said, "They (residents) are being thrown out without service, you can't run a society that way."

By lecturing over the years Ricci has raised money for the "Friends of Belchertown," a group formed to help finance lawsuits against the state.

Ricci credits the media and UMass students with furthering the cause for the mentally retarded.

UMass students have raised money for the "Friends of Belchertown" and have worked at the Boltwood school, he said.

More night classes in works

By CHRISTOPHER SKLARZ
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts will expand its campus to the western part of the state this fall by offering manufacturing courses through the School of Engineering in Springfield as a part of the masters program.

"The reason is that Chancellor (Joseph D.) Duffey is making a new thrust to support western Massachusetts and its economy while this also coincides with engineering's need to support industry," said Harvey Stone, the officer for development and special projects in the department of engineering.

The program consists of half of the courses in mechanical engineering and the remainder in industrial engineering, he said. There will be two different night classes offered each semester to enable full-time employees to continue their education. Stone said that it will take students two and a half years to complete the program to receive a masters in manufacturing enginering.

"It will cost 8,000 dollars (per student) for the whole program because it receives no state funding and we have to budget it on a break even proposition," Stone said.

Stone cited the increase in business productivity and use of computers as reasons behind the recent demand for the degree.

"Manufacturing engineers are becoming more and more important in today's companies. For a long time they were not required to have degrees but times have changed and there is now a demand for them," Stone added.

Besides increasing emphasis to form the link with Springfield as a reason for development of the program Stone said, "The new thrust is that we want to deal with the small companies of the area. The small manufacturers are the bulk of the economy."

'Quest for Technology' set to begin

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

A technology transfer program new to the University of Massachusetts will begin tomorrow and Thursday with six seminars directed by the Control Data Corporation.

Jamie Chernoff, staff member of the Chancellor's Working Group on Economic Development, said yesterday the "Quest for Technology" program will provide another outlet for work done by University students, faculty, and staff.

"The purpose of the program is for the University community to identify models and various applications of their expertise and to share them with groups outside the University," Chernoff said.

"It's another outlet for the fine work that goes on here and it also provides an opportunity for reward to the University and innovators for their work," she said.

Chernoff explained that any student, faculty member, or staffer who believes they have a model or product which may be applicable to corporations and industries may submit ideas for a free evaluation.

Control Data will evaluate submissions and determine whether an idea or model has an application in industry and who may be able to use the information. Submissions remain the property of the originator and not Control Data, she said.

The University of Michigan at Ann Arbor and the entire state higher education system of Louisiana have been utilizing the program for about four years, Chernoff said.

University administrators became interested after working with Control Data on other programs through the Chancellor's Working Group on Economic Development to extend University resources to the outside community, she said.

Six identical seminars will be held at 9 a.m., noon, and 3:30 p.m., in room 221 of the Lederle Graduate Research Center tomorrow and Thursday. The seminars will explain the program and its goals in further detail, Chernoff said.

Marx to be focus of lectures

"Moneybags Must be so Lucky: Reflections on the Philosophical Significance of the Literary Structure of Marx's Capital" will be the topic of three lectures at the University of Massachusetts beginning tomorrow night.

The lectures, sponsored by the national honor society Phi Beta Kappa, will be delivered by philosophy professor Robert Paul Wolff, the Romanelli-Phi Beta Kappa Professor of Philosophy for 1984-1985. The position is awarded for "achievements in the field and for significant contributions to public understanding of philosophy" and includes a $6,000 stipend.

Wolff, a Harvard graduate and recipient of the Chancellor's Medal, is credited by the University Office of Public Information for founding the UMass major in Social Thought and Political Economy, or STEPC.

Wolff has said that his lectures will study Karl Marx's "Das Kapital" and its meaning as a work of art.

The lectures will be held at 8 p.m. over the next three Wednesday nights at the School of Management Auditorium and are open to the public. Tomorrow's lecture is titled "The Ontilogical Significance of Literary Style."

The April 3 lecture will be "The Factory and the Caves: The Inverted World of Capitalism" and the April 10 lecture is titled "Mrs. Feinschmeck's Blintzes, or Notes on the Crackpot Categories of Bourgeois Economy."

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Not all of us vote only on fiscal issues

Overhearing an underclass business major griping about do-gooders—how they "ought to join the Peace Corps or shut-up," one senses a certain backlash at those of a liberal persuasion. And when it is suggested that a local media machine change to reflect its changing readership (and I assume—a more fiscally conservative "Yuppie" outlook), I gather it's an appropriate time for some reflections on the local political scene.

Rob Skelton

The Roth-Burgess victory in the SGA serves to remind us of our common liberal heritage as students. Under the "Progressive" banner, and running on a platform that stressed civic as much as fiscal issues, the experienced team of Stacey and Dan will most likely go "with," rather than "counter" the majority of students' interests.

The Hackett-Cerrato ticket, ironically, was the one of change in this race. While the previous power-brokers in the SGA threw their support to the eventual winners, there remains a substantial number of dissatisfied students activists who desire complete change at the top, change that the Hackett-Cerrato team would have hoped to implement.

Starting with more budget accountability, which is only fair, the election of this ticket could have set in motion a trend reflective of national politics—conservative leaders dominating for years, and presiding with vigor over a program to cut government involvement to the bone—which, in the long run, may not be so fair.

Already we felt the knife, in the form of an attempt to cut student involvement in the BOG—a group which represents our interests in a property that we support, sustain, and otherwise take part in. Other student-interest groups such as SCERA considered a "pork-barrel," or by "unnecessary" certain administrative and student concerns, may be in danger of a similar cuts. Probably there is less reason for worry now, but as events have shown, you can never tell.

The revolutionary period of the 1960s brought about many of the benefits that our multi-racial and multi-cultural society is beginning to be deprived of—again. The turbulence of that era will not return soon—the wheels of revolution turn slowly and conditions will never quite be the same. That doesn't mean liberals are doing nothing worthwhile and thus should be the object of conservative scorn.

We need the liberals. Just as any human needs occasional emotional catharsis, we all need to be reminded that yes, nukes can kill all, that humans are humans, and that rights and equal opportunities are not reserved for a few.

That's why it is so reassuring that the student body here voted in a couple of people who stand amongst other things, for human rights. When the defeated two-out-of-three candidacies barely give lip-service to the Third World community, and Roth and Burgess get swept into office, future aspirants for the position will have to plan carefully, and not have to learn a lesson in alienation, as did occur this year.

Future candidates will also have to search their souls and their possible criminal records; we simply can't have as a student leader one who steals candy and cake, no matter the justification. That it became known attests to the integrity of the informer. What kind of bad joke was that anyway, Keohan?

Keep religion beautiful: avoid politics

Stephen C. Erickson

Most of us consider the decision of our founding fathers to separate church and state as a just and logical one. We can all take solace in that our temporal authorities do not have undue influence over the spiritual. Although the United States government does leave religion alone for the most part, the same is not true for the reverse. Churches today frequently involve themselves in politics. Although this is not a new phenomenon, it is not necessarily a good one either.

Of course, the church must speak out against some things and sometimes religious leaders can be too quiet. During the persecution of Jews in Nazi Germany, for example, the Christian churches were strangely silent. The church has an obligation to speak out and act on behalf of the weak. Indeed, the church ought to be a steadfast refuge for those in need. When the church is engaged in pursuing ends, it is well within its ethical boundaries, but when it begins to prescribe political solutions, or the means to an end, then it is encroaching into areas in which it has no business, and probably no expertise either.

The central problem with the church advocating a certain political line is that the church is supposed to be a mouthpiece of God. The dilemma of church political activism is reminiscent of the Doonesbury cartoon where the Reagan campaign runs commercials with God endorsing the president for re-election. A political message delivered from the pulpit is often received with undue authority. The altar ought not to be used as a political platform. Church officials and policy makers are not usually elected to their positions by their parishioners, and if they are, do not run on the basis of their politics. Therefore, when a religious group takes a political stand, its official stand is not necessarily representing "the church," if a church is to be defined as all those who comprise it.

Unfortunately, it seems that our churches are becoming more and more politicized. First there were the cases where offering collected in many Protestant churches belonging to the World Council of Churches found its way into the hands of leftist guerrilla movements. Then, of course, there is Jerry Falwell and his "Moral Majority," who would tell us that his politics are more Christian than liberal politics. There are also the Catholic bishops' pastoral letters, the first promoting a nuclear freeze, a second advocating the expansion of the welfare state, and most recently, a statement condemning the funding of the MX missile. If this politicizing of religion keeps up, we will be substituting political parties for religious denominations.

Our society is filled with individuals capable and qualified to debate any issue under the sun, and the vast majority of these people, no doubt, base their decisions on a morality at least derived from Judeo-Christian values. Preachers are trained in theology, not politics, economics, or foreign policy, and must learn to use their position with restraint and prudence.

Take the pastoral letter on the U.S. economy. No one doubts the Christian mandate requiring one to help the poor. However, the bishops have assumed, in this case, that a more Socialist oriented economy is better able to help the poor than a Capitalist one. There is absolutely no evidence to support this, but whether true or not, the bishops, who are bishops and not economists, are arguing on behalf of something that is well outside of their field, and what's more, they are giving God's stamp of approval to their position.

The clergy of our churches has a sacred and vital role to play. It ought to preach on behalf of charity, but not whether charity should be private or public. The church must advocate for peace, but not whether peace is best maintained through unilateral disarmament or detering aggression. Religion can play a role of supreme importance in our lives. It can shape and mold us to be better individuals, provide comfort when we are discouraged, and drive us to great achievements. Let us not dirty something as beautiful and important as religion with politics.

In a different light

You think nothing goes on here while you're away, right? Wrong. This campus is quiet, but by no means unpopulated. Sometimes you can see things about UMass that we all ordinarily miss.

Take the Fine Arts Center, for instance. It is easy to succumb to the general condemnation of that enormous, while pile: "a mistake," "a monstrosity," "totally lacking in human scale"—even the University administration, in forbidding all recreational use of the plaza and reflecting pools, seems to have acquiesced in some conspiracy to declare the structure merely functional, blind and cold.

I saw quite a different Fine Arts Center when I came in to study one Sunday afternoon during the March vacation. The sky above and behind the building was blue, patched all over with fierce, rolling clouds. Sea gulls flapped and wheeled fighting the wind. The sun cut sharp, geometrical shadows in the interstices of the building and on the concrete plaza, where two fellows in knee pads were skateboarding. (That's not allowed. There's a sign that says so.) Another young man was pacing steadily up and down the walkway that runs the length of the building, playing of all things—a bagpipe. (Maybe that's not allowed either, but no one stopped him.)

Clearly he had come here to enjoy the effect of his music upon the fine echoes underneath the arches. He wore no kilt, just jeans and loafers, a casual piper, walking slowly up and down the steps and in and out of the columns. Sunlight glinted on his black and silver pipes, the deep drone and the sharp soprano notes bounced and reverberated off the walls of the great pile, filling the whole plaza with sound. Everyone nearby was watching and listening. Three men waiting for a ride applauded. Here, surely, was human scale. I think the ancient Athenians, who worked and lived in the shadow of the Parthenon, would have liked our Fine Arts Center; so would the Aztecs and Mayans who built the great temple pyramids in Central America.

Sometimes it is good to be dwarfed by a building, and to find your own way of establishing humanness against its vast bulk.

Baby-killing myths an injustice to China

In a column March 12, on female infanticide, Diane Lane made the statement "...China's citizens are killing their girl babies at an alarming rate." We would like to know just what that rate is, what studies or statistics she is basing that rate on and what makes it so alarming. Is it, for example, higher than the United States? It is true that there have been some recent anecdotal accounts of Chinese parents, wishing to have a son as well as conform to the government's one child policy, killing their newborn daughters. But, there have always been anecdotal accounts about China circulating in the West--many of them complete nonsense.

So little is known about what really goes on in China, with its one billion inhabitants, that it seems anyone with a particular political or moral ax to grind can hold China up as an example to praise or revile without fear of contradiction. Taking the population as a whole, are female children in China really being treated worse than in other countries? Considering the availability of medical care to all segments of Chinese society, and the lack of evidence for the kind of widespread child abuse which is found in the United states, I would say that Chinese baby girls are very fortunate to be born where they are.

following four and a half years were a terror for Pran. He spent his time in labor camps starving and working. But, he said never blamed Schanberg for leaving him. "He was doing his best to disguise me," he said.

Pran remembered his days as a peasant laborer: "Anything you see, you grab and put into your pocket," he recalled. "When you know an animal can eat grass, you eat grass. When you see an animal eat fruit, you eat fruit."

Meanwhile, Schanberg was back in Los Angeles taking time off with his family and trying to find Pran. It was a difficult time for him also, according to his story, "The Death and Life of Dith Pran."

"For long periods of time, I did not want to see anyone face to face," Schanberg wrote. "I would closet myself in my corner of the house and, when there were no more letters to write or calls to make (in search of Pran), I would read every page of the local newspaper or watch television."

While Schanberg was searching, Pran was fighting for his life.

"I survived because I played stupid, I believed the Buddha helped me and I kept faith," Pran said. "In life in four years there, you lose all freedom—complete—below zero. If you run away, your family will be killed, if you complain, they (Khmer Rouge) arrest you and beat you."

Pran said although the movie was realistic, it did not show the full extent of the violence and brutality he suffered.

"They minimized the brutality. I understand that," he said. "Even the dress in the film looked better. And the Khmer Rouge looked mean, like a demon face, meaner than the film."

Pran eventually escaped across the border to Thailand in October 1979. Schanberg, after years of bad dreams and fruitless correspondence, was finally reunited with his friend six days after Pran found freedom in a refugee camp. He was weak from malnutrition, his teeth rotting from poor nourishment.

Both are now working in New York for The Times, but neither has forgotten the experience. And Pran does not seem bitter; he only expresses hope.

"I would like to see the American government do something," he said. "I worry, get nightmares and dream about Cambodia. What I want first is humanitarian aid, I don't believe weapons will stop this war."

Pran, as a Cambodian, sees the world as one dominated by three superpowers—not only the Soviet Union and the United States, but also China. And he says none has done its part to stop the violence that continues.

"I wouldn't blame one superpower," he said, his arms now moving to help him express his emotion, held back somewhat by his thick Khmer accent. "I blame the administration, not the people, because the administration can stop it."

Pran's solution to the problem is to use money and "hand it to the people, not through the politicians and people with arms. I get so mad when I see pictures of Khmer Rouge people carrying rice," he said.

Pran said he is promoting his film while sending the message of peace.

"The movie is very, very good. It's a message to the next generation, and I hope parents will tell their children to see this," he said.

Pran also said he agrees with protesting as a way of doing one's part in trying to accomplish peace.

"Guns don't help," he said. "Protesting at least makes noise and makes the young generation understand. If you feel sorry, why not do things a different way than sending armies."

Black women will meet to discuss important issues

By KIMBERLY BURGE
Collegian Staff

Starting tomorrow, a series of issues important to Black women will be discussed in an eight week Black Women's Issues Group sponsored by the Third World Women's Program at the Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts.

Renata L. Nero, a graduate student in clinical psychology, will be facilitating the meetings. She said she is pleased to lead the group. "It will give me the opportunity to see how other Black women feel," Nero said.

The focus of the group will be decided by the participants. The group will meet until May 8. Loti Reyes-Ocasio, coordinator of the Third World Women's Program did not have an estimate on how many women will be attending. But she said there is a lot of interest. "Historically, issues for Black women have been different from non-black women," Nero said.

"Third World women need space to get together and talk about issues and what is important in their lives," said Loti Reyes Ocasio, co-coordinator of the Third World Women's Program at the Every Woman's Center.

Unemployment, low pay, and single parenting are the most common problems Black women face.

The Black Women's Issues Group is one in a series of issues groups for Third World women sponsored by the Everywoman's Center.

The idea spurred from an open house last November where Third World women brainstormed topics for groups. "Third World women need space to get together and talk about issues and what is important in their lives. We have to set up a network and talk to each other," Reyes Ocasio said.

Reyes Ocasio said she hopes once each group sets an agenda, all the groups will convene and talk abut the similarities.

She also hopes to develop other programs based on the interests identified in these groups.

Reagan's budget defeat a priority

By NORMAN HILL
A. Philip Randolph Institute

Reagan's second term promises to be a fitting sequel to the first. In 1981, consistent with his philosophy of reducing the role of government in non-defense matters, Reagan easily pushed through a tax cut that reduced federal revenues, thereby stimulating an economic recovery and bringing on unprecedented budget deficits.

This in turn has created a strong pressure to reduce government spending in non-defense areas, since Reagan won his second election partly on the promise not to raise taxes. The areas in which Reagan now proposes to cut are mainly the various subsidies benefiting the middle class, around which a great consensus was once built—civil service and military pensions, college tuition loans, for the middle class, farm price supports, Medicare, Amtrak, etc.—as well as some further cuts in job training, Medicaid, and other programs for the poor.

This was a masterful political stroke on Reagan's part; he created the inevitability of the basic policy he wants to pursue (cutting spending) by demonstrating the political unpopularity of the alternative (raising taxes).

However, the clear message from the electorate that it did not want taxes raised becomes a little less clear when we consider, first, that the tax burden is unfairly distributed, and many taxpayers would be happy to see the system reformed; and second, that the proposals to cut out federal expenditures in the area mentioned above may be a consequence the electorate will not swallow so easily. Americans may have to face squarely the question of whether and how they intend to pay for what they want.

Meanwhile, a mountain of debt has been sustaining the economic recovery, which depends on foreign investment in a strong dollar. The unprecedented dominance of the dollar over other major currencies is causing a horrendous U.S. trade deficit that keeps growing every year. Mondale tried to warn the American people during his campaign that the recovery was built on sand—internal and external debt—but they believed the evidence of present prosperity rather than his gloomy soothsaying.

Not only has the U.S. lost ground steadily in the exports of manufactured goods such as steel and autos, but even high-tech goods have felt the sting of the strong dollar, with exports down and with imports growing from a quarter to almost half of the U.S. market share.

Unemployment is very high in relation to the economic recovery, which creates additional pressures on the Treasury, both in lost revenue and in transfer payments. The lowest rate of unemployment during the recovery was 7.2 percent, and just crept up to 7.4 percent. The rate of unemployment during the cyclical business peak of December 1969 was 3.4 percent and has been climbing at every peak since then.

The economy has been held back somewhat for fear of reviving inflation out of the economy, through both high unemployment and a strong dollar. But there are also many people interested in a strong economy and a strong America, enough people, one hopes, to keep Congress from running about in confusion in the face of irresponsible taxing, spending, and monetary policies.

The possibilities for the growth of coalitions around alternative policies in the next few years will grow, as the large majority of Americans start to face the consequences of national indebtedness and industrial weakness.

Blacks and labor in particular have an interest in seeing the federal government not only recover the economic strength of the nation but also maintain its role as "promotor of the general welfare." They would therefore counterpropose that the present policies be replaced by a more responsible tax system and policies of high economic growth that would lower unemployment. It ought not be impossible to find allies in promoting those policies and in defending the role of the federal government in advancing the good of all.

Today's problems caused by past

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

The Spaniards' conquest of South America and organizational problems in these countries after their independence have contributed to the social, political and economical problems facing the area, according to an educator and diplomat.

Mario Laserna, founder of the University of Los Andes in Colombia will be speaking on "Latin America: Present Conflicts Born of Past Decisions" at 8 p.m. on Wednesday in the Browsing Room of the William Allan Neilson Library at Smith College.

"Without the conquest of the Spaniards we would not be talking of these problems facing Latin America today. The Spaniards altered the social structure of the Americas," he added.

In his lecture detailing 160 years of history, Laserna will show the inter relation of the problems in the area. "There is a unity in the institutional systems that determine the same problems. Although the general problems of a country in the area are different, the institutional ones are similar," he said.

Today, Latin America suffers from political and social oppression in countries such as Chile, constant warfare in Nicaragua, and a drug war in Colombia and Mexico.

Latin America is also hampered by economic debts causing internal problems due to the austerity measures set by the lending institutions.

Laserna said Latinos have to organize socially to change their destiny. A former president of the National University of Colombia, he said education is only a part of the plan. "Education is a means by which to study the plan, but you need a basic political infrastructure to carry them out."

With a history of social unrest and political upheaval in Latin America, Laserna said there will be no change unless there is, "visible forms of conditions to produce a system."

"That is part of a historical process that must be understood, it was not made up by anybody." He added unless changes occur to deviate the history in Latin America, the area "will be tied to the historical decisions and conditions."

Ruddock's election keeps tradition alive

By KIMBERLY BURGE
Collegian Staff

With the election of John Ruddock as speaker of the undergraduate student senate at the University of Massachusetts, he's keeping a tradition alive.

Since 1975, the position has been traditionally held by Third World students. "In 1975, the position was held by Brian DeLima, then by Ed Lee, and Sharon Davies. With my election we are returning to that tradition," he said.

Elections were held March 13. Ruddock received 45 votes in the speaker's race.

Ruddock is a College of Arts and Science major with a Bachelor's degree with an independent concentration in perfoming arts. After he graduates this year, he plans on attending law school and studying entertainment law. He eventually hopes to open and run his own performing arts company.

As speaker, his responsibilities will be to "act as spokesperson for the undergraduate senate, facilitate discussions and debates, chair Third World committees, act as one of the many liasons between the administration and the students by voicing the concerns of students to the UMass administration," he said.

The native New Yorker joined the Student Senate during his freshman year because he felt he could use it as a "Mechanism to voice the sentiment of many of my peers. I also wanted to help promote unity through political action."

"I think he's great. I think that he'll do a good job," said Chris Sullivan, outgoing speaker.

By being involved in the Student Senate, he has gained many valuable rewards. "I have gained invaluable skills in leadership development, intercommunication, crisis time management, and conflict training," Ruddock said.

He said his election "is a sign that although we (Third World people) have lots of goals to achieve, the efforts of many people (both Third World and non-Third World) helped make my candidacy a reality. It made a precedented remark that people of different cultures can come together," he said.

Ruddock added people of different cultural backgrounds can work together and push their differences aside when the ultimate goals will benefit both groups.

"I'm not saying they have to lose their identity," he noted that working in the Senate, "I can help to make a contribution towards raising the level of social respect in regards to the uniqueness of people's individuality."

His election will give him an opportunity to work on the issues he helped carry through the campaign such as the enforcement of Affirmative Action guidelines. He also hopes to work on university wide committees and work with the SGA's outreach program to inner neighboring cities and in the promotion of academic and corecurriculum activism of high school students for a better college preparation.

In addition, Ruddock hopes to work on "issues affecting students on campus."

He said his goals will be "to ensure that students rights do not diminish." But work towards making a greater participation and influencing students to become involved in the university's decision making process.

During his student years at UMass, Ruddock has kept busy. So busy, in fact that to find him is like looking for a needle in a haystack.

He has worked in various committees of the SGA, worked as political advisor for the Commuter Area Government, considered to be assistant to the Speaker with Sharon Davies, assistant to the student's trustees, and was co-coordinator for the Third World Caucus.

Africa, Japan topics of discussion

"Africa yesterday, today and tomorrow" is the topic of a panel discussion at 7:15 p.m. Wednesday in the Red Room of Converse Hall at Amherst College.

Panelists in the discussion will be Mr. Babu, former cabinet minister of the Tanzania government and former visiting professor of Black Studies at Amherst College. Presently, he is contributing editor of Africa Now.

Professor Ngethe will be the second panelist. He is a former professor of political science at the University of Nairobi, Kenya. Presently, he is a professor of political science at St. Lawrence University.

Moderating the panel will be professor Kebbede of the geography department at Mount Holyoke College.

The American Concentration Camps: Wartime Necessity or Tragic Error?" is the topic of discussion by Minoru Yasui at 7:30 p.m. Friday in room 162 of the Campus Center.

Min Yasui, chairperson of the National Redress Committee, is involved in the effort to obtain apology and compensation for Japanese-Americans detained during World War II.

The program will be co-sponsored by the Third World Women's Program of EWC and AFSC.

Western Mass. Latin America Solidarity Committee has one work/study position for assistant co-ordinator. Individuals should have good organizational skills and be able to work without supervision. Applicants may apply at Rm. 404 SUB. Deadline is 29 March. Women and Third World People are encouraged to apply. WMLASC is an AA/EEO employer.

Junior lefthander Lynn Stockley tossed a no-hitter and three one-hitters during the softball team's trip to South Carolina.

Youngsters vital to fortunes of Minutewomen softball team

Pitchers combine for three no-hitters

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The record isn't impressive. Elaine Sortino's University of Massachusetts softball team posted a 3-8-1 record on their trip down South, the first losing record UMass has ever compiled down South.

But a few things were different for the Minutewomen this time around. UMass took down eight freshmen and no seniors and were challenged by national powers Indiana, South Carolina, and Eastern Michigan.

"We have some freshmen in key spots," Sortino said, "and when they settle down we'll be ok."

Defensive errors, something very uncharacteristic of Massachusetts softball the past few years, plagued the Minutewomen all week long.

Errors cost UMass in a 1-0 loss to South Carolina, a 4-3 loss to Indiana, two 4-3 losses to Eastern Michigan and a 6-5 loss to Miami of Ohio. Princeton also beat UMass 3-1.

"The defense was inconsistent. They would come up with great plays and blow the routine ones. In some pressure situations, they got a little rattled," Sortino said.

The pitching, on the other hand, was spectacular. Massachusetts pitching tossed three no-hitters and four no-hitters.

Junior co-captain Lynn Stockley (15-8, 1.18 ERA last year) came home with a 1-4 slate. But the all-conference lefthander threw a no-hitter against Northern Illinois (1-0 win) and three one-hitters in losses to Miami of Ohio (1-0), South Carolina (1-0), and Indiana (4-3).

Cathy Reed, a junior righthander, also threw a one-hitter in the 14-1 win over Drexel. Reed was 14-4 with a 1.32 ERA last year.

And the newest addition to the staff, freshman Lisa Rever, all-New Jersey last spring, tossed a no-hitter in her collegiate debut, a 19-0 win over St. Peter's. She also tossed a no-hitter in the 1-1 tie with South Carolina.

The pitchers are also hitting this year and although UMass pitchers haven't gone to the plate since 1982, Stockley, Reed, a dynamic high school slugger and Rever excelled at the plate.

Rever may see time in the outfield in order to keep her bat in the lineup. Rever's long, deep shot with two runners on, two out in the bottom of the seventh in the 6-5 loss to Miami was caught cutting short another UMass rally. Stockley also saw time as the DH.

The defense is young, very young. Freshman Martha Jamieson saw most of the action at first base. Junior co-captain Beth Talbott (C/1B) was hit in the shoulder with a foul tip and saw limited action all week. That also left freshman Ilene Freeman behind the plate most of the week.

Talbott, who should be ready for UMass' northern opener against Holy Cross on Wednesday (3 p.m. in Worcester), has the highest returning batting average, .344 with 16 RBI. Sophomore Anne King can also spell relief at the catcher's position.

All-conference sophomore Carol Frattaroli saw a lot of time at second base while freshman Paige Kopcza began the task of replacing two-time All-American Allyson Rioux at shortstop.

The outfield will be more experienced with junior Sally Maher (.331, 21 RBI, five triples and doubles) finally moving to centerfield. Maher, an All-Conference pick at first, played first the last two years to compensate for team injuries.

Sophomore Emily Bietsch and freshman Chris Ciepiela and Leigh Petroski will also see action in the outfield.

Hitting wise, UMass hit the ball hard, they just couldn't find the gaps, Sortino said. "The freshmen really swung the bats. It was unbelievable," Sortino said.

The top six of Reed, Stockley, Fila, Freeman, Kopcza, and Jamieson launched a few shots. UMass had 25 hits against St. Peters. And the Minutewomen staged some late rallies, something that last year's record-setting (wins) 29-12 team couldn't do.

While Sortino doesn't like the losing record, the season is young. UMass will be shooting to qualify for the Atlantic 10 tournament and the automatic NCAA berth that goes with it. UMass has to finish in the top four in the seven team league to make it to Penn State on May 3-5.

"I think it'll be a dog-eat-dog season," Sortino said, "Everybody is kind of young."

Besides home dates with arch-rival Connecticut, Atlantic 10 rivals Rhode Island, Penn State and Duquesne, nationally ranked (Division II) Sacred Heart, Boston College, and Springfield, UMass will host its first invitational.

The UMass Invitational will be held the April 26-27 at NOPE with New Hampshire and Vermont. St. John's backed out of the tournament because the school couldn't afford the trip to Amherst.

"We're young, real young but we'll be exciting," Sortino said.

Supreme Team takes intramural basketball title

Ex-Hogsters tumble in final

By DAN LEBERFELD
Collegian Staff

The Supreme Team, supported by an outstanding fast-break offense and a deep bench, coasted to a 62-50 victory over the Ex-Hogsters in the Men's Division Intramural Final at Boyden Gym Thursday night.

The first five minutes of the contest was a tooth and nail affair with each team feeling each other out. After this slow opening the Supreme Team took off.

They took to their bread and butter, the running game, and opened up a 24-17 lead. The highlight of this particular spurt was a beautiful pass on a break from crowd favorite, 6-4, 270 pound Don Byrd to player coach Paul Fisher. After Byrd's circus pass, Ex Hogster coach Danny Tenza called for a time out. After the time out the Ex-Hogsters were able to stymie the Supreme Team's fast break and keep themselves in the game, trailing 30-22 at the half.

The Supreme Team was off to the races once again right from the start of the second half. This running game coupled with Ex Hogsters starting forward Phil Moineau (10 first half points) picking up his fourth foul early in the second half helped the Supreme Team open up a 39-24 lead.

However, led by cool customer 6-1 guard Johnny Cahill and their 6-3 center Mike Galvin the Ex Hogsters closed the gap to 45-40, but that was as close as they came. It was off to the races again for the Supreme Team who went on to a 62-50 victory.

The men who keyed this dominating fast break effort were the backcourt duo of Bernard Reece and David Reece, a pair of sophomores from Boston who each finished with 19 points.

In the other intramural division finals: led by Barney Hinkel's 23 points Education defeated TEOTES 60-56 in the Grad Fac division. In the Co-Rec division Low Budget got 30 points from Andrea Mucciu and defeated the Golden Porcupines, 61-58. The Stinkers supported by Ellen Taggart's 17 points capture the Women's ousted the Beepers to Division Championship.

Lax romps in Florida, Seale injures leg

It wasn't all fun fun fun for the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team in Florida last week.

"We got about three weeks worth of work in down there, it was a profitable trip," coach Dick Garber said. "We answered a few questions and looked pretty sharp."

The Gorillas, who open the regular season at home Saturday against Delaware at 1 p.m., whipped two club teams 24-3 and 23-7.

Senior co-captain Perry Seale, a close defenseman, suffered an injured leg before the trip and may not play aginst the Blue Hens. "Right now, it doesn't look good," Garber said.

As always, both Sunday's and Monday's shows were sold out weeks in advance, and thousands of fans roamed the streets near the arena in search of tickets. But aside from the usual explosions of tie-dyed shirts and dancing, police described Monday night's atmosphere as "mellow" compared to Sunday, when one man died and another was seriously injured in separate falls from a parking garage and an elevated section of highway.

Police said they were not sure whether 22-year-old Matthew Ringey of Northampton, who was fatally injured, and James S. Wrede, 17, of Hingham fell accidentally or jumped.

The Dead return to New England April 3 and 4 for two shows at the Providence Civic Center.

Protests mark tower debate

Anger at Air Force proposal

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — The emotional outbursts of numerous spectators interupted the Hampshire County Commissioners last night as they tried to question an Air Force official about the Ground Wave Emergency Network antenna the Air Force proposes to build in Amherst.

The public hearing in Hampshire County Courthouse was a question-and-answer session between the commissioners and Lt. Col. Dale Condit, the GWEN system program director.

The plane carrying a representative of the Defense Department, Frank Miller, was detained by turbulence, Condit said, so Miller did not attend the hearing as planned.

About 45 spectators attended the session in Superior Court, but the initial agreement that only the commissioners would ask questions was ignored by some observers.

One elderly woman was so irate that she stood up and shouted, "I think he's lying like hell, and I'm not gonna stay here." Other spectators applauded her as she left.

The woman said the meeting was based on the premise that the GWEN system, which the Air Force proposed be built on Stanley Street is in a post-nuclear attack system.

Condit said the system "would be an early warning system, and probably would not be needed for an attack."

Other spectators stood up and shouted, to the obvious chagrin of Commissioner Patrick M. Goggins, who implored the people to remain observers. Goggins said the original agreement that only the commissioners would ask questions was to prevent debate.

More debate and opposition to the 300-foot radio tower will be heard tonight, however, as the Amherst Town Meeting holds a special session to consider two articles, one authorizing the town to buy the farmstead chosen by the Air Force and the other opposing the entire GWEN system.

Hadley waitresses win case claiming sexual harassment

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

More than $24,000 has been awarded to three former University of Massachusetts students in a 1981 sexual harassment case against their former employer the owner of Hahjee's Place in Hadley, the legal services office announced yesterday.

Hearing Commissioner Margot P. Kosberg ruled March 6 that all three women suffered physical and emotional sexual harassment and as a result were forced to resign from their positions as waitresses.

The women were awarded more than $24,000 in back pay, emotional distress damages and interest after testifying on Jan. 10 at a public hearing in Boston.

The decision was issued last week by Kosberg, the only female hearing commissioner on the Commonwealth of Massachusetts' Commission Against Discrimination.

Bijan Behfar, owner of Hahjee's Place, was denied a motion for a re-hearing of the case yesterday, said Charles DiMare, lawyer for the three women and directing attorney in the Legal Services Office.

On Aug. 6, 1981, Deanna Bouchard, Kathy Maple and Doreen Blades filed complaints with the commission alleging that Behfar had sexually harassed them and forced them to quit their jobs.

According to the decision report, Kosberg charged that Behfar "created a sexually charged, discriminatory work environment."

The women claimed Behfar had repeatedly and intentionally fondled them without any invitation or encouragement from them. Also, Kosberg said Behfar implicitly conditioned a loan of $200 to one of the women in return for sexual favors from her.

Another woman said Behfar repeatedly asked her out and told her there were "other ways to make money."

In addition to physical harassment, the women testified that they felt degraded and humiliated by the Persian nicknames Behfar gave them. Based on the testimony of a Persian cook in the restaurant, the investigation concluded that the nicknames were sexually offensive.

Kosberg also cited two of the women's assertions that their working hours and wages were reduced because they rejected his sexual advances. The women claimed that the Behfar re-assigned them to smaller tables, which reduced the amount of tips earned, in retaliation for their not responding to his advances.

Farid Behfar, brother of the restaurant owner, testified on behalf of his brother that it was the custom of his country to be more physically demonstrative than Americans. However, Kosberg said Behfar's physical contact with the women went "far beyond the cultural norms of his background."

Behfar refused to comment on the commission's decision.

A Roman Catholic bishop and a University of Massachusetts economics professor debated the merits of competition and cooperation yesterday afternoon as part of the Chancellor's Series on the New American Economy.

Quoting the draft of the Pastoral Letter on Catholic Social Thought and the U.S. Economy, Bishop Peter A. Rosazza said that American economists and business people must recognize the importance of human dignity and how economic decisions they make affect the poor.

Baghouse is delayed again

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

The "baghouse" intended to reduce smoke pollution from the University of Massachusetts' power plant to within legal limits was not started up yesterday as planned. Physical Plant Director Roger Cherwatti said operation would begin at 9:30 this morning after more last-minute repairs.

The Environmental Protection Agency has told the University to have the $5 million exhaust filter apparatus working by April 6 or face the possibility of federal court action for continued violation of the Clean Air Act of 1970.

Cherewatti said the baghouse could not be started yesterday because adjustments of machinery and the new system's control panel were not finished. These are the latest of many technical snags — earlier this semester, a Physical Plant official said he had a list five pages long — that have repeatedly delayed operation since the project was begun two years ago.

"I got both my feet crossed, my fingers crossed and everything," Cherewatti said, but he hastened to add that he foresaw no further problems that might obstruct today's start.

In an interview with a Boston television station Monday, Physical Plant Operations Supervisor Peter Wozniak said he was confident the University could meet the EPA deadline, which is 10 days from today.

The University has already overrun four state target dates for compliance with pollution laws. The first of those compliance schedules expired in 1980, the most recent one last month.

Those deadlines were negotiated with UMass by the state attorney general's office at the request of the Mass. Department of Environmental Quality Engineering, which has cited the plant in violation of the Clean Air Act since 1977.

High court strikes down Oklahoma anti-gay law

WASHINGTON (AP) — An evenly divided Supreme Court barred Oklahoma public school boards yesterday from firing teachers who advocate, encourage or promote homosexuality.

The justices, by a 4-4 vote, upheld a federal appeals court ruling that an Oklahoma law allowing such firings violated teachers' free-speech rights.

Such tie votes do not set any national precendent, because it is possible that in some future case the same issue will be decided by all nine justices.

But yesterdays development means the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling that threw out the Oklahoma law bars any attempt to draft such a law in other states within that federal judicial circuit--Colorado, Kansas, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming.

The National Gay Task force, which had challenged the Oklahoma law in a test case lawsuit against the Oklahoma City school board, called the ruling a key victory.

Spokesman Ron Najman in New York City said the court "has affirmed that gay men and lesbians have the same First Amendment free-speech rights as other Americans."

Reagan's MX wish comes true, passing in the House by 6 votes

WASHINGTON (AP)—The House, delivering a hard-fought victory to President Reagan, voted yesterday to authorize spending $1.5 billion for 21 more MX missiles. The president had tied approval of the weapons to the success of the U.S.-Soviet arms control talks.

The vote—the first of two the House will take this week, but which was seen as decisive—marked a major reversal for Democratic Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. and other House leaders who had worked hard to defeat the MX.

The vote was 219-213.

Reagan won many Democratic converts during an intensive White House lobbying campaign by saying that without the MX, the Geneva arms control talks, which began two weeks ago, would be unlikely to succeed.

Critics argued that the 10-warhead weapons are so vulnerable that they would be destroyed in the first wave of a Soviet nuclear attack.

A second House vote, probably today, is required for final, formal congressional approval. But yesterday's vote was decisive and means that Reagan will be able to continue towards his ultimate goal of building and installing 100 MXs in existing underground Minuteman missile silos in Nebraska and Wyoming.

In identical 55-45 votes last week, the Senate approved freeing $1.5 billion for the same 21 MXs.

Co-author of pastoral letter

Bishop Rosazza speaks out

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

Citing a need for cooperation between the church, labor, business, and the government, Bishop Peter A. Rosazza said yesterday that the Roman Catholic Church is articulating a new theology which addresses nuclear arms, the economy, the status of women and minorities, and the problems of Third World countries.

Rosazza, auxiliary bishop of Hartford, was one of five American bishops who wrote the draft of The Pastoral Letter on Catholic Social Teaching and the U.S. Economy. Released last November, the letter criticizes the American economic system for neglecting the economic rights of the underprivileged.

In August, 1983, another group of bishops issued a similar letter which confronted the nuclear arms buildup and the tensions and problems which they felt it was creating.

Stating that the economic letter is a draft, Rosazza said he and other bishops have been actively soliciting criticism and feedback from the business and economic community, who have reacted strongly against the letter.

"It's been tough," Rosazza said, "Many business people have criticized the letter. But if they study the text, they begin to understand.

"As Christians, people have to realize that what is superfluous belongs to those who don't have it," he said, "People have to learn that and it takes a while."

Rosazza said the bishops will continue to work on a finished version of the letter for about a year and will integrate suggestions from all economic levels.

Rosazza predicted the Roman Catholic Church will soon begin working on the role and status of women in the church and society. Rosazza also said the church must recognize the problems of minorities, particularly Hispanics, who Rosazza said comprise 26 percent of American Roman Catholics.

last November and has drawn criticism from the American business community.

The main criticism, Rosazza said, is that the letter doesn't credit the tangible achievements of the American economy such as jobs, productivity, and a high standard of living.

"We say employment is a right," he said, "Work is so important. It's not only a matter of making money, it's part of developing as human beings."

Business, labor, the church, and the government must cooperate to bring unemployment down to 3 to 4 percent, Rosazza said, and concentrate less on economic competition as a solution to the problems of the poor.

"The bishops have given progressive and decent people a shot in the arm," professor James R. Crotty said, "but the letter is in tremendous conflict with standard economic theory.

"The economic system runs on competition," he said, "and it is unclear how effective (the bishops') proposals would work out in the American economy."

The letter lacks a cohesive model of the American economy and specific suggestions for the advancement of the underpriveledged, he said.

Instead of beginning with the fundamental idea of community as a solution, Crotty said, economic development stems from the efforts of individuals, which then create community through competition.

"We must see the problem through the eyes of those who are hurting," Rosazza said, "People who work must have a role in decision-making."

Man arrested for not returning car

A 27-year-old Roxbury man was arrested Tuesday morning in parking lot 21 on a state police warrant for failure to return a rented car to Logan Airport, University of Massachusetts police said.

Police said the car was parked in a restricted area and towed away. When they identified the driver, police found that he was wanted on a warrant and held him in the Amherst police department jail.

A $500 stereo system was reported stolen after two students returned from spring break and found it missing from their third floor room in Lewis House. Police said the students noticed a new door on the room which was not there before vacation. Police said the Physical Plant replaced a damaged door with a new one but would not say if the theft occurred while the door was being replaced. Nothing else in the room was missing.

Police reported they have arrested several students who forgot to pay or ignored their speeding tickets and other moving violations.

These non-criminal offenses become criminal offenses once a person fails to pay for their tickets or to request a court hearing within 10 days, police said.

If a person fails to show up in court, an arrest warrant is issued and campus police send notices to the individual's last known address.

A person wanted on a warrant will immediately be arrested once the police finds the individual.

Bursar breaks up student aid to avert spending sprees

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

Lest students who receive more than $500 a semester in financial aid spend it all at once on a stereo or car, the University gives such students their award checks in two installments.

"It's done for two reasons," Bursar Robert Mishol said. "One is, the students were given so much money at the beginning of the semester they weren't budgeting it properly." The other reason is that students were getting their money and dropping out of school, he said.

Mishol also said that many years ago, when cash awards were given instead of checks, money was being stolen out of people's rooms.

If a student is awarded over $500 he/she is given $500 during the first week of the semester, and the remainder after about the fourth week, after the add/drop period. After the add/drop period the Bursar can determine which students are maintaining at least 12 credits which qualifies them for the full amount of their aid, Mishol said.

Mishol said the Bursar's office started splitting up awards six or seven years ago after a special task force from the financial aid office concluded that splitting would be a more "fair and equitable way of dispersing money."

"It's for the good of the students," he said. "We as adults have trouble budgeting our money. An 18 or 19 year-old will have trouble also.

"Some students have a tendency to go buy a stereo if they get too much money at one time," he said.

He said there are some students who want all their money at once, but that there are few complaints.

Professor receives 5-year grant

Will study hormones

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

A professor of psychology at the University of Massachusetts has been awarded a grant which will pay his salary, allowing him to conduct research at UMass by eliminating his teaching responsibilities for five years.

Jeffery Blaustein has received a National Institute of Mental Health Research Career Development award which will allow him to conduct research on the interactions of cellular mechanisms of sex hormones and how they effect behavior in rats.

"The grant is freeing me from my obligations of teaching and allowing the University to hire somebody else to take over my teaching," Blaustein said. The grant, which is paying Blaustein about $250,000 over a five year period, will enable Blaustein to devote all of his time to his research, Seymour Berger, chairman of the psychology department said.

Blaustein has received additional grants form of the Natural Institute of Health and the UMass psychology department to assist his research by funding all laboratory equipment and other lab fees.

The award is given on a basis of merit. "It is a unique award to allow someone to continue their research over five years," Berger added, saying that Blaustein's work is "outstanding."

Blaustein, who teaches a course in psychology as a natural science and a seminar on hormone behavior, will begin his research next fall at UMass.

"I've gotten grants like this before, but never this one," Blaustein said. He conducted research at Rutgers from 1977 to 1979 and taught for four years at Iowa State University as a zoology professor. He received bachelors and doctorate degrees from UMass and has been teaching in the psychology department for two years.

Education major has found career in programming

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Although there is a world of difference between working in an office and working in a classroom, Delphine Quarles has found similar rewards in her work a multi-cultural program specialist at the Student Activities Office at the University of Massachusetts.

WOMEN ON CAMPUS

Quarles says the education she received at UMass while training to be a teacher "has aided me a great deal in what I'm doing now." Her job involves working with student organizations such as Hillel, the Office of Third World Affairs, and the Asian-American Students Association, helping them to plan events.

"This is a nice environment to work in. It's a pleasure to meet wonderful people and also learn of different cultures in a way I would never get to understand by just reading a book," Quarles said.

Her greatest reward is "to see the pleasure on the faces of students that I work with when they feel really good about an event they plan," she said.

Quarles, a UMass graduate with a degree in urban education and a minor in English, had hoped to teach once she graduated in 1974. However, due to the lack of demand for teachers at that time, she took a job at the University Store.

In 1979, she began working in the Student Activities Office. For four years she was a program consultant, "working with student organizations planning events including debate tournaments, conferences, lectures, plays and outdoor performances."

In December of 1983, she was promoted to multi-cultural program specialist thanks to her familiarity with multi-cultural groups and knowledge of programing and lecture planning.

"I enjoy it just as much," she said, adding that the focus of plans is fine-tuned and flexible. "The student body on this campus is fortunate to have a diverse group of people who are able to invite so many different kinds of people to come and enlighten (the campus), and that is a unique experience," she said.

Quarles said that as a student she did not belong to any student organization in an official capacity. "I didn't realize that all the activities that happened on campus came through RSO's."

Today, however, she sees a need for students to get involved in extracurricular activities. She believes students "should be encouraged to be involved with student organizations to enhance their academic discipline."

Reagan is merely another product

David McNair

Recently, the president said this to Congress: "We're asking Congress to have the courage to cut $50 billion by Easter. If there isn't enough courage to approve these cuts, then at least give me the authority to veto line items. I'll take the responsibility, I'll make the cuts and I'll take the heat."

Here's the heat. In this quote, words have gone in one direction and meanings in another. Why else would Congress' skepticism about drastic cuts in social spending and large increases in military spending be attributed to a lack of courage? And why else would a president be allowed to behave like a child who does not get its way? Words abandon meaning and suddenly language turns intelligent critics of the president's ideas into "born again budget balancers;" forcing a country to adopt our political ideologies becomes "making them say uncle," and congressmen who disagree with the president become cowards.

When I was young I painted our oil burner with turpentine. Although my intensions were good, my inability to connect words with meaning nearly blew our house up. Of course, this is an unusual example, but when language is abused there is a large margin for misunderstanding. Isn't it easier to feel aggressive towards the "Evil Empire" than the Russian people? And isn't it easier to hate cowards than members of Congress who doubt the effectiveness of certain ideas?

An essay, written by George Orwell in 1946, warns us about the effects of poor language on thought, mainly political thought. He said of political language: "It is designed to make lies sound truthful and murder respectful, and to give an appearance of solidity to pure wind." This may sound harsh, but it was written at a time when words had strayed far from meaning and men like Hitler and Mussolini were allowed to exist. Then why, almost 40 years later, are we buying this misleading kind of language from our president?

Of course, the methods by which our language is manipulated have become more complex. This is largely due to television: the presence of the Reagan administration is largely due to television. We buy the president's statements like we buy Whoppers, scented toilet paper, under arm deodorant and lottery tickets. By successfully manipulating the language, through television, you can sell anything in this country. What else could be responsible for a competetive, often ruthless, toilet paper industry, and the high profitable marketing of breakfast cereals, children's toys and the Jackson family? It is a language that can sell otherwise worthless ideas and disguise truth so thoroughly we can hardly see it. What universal, intrinsic value can be attributed to a carbonated cola drink? None. Yet by manipulating our language a company can presume our whole generation, our whole value system, revolves around a cola drink. The president is sold to us in much the same way.

Language is generally believed to be a tool. It is impossible to build a decent house with an ax and a screw driver. It is equally as impossible to conceive an intelligent thought with the wrong words. When I listen to Reagan speak I hear the faint sound of wind blowing about an empty tool box. Do you hear it? I don't mind hearing the same kind of wind selling numerous brands of acne medicine and laundry detergent, but when it's used to run the most powerful nation on earth it does nothing but make me nauseous.

There are some weird ideas going around about "separation of church and state." They have a certain antiquity to them, but they were weird from the start.

They go something like this: the state will not involve itself in the church, and the church will not involve itself in the state. The state wil outline what actions a church may legally take, but the church may not set moral limits on the state. The church is free to set moral standards, but it must recognize that tomorrow the state may change the law to conflict with the church's moral stance, and then the church must back off. Furthermore, the state may also rule tomorrow that the church is sexist, homophobic and not tax-exempt, at which time the church must change its staffing, moral position and financial structure to comply. Of course, the church is free to criticize the state at any time so long as it doesn't insist on implementing its morality in the state. This is what some mean be separation of church and state.

Now, I realize that some readers will actually wonder what is wrong with those ideas, but the simple fact is that they're an invention. They're also oppressive. The real principle behind separation is that the government may not organize a church or establish a religion. The public is free to believe as it will. This was a stern reaction to mandatory membership in the Church of England. Otherwise the state may do as it pleases. Now here is what churches can do: send members to Congress, campaign on issues, start schools, collect, contribute, distribute, picket, boycott, petition, march, preach the gospel on the sidewalks, preach politics from the pulpit, and operate taxable businesses for profit if they so desire. In short, they can do anything any citizen can—because they are citizens.

Those who criticize politics based on the Bible should tread carefully. If they don't believe in the Bible, then any other standard will be just as arbitrary. Right now, human rights seem to be sacred in this country, but one could argue just as convincingly for money or status or colonialism or bureaucracy or pagan tradition as the most important criterion for good government. At the gut level, a political platform is based on faith, and some of us trust in Jesus Christ, not in democracy bordering on socialism.

Some people ask if it isn't simplistic to refer to Scriptures for economics, foreign policy, jurisprudence and human services. There are two answers to that. First, it would be naive to say that those aren't complex issues, but Biblical guidelines were not responsible for exorbitant taxes, covert warfare, career criminals, or welfare inequities. Secondly, and more importantly, if the God of the Bible exists—and I contend He does—then only a national policy along scriptural lines can bring forth widespread prosperity. I am willing to put it to the test.

It is understandable that some citizens prefer a fuzzy, inspirational, well-behaved God who doesn't challenge their politics. However, close inspection of the Bible reveals a practical God who is concerned with all aspects of human interaction. Scripture contains specific charges for national conduct, and a mandate that individuals speak out for righteousness.

This can be done because the church as citizens can influence policy, because godly men in office can vote by their consciences, and because separation of church and state does not mean separation of God and state. The church is free to campaign for one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

Rock and roll fans are "treated as second-class citizens"

How long will rock and roll fans put up with being treated as second-class citizens? At the Springfield Civic Center, the Worcester Centrum and here at our Fine Arts Center, rock fans are subjected to searches upon admissions. Searches plus the use of only one entrance at large halls often cause lines so long that many miss the beginning of a show. This has been true at recent Grateful Dead and Frank Zappa shows. Certainly no symphony or sports fan would tolerate such abuse. Not only is such a practice aggravating, it is oppressive and discriminating against youth. Treating young people with distrust will never instill the self-discipline needed in any true democracy. Harassment of rock fans should end, and we should begin to change this nationwide policy right here on campus.

Black & Decker head to speak today

A University of Massachusetts graduate will return to his alma mater today to share his experiences as chairman of the Board at Black and Decker and to discuss the changing responsibilities in corporate management.

Francis P. Lucier, 56, who recently retired from Black and Decker, a company that manufactures tools, will speak at 7:45 p.m. in Campus Center room 165-169.

Lucier's lecture, titled "The Role of Directors and Chief Executives," is part of the Marketing department's ongoing series to feature business executives at UMass, George Schwartz, a marketing professor, said.

"The series is designed to bring in actual business people to give practical experience to students outside of the classroom," he said. "Students will have the opportunity to discuss topics with Lucier."

Schwartz said some of the changing responsibilities in the top levels of corporations include more women and minorities in high level positions.

"There's no question about it," Schwartz said. "The trend has started, it's just a question of how fast it will accellerate."

Lucier, who graduated in 1950, majored in economics and went to work at Black and Decker in 1963. From 1972 to 1979, he was the company's president.

SNACKSENSE

ARE SNACKS BAD FOR YOU?

not necessarily.
As long as snacks don't replace nutritious foods or add unneeded calories they aren't bad for anyone. The TROUBLE WITH MOST SNACK FOODS is they aren't nutrient dense, that is THEY DON'T PROVIDE MANY NUTRIENTS FOR THE NUMBER OF CALORIES THEY CONTAIN.

FOR THE SAME AMOUNT OF CALORIES, skim milk gives you 23% of the protein, 39% of the calcium and 36% of the vitamin A and B12 that you need for an entire day, while a cola gives you only carbohydrate.

Sensible snacks are carbohydrates PLUS NUTRIENTS, like fresh fruits and vegetables, whole grain breads, crackers and cereals.

Florida trip a success for UMass

Baseball 'ready'

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It's hard to explain.

The University of Massachusetts baseball team hit 48 points better than its opponents, had a team earned-run-average 1.36 runs less than opposing pitchers and pounded out 20 more hits, but still came home from Florida with a 3-6 record.

"I'm pleased that we got in a lot of baseball, but less pleased with the results," manager Dick Bergquist said. "I'm disappointed that we couldn't have won more games. We were still successful considering it was the first time we played." UMass started out strong, whipping Illinois-Chicago 13-2 behind a strong effort by Jim Knoph (1-1, 1.93) on the mound.

But the Minutemen proceeded to lose three straight. Wisconsin was a 6-4 winner as Steve Allard had control problems and took the loss. Mick Wydra was then hammered by Stetson in a 19-2 setback before freshman Steve Allen was the pitcher of record in a 4-1 loss to Bradley.

UMass bounced back with a 13-8 win over Wisconsin as hard-throwing junior righthander Jeff Jessen got the win.

Freshman rightie Matt Sheran, a suprise standout according to Berquist, then went a complete game in a 15-1 whipping of Bradley. The Pittsfield, Mass. product, up from the junior varsity, went 10 innings in Florida and allowed only one earned run for a team-low 0.90 ERA. He struck out four and walked three in giving up seven hits.

Allen and reliever Matt Subocz then took losses to Wisconsin and Stetson, 8-4 and 8-7 respectively.

The loss to Stetson, which was part of the Stetson Invitational Tournament, was the biggest disappointment of the trip and the Minutemen, behind Allard's tough pitching, went ahead 3-0 before letting Stetson take the lead. UMass eventually tied it only to lose on a two-run error in the infield.

UMass committed 29 errors and allowed 26 unearned runs. UM pitchers struggled with 52 walks and eight hit batters. They finished with a team ERA of 4.56, much-improved from the disaster they suffered during last year's spring trip to New Mexico.

At the plate, designated hitter Todd Comeau hit .351 with ten runs batted in and a homer. Jeff Cimini hit .364 and Sheran, who is also an outfielder, .370. JV-product Jay Zerner hit .400 and shortstop Angelo Salustri was at .364.

Holy Cross plays host to softball

Minutewomen ready

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Facing the likes of 18th ranked South Carolina and 19th ranked Indiana University on their trip down South, the University of Massachusetts softball team "didn't have room to breathe," according to sixth year coach Elaine Sortino.

The Minutewomen may have a chance to breathe a little easier as they open up the Northern portion of the slate against Holy Cross today at 3 p.m. at Freshman Field in Worcester.

UMass dearly wants to improve on its 3-8-1 slate, its first losing record after coming back from the South.

Holy Cross could be a team to UMass' liking right now. The Crusaders were 7-11 last year and the game will be Holy Cross' season opener.

UMass demolished the Crusaders in a doubleheader here in Amherst last year. UMass won 7-0 and 12-2. Centerfielder Sally Maher had a field day going 6-for-7 on the day. UMass outhit the Crusaders by a 27-3 margin.

Holy Cross wil be led by sophomore catcher Mary Beth Sacramore and first-year pitcher Jean Manning, a sophomore.

UMass has three pitchers to counter with. Junior co-captain Lynn Stockley is 1-4 but has an ERA of 0.79 with team-high 18 strikeouts. Freshman Lisa Rever is 1-1 with a 1.29 ERA while junior Cathy Reed is 1-3 with a 1.70 ERA.

Reed is UMass' top hitter with a .500 average along with freshman shortstop Paige Kopcza at .500. Rever is at .417 while freshman first baseman Martha Jamieson (.333) leads the team with 7 RBIs.

There is more speed on the basepaths as the Minutewomen have stolen almost 3/4th of what they did last year, 40 bases. In 12 games thus far, UMass has swiped 28 with Maher leading the way with six.

Errors concern Sortino, though, and her young defense has made a lot. There have been 23 errors in 12 games compared to 54 in 37 last year.

"Once they get their confidence, they'll be dynamite," Sortino said. "They'll come into their own as the regular season progresses.

"I'm very optimistic about the team. We are going to be all right," she added.

UMass opens up at home on Friday with a game against Boston College (3 p.m.) at NOPE before tackling Atlantic 10 rival Rhode Island in an important doubleheader Saturday at 1 p.m.

Indoor soccer places fifth in UConn tourney

Adoboe (6 goals) selected to all-star team

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's indoor soccer team raised its record to 20-4-1 with a fifth place finish in the University of Connecticut tournament this past weekend in Storrs.

The Minutemen were led by all-tournament selection Ferdie Adoboe who tallied six goals. UMass goalie Don Donahue was also strong with a 0.62 goals-against-average through eight games. He allowed only two goals.

UMass opened the tourney with three victories on the first day. They defeated Clark 7-1, Babson 1-0 and the University of Rhode Island 2-0.

On the second day, the Minutemen defeated Keene College 2-0 for their third straight shutout before falling to eventual second-place finisher Eastern Connecticut 2-1.

UMass then downed New York Tech 3-0 and Adelphi 2-0 before losing to Syracuse 1-0. The Orangemen finished third in the tournament, which was won by Long Island University. Thirty-two teams participated.

The Minutemen, who have won two indoor tournaments this season, had strong performances from Andy Bing (five goals), freshman Kurt Manal (three goals), John Shannon (two goals) and Tom Usock (one goal).

The games consisted of two 15-minute halves over a two-day period. The host Huskies finished 11th in their own competition.

"We usually do pretty well in the indoor tournaments," Minuteman head coach Jeff Gettler said. "In the past few years we have won a lot of games. Our style of play seems suited for the indoor game."

"I just hope that we can continue it on through the fall season. We'll be going outside soon and we'll be able to tell a lot more about the team then."

UMass will be in the final indoor tournament of the season, the Southern Connecticut Tournament, this coming weekend. The Minutemen will begin outdoor spring drills on April 2.

Lee decisioned, wrestling gone

The University of Massachusetts wrestling program has been laid to rest. The varsity program is no more with the loss of sophomore Chris Lee in the first round of the NCAA wrestling championships in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma on March 16.

Lee, a New England champion as a freshman at 126 pounds and a wild card selection to the Nationals this year, fell to Ron Ensign of Tennessee--Chattanooga by a 6-3 margin.

Wrestling was one of the seven varsity sports cut from the athletic program last May. It will now become a club sport.

Intramural spring sports notices

The Intramural sports office in Boyden 215 is taking entries for badminton and volleyball teams.

Entries should be submitted right away. Call the office at 545-2693 for more information.

Officials are also needed for softball and soccer game this spring. Apply at the office as soon as possible, two officials are needed for each game and not enough are currently available to staff all contests. Intramural officials are paid workers.

Moreau shines for Gorillas, spring drills start

University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse goalie Gerry Moreau was especially sharp during the team's trip to Florida.

The Gorilla's goalie allowed only two goals in the two scrimmage games UMass had and seems to be ready for a solid season. UM is ranked second in New England behind 4-0 Yale. The Gorillas open Saturday against Delaware at 1 p.m. at Boyden.

The UMass football team, bolstered by junior-college transfers and coach Bob Stull's off-season conditioning program, are readying to go outside the first week of April. The annual spring game is set for the first week of May.

New Providence College basketball coach Rick Pitino indicated that he'll be trying to sign forward Gerald King, N.Y. Knick Bernard King's brother. The UM graduate had indicated a willingness to help the Minutemen recruit the 6-5 New Yorker just three weeks before accepting the Friar's job.

Amherst Town Meeting votes to oppose tower

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

In a special meeting last night, members of the Amherst Town Meeting voted to oppose the construction of a United States Air Force radio tower designed to provide communication in the event of a nuclear attack.

The 300 foot tower proposed for Amherst is part of a nationwide communications system termed Ground Wave Emergency Network.

Nancy Foster, a member of the NO-GWEN Alliance, opponents of the tower, said the system "assumes nuclear war is survivable and controllable."

"The GWEN system is not a deterrent, it is intended primarily for fighting a nuclear war," she said.

Lt. Col. Dale Condit of the U.S. Air Force and assistant program director of GWEN, addressed the Town Meeting and outlined the purpose of the system.

"I'm not here to engage in a debate or discuss national policy, but I'll tell you everything I can with respect to GWEN," he said.

Drawing an analogy to an injured child's need for a workable phone system, Condit said the system would ensure radio communication between defense posts in the event of a crisis.

"Communication is essential to ensure we act rationally," he said.

Condit said the tower, proposed for South Amherst, would consist of a 300 foot tower with an underground copper wire screen and three buildings. The system is designed to withstand electromagnetic pulses generated by high altitude nuclear blasts.

Opponents of the system questioned its status as a deterrent. Dr. Michael Klare, a 5 college professor of Peace and World Security Studies and the defense correspondent for Nation magazine said "GWEN is only necessary if you want to fight a protracted nuclear war."

Mary Wentworth, a former candidate for U.S. House of Representatives said, "the government is preparing not for deterrence, but for a massive first strike against the Soviet Union."

"We have to face up to what our country is planning," she said.

Arthur Quinton, a physics professor at the University of Massachusetts , said he favors construction of the tower. "The only known opposition to the tower is the NO-GWEN Alliance, which detests everything to do with the military, idealism has its place, in the classroom, on the pulpit, but not in this matter," he said.

UMass rated among the best

By LAURA KOESTER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts has been chosen as one of the twelve "hottest" colleges in the country in an article that will appear in the April 8 issue of US magazine.

UMass was one of only three public universities chosen by Lisa Birnbach, author of The Preppy Handbook, in her article. Other universities include Stanford, Duke and Brown.

UMass Chancellor Joseph Duffey said he feels UMass is finally getting the recognition it deserves, adding "public higher education ought to be the best, not second best."

Duffey said he hopes the reputation of the University among state residents will continue to improve. He noted that improving popular image is consistent with the professional recognition and acclaim already received by many faculty members and students.

Last year there were 17,000 applications for 4,000 freshman places. This year, there are over 18,000, according to acting director of undergraduate admissions Tim Reinhart. He attributed this intensified competition to a conscious effort on the part of the administration to improve the image of UMass, the use of sophisticated marketing techniques and the rising cost of private education.

"What you are getting (at UMass) is a private university education at a public education cost," Larry Benedict, director of Academic Support Services, said.

"In the past 10 years, this school has really taken off. This year we had 6,000 out-of-state applications for 600 places. I'm not surprised that our fame is rising. This is a hot school," Benedict said.

Students confirmed the high quality of education at UMass. "This is an excellent school. There are many world-reknowned professors," Pam Quaglia, a junior art major, said.

"It's time UMass got the acclaim it deserves. I love this school. It's underrated and taken for granted," public relations major Laureen Delaney, said.

Increased costs to hit area students

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

Students attending the area's four private colleges will have to "dig deeper into their pockets" next year, as tuition will rise between 6 and 9 percent because of inflation.

Hampshire College will remain the most expensive private college in the area, with the total cost of attendance at $13,930, and Amherst College, with total costs at $13,400, will become the least expensive.

Officials at Smith, Mount Holyoke, Hampshire and Amherst colleges yesterday announced the tuition hikes, and said the average rise will be no more than last year.

The University of Massachusetts and other state universities, colleges and community colleges are expected to announce an annual tuition increase April 9, when the state Board of Regents of Higher Education meets. Total cost at UMass is $3,606 for instate students, $6,430 for out-of-state students.

Mount Holyoke students will pay $1,100 or 8.8 percent more next year, making the total cost of attendance $13,550, as opposed to $12,450 this year. The total cost includes tuition at $10,350, up $950, and room and board at $3,200 up $150. Last year's increase was 6 percent.

Smith College students will pay $1,020 or 8 percent more next year, the total cost will be $13,760, including tuition at $9,900 and room and board at $3,860. These increases are the same amount as last year.

At Hampshire College, students will pay a total of $13,930--7.6 percent, or $970 more than this year. That includes a tuition increase of $805 and a room and board increase of $165. Next year's tuition will cost $10,980; this year it was $10,175. Next year's room and board will cost $1,100; this year it was $1,035.

Amherst College students, facing a 6.4 percent or $800 increase, will pay $13,400 to

Senate fiscal crisis heats up

By LAURA KOESTER
Collegian Staff

To spark alternative ways to ease the Undergraduate Student Senate's fiscal crisis, the co-presidents of the University Democrats burned their budget at last night's meeting.

"We would rather see our budget go up in flames than all the small RSO groups who are dependent on the senate for funding. We are one group that can get outside funding, and we want other groups to explore all their options," Kevin Sweeney, co-president of the group said.

House to vote on MX funding again

WASHINGTON (AP) - House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. yesterday opened the final campaign by opponents of the MX missile to block release of $1.5 billion to build 21 more of the nuclear weapons.

O'Neill pledged an "all-out effort" to change the handful of votes needed to reverse the effect of a slim 219-213 pro-MX victory for President Reagan in the House on Tuesday.

A required second House vote will be taken at noon today on the long-range, intercontinental missiles, which critics say would be destroyed by the first barrage of a Soviet strategic nuclear attack.

Reagan and other supporters say the MX missiles are critical to the success of the Geneva arms control negotiations and are more accurate and powerful than the fleet of Minuteman missiles built in the 1960s.

Under a congressional decision made last fall postponing the MX battle, two votes each were required in both the House and Senate for final approval of authorization and appropriations measures.

The Senate gave its approval in identical 55-45 votes last week, so one more House vote will settle the issue for now, although still another MX fight looms on Capitol Hill this summer.

Manhattan District Attorney Robert Morgenthay announces the indictment of subway gunman Bernhard Goetz Tuesday afternoon on four counts of attempted murder.

Goetz indicted for attempted murder

NEW YORK (AP) - Bernhard Goetz was indicted by a grand jury on four counts of attempted murder yesterday a month after a first panel charged him only with illegal gun possession for shooting four youths on a subway train Dec. 22.

"It's probably the best thing," said Goetz, a 37 year old self employed electronics technician.

"Hopefully this will end the controversy...The story would have come out one way or the other anyway."

The indictment in the internationally publicized case was announced by District Attorney Robert Morgenthau one day after Goetz refused to testify before the grand jury in a dispute over how much immunity he should be granted.

Goetz, who claimed he was defending himself against being robbed and terrorized, became a figure of tremendous controversy immediately after the shootings.

When Morgenthau announced earlier this month that said he would seek an indictment for a second time, Goetz predicted he would be cleared "no matter how many grand juries are called."

"I'm not worried," he said. "I know a jury of my peers will exonerate me again."

Kidnapped man freed in Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Geoffrey Nash, the first of nine foreigners who disappeared in Lebanon in a two-week series of abductions, was released unharmed yesterday near his home in West Beirut.

Nadia Nash, daughter of the Briton, said the men who kidnapped her father told him they had thought he was an American.

She said they let him out of a car in the Hamra district near their home in the mostly Moslem sector of the capital, and he walked up to the door shortly after midnight.

A message from an unknown group that belatedly claimed responsibility for some of the kidnappings said another abducted Briton and a kidnapped French woman might be freed "very soon."

Nash, a 60-year-old metallurgist, was the first of nine Westerners kidnapped or reported missing in Lebanon since March 14. The others are two more Britons, four French citizens, a Dutch Roman Catholic priest and American journalist Terry A. Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press.

Nash told his family there were "hours of driving" before his release, and his captors blindfolded him before they started out, his daughter said.

She quoted him as saying the kidnappers questioned him at length during the 14 days he was held, but did him no harm and gave him the necessary medication for a heart ailment. She said he did not know where he was held.

"He was shaking, I guess from the after-effects of the kidnapping," she said. "They asked him questions and said they thought he was American. He told them he was British and did not work for the American Embassy. I guess they were satisfied he was not a spy."

Nash's Lebanese wife, Waddad, said later at the family's summer house in the Christian suburb of Hazmieh that her husband, who has lived in Lebanon for 37 years, was tired but well.

Court limits police right to use force

WASHINGTON (AP)— Police may not shoot unarmed, fleeing criminal suspects who pose no apparent threat to the officers or the public, the Supreme Court ruled yesterday.

By a 6-3 vote, the court said a Tennessee law that allowed unrestrained use of deadly force violated the constitutional rights of suspects.

"It is not better that all felony suspects die than that they escape," said Justice Byron R. White for the court.

Tennessee's "fleeing felon" law was similar to those in nearly half the states. But in many of those states, local police departments for years have banned shooting of fleeing suspects who are not considered dangerous.

Yesterday's ruling means the city of Memphis may be forced to pay the father of a 15-year-old suspected burglar killed by police 11 years ago.

Tennessee State Rep. Joe Kent, a Memphis police lieutenant, said it is "a black day for law enforcement."

But Robert Angrisani, a spokesman for the International Association of Chiefs of Police, called the decision "just and proper."

UMass graduate wins landscaping's 'Academy Award'

By MARIANE MEUSE
Collegian Staff

Last year, a dream came true for 1978 University of Massachusetts graduate Stacy Moriarty when she became the first woman to win the prestigious Rome Prize in landscape architecture.

The Rome Prizes, presented each year by the American Academy in Rome, recognize outstanding achievement in such fields as architecture, painting and sculpture. Winners receive a cash stipend and spend a year in Italy.

Moriarty and her husband left for Italy in September, 1983. While there, Moriarty was provided with an apartment, the use of a studio and the chance to meet artists from Europe and the U.S.

UMass landscape architecture professor Julius Fabos said Moriarty was "the most creative student we've ever had here". He described his former student as "hard-working, intelligent and creative".

In a telephone interview from her home in Minnesota, Moriarty said her interest in landscape architecture was sparked in part by the social atmosphere of the late 1960s and early 1970s, when she became, "interested in environmental issues, the arts and social issues. I saw landscape architecture as a way for me to be involved in these issues and use my talents to address them," she said.

While at UMass, Moriarty said she was so busy studying and working to earn money for her education that she had little time to participate in more light-hearted extracurricular activities.

Eventually though, all that hard work paid off.

To apply for the award, Moriarty was required to submit a portfolio of her work, in addition to letters of recommendation and a letter of intent. The day after she was interviewed by a panel of jurors, Moriarty was told she had won.

The opportunity to live and work in a foreign country was a great learning experience, according to Moriarty. The trip enabled her to view the U.S. is a different light by examining Italian attitudes toward this country.

"Americans don't take seriously the power we have in the world. We don't understand the way Europe looks to us; how they are kind of bound by our decisions on economic and cultural issues," she said.

UMass landscape architecture professor Nicholas Dines said the award is a "great honor, not only for Moriarty but for the department as well."

"She excelled in terms of learning. She was a very self-motivated person," he recalled. He also said that being the first female recipient of the award was a great honor for Moriarty.

Moriarty is currently employed by a firm in St. Paul where she is working on four different projects, including the design of the state capital grounds in St. Paul and a town design for a small mining community in northern Minnesota.

Professor Hugh C. Davis

Professor appointed to state park board

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

Hugh C. Davis, professor of regional planning at the University of Massachusetts, has been recently appointed by Gov. Michael Dukakis to the chairmanship of the State Board of Environmental Management.

Davis said the five-member board is responsible for advising on the state parks and forests, as well as keeping track of legislation for hazardous and solid waste disposal. He said the board also acts on environmental policy, budgets, personnel matters and promotions for the department.

Davis, who has been a member on the board since last November assumed the chairmanship last month, after the former chairwoman Sarah Bell of Pittsfield, resigned. Davis said he looks forward to bringing awareness to the job to get things done.

"I hope to get the activities of the department better known around the state," Davis said. "The department of Environmental Management does a lot of good things and it doesn't get a lot of notoriety.

Meir Gross, head of the department of land architecture and regional planning at UMass, said it was an honor to have one of the department's faculty members appointed to the chairmanship.

"We're trying very hard to generate stronger contacts with the state government," Gross said.

Davis teaches courses in outdoor recreation and regional planning, and he said the committment to the board will keep him busier.

"We meet every month for a day and it takes a certain amount of homework, so I won't be doing as much research." He added, "It keeps me up-to-date on what goes on in the state."

As chairman of the board, Davis will receive no salary, only travel expenses to go to Boston once a month.

One of the big tasks of the board coming up is "some kind of approval of a program for disposal and removal of hazardous waste," Davis said. "We will soon be reviewing what the legislature wants."

Davis, who came to the University in 1967, has had prior experience on state level advising. He was assistant secretary for research and planning in the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs from 1972 to 1975. He worked in the University's Environmental Institute and served as its acting director from 1978 to 1980.

He holds his Ph.D. and M.S. from the University of Michigan and his B.S. from Rollins College. He also attended the University's Stockbridge School of Agriculture in 1946.

Unity key to success says businessman

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Staff

The most important skill needed to be successful in the business world is relating well with people, a former chief executive of the Black and Decker Tool Company said in a lecture last night at the University of Massachusetts.

John Lucier, a graduate of UMass, spoke to a crowd of more than 100 on "The Role of Directors and Chief Executives." The talk was part of a series sponsored by the UMass marketing department. Lucier discussed the skills all executives must have in order to manage their company and their own lives efficiently.

Lucier enlightened the audience about the most important skills a college graduate must have. "People do a horrible task at finding themselves a job. The average person does not sell himself well," he said. Lucier emphasized learning about oneself and about what one wants out of a company. "Think seriously about selling yourself," he said.

The problem in deciding long term plans is that no one wants to accept change. "Everything changes, nothing stands still," he said. The chief executive is able to make needed changes because he has control of the money and the worst mistake in any one area is to get stuck in one way of thinking.

Many departments, in both school and business, are so concerned with changing technology that they forget about people skills, he said. He added that "ninety-five percent of my job is dealing with people."

Lucier advised college graduates to look for a job in a "growth company." Things are happening so fast in these companies that people not totally trained get jobs they are not totally prepared for, he said. No one is totally prepared for a promotion, the only way to learn is through experience, he said.

"The best thing one can do is to keep learning," and "The University of Massachusetts has a fine reputation," he said. Lucier said that Massachusetts has become the center of business and will be the place to get a job.

Lucier was raised in Northampton and received his B.A. in economics from UMass. He obtained his masters degree in business administration from Rutgers University and later served as chief executive officer of Black and Decker from 1972 to 1979.

Aid committee faces elimination

In its yearly pruning of unnecessary committees, the Rules Committee of the Faculty Senate will probably eliminate the Scholarship and Financial Aid Committee.

The committee, which was initially formed to recommend policies concerning scholarships, fellowships and financial aid, "has been largely inactive in the past few years," Kenneth Cashin, a member of the committee, said.

"The administration has been taking over financial aid matters as the University grows," he said. "There's been less and less to do."

Senate Secretary Robert Jones said the move to abolish the committee is a result of the growing University, adding "there are now administrators to handle financial aid."

"The committee," Jones said, "used to sit in a room and figure out financial aid for individual students, a task that is now performed by formulas and federal aid laws."

Arthur Jackson, director of Financial Aid, said in his eight years at the University, "the committee has not been functioning."

"The committee was an advisory body for institutional scholarships, but that role is performed by individual departments, and coordinated with the financial aid office," Jackson said.

Jackson said that dissolvement of the committee would not create any additional work for his office.

Lecture will focus on nuclear arms

A lecture/discussion on "Nuclear Weapons and World Power" by Dan Smith, current vice chairman of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament in Great Britain will be held at Hampshire College at 8 p.m. tonight in the west lecture hall of Franklin Patterson Hall.

Smith is an in-residence lecturer at Hampshire this semester as part of the college's Peace Studies program sponsored by a grant from the Samuel Rubin Foundation.

Smith, a freelance defense analyst and researcher, is the author of The War Atlas.

Smith said the lecture will focus on the present cold war. He said the recent passage in the U.S. House of Representatives of the MX missile legislation won't affect the main issues discussed, but he added that arguments brought up by the audience will be welcomed.

The lecture, part of a spring series co-sponsored by the Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies, is free and open to the public.

★senate

Sweeney issued a special challenge to the UMass Republican Club to demonstrate similar fiscal responsibility. Both Sweeney and his co-president received a standing ovation for their action.

Campus Center personnel and a University Police officer removed Sweeney from the meeting for questioning after the burning. He faces a possible fire code violation for burning the budget.

The senate voted last night to re-open nominations for vacant positions on the Budgets Committee with less than four weeks before the budget deadline.

Both the women's and Third World caucuses proposed the re-opening of nominations because of a lack of representation of women and minorities on the committee. There are presently no minorities on the committee and one woman.

The Budgets Committee holds hearings with all Registered Student Organizations and recommends a budget for the $1.8 million Student Activities Trust Fund.

Senators expressed concern that the budget would not be completed on time if many new committee members had to learn the budget process.

The committee must conduct about half of its hearings in the next three weeks.

In other senate action, officers from the Campus Center Board of Governors announced a rally on Monday, April 1 to protest the proposed Universal Resource Fee and the administration's lack of respect for student rights.

The senate passed a motion to move $8 from the $84 Campus Center fee, now allocated to the Board of Governors, to the SATF to retain student control over how the money is spent.

Fran Hegeler, treasurer of the BOG, said the administration wants to move the $8 into the SATF and then control the money as a way to take over the entire trust fund.

"Once you start with the board's money, everything else will go. It's one way of getting into the budgeting process of the senate," Hegeler said.

attend. This includes tuition, room, board, a student activities, dormitory governance fee and optional insurance fees. Last year's tuition increase was 6 percent.

Officials said they did not expect the increase costs to deter student enrollment, because financial aid budgets usually increases when tuition does.

Joe Paul Case, dean of financial aid at Amherst College, said, "while the increase is on the low side, it's still a thousand dollars; those students who are deemed able to pay will have to dig deeper into their pockets," while those who are unable to pay the full cost will receive more financial aid.

Student government leaders at the four colleges said the increases were expected. "Tuition funds a large portion of the expenses" at Hampshire College, Doug Hasbrouck, president of the Student Government there said. "It's expected that tuition goes up every year."

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

It's time to stop fooling ourselves

While all of us were on vacation from UMass last week, many important issues came to the forefront of political debate. In Geneva, the arms control talks proceeded, and in Washington, debate centered around approval of the MX missile, the necessity of the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), and the relationship of the two in the "success" of the Geneva negotiations.

Peter Dow

The debate on the MX and SDI issues will, no doubt, have a great impact on the nuclear negotiations, but one simple question needs answering before we proceed further at Geneva (a question that deserved a reply a long time ago); and that is, "Why should we negotiate?"

Ah, I can see it now—all you leftists have risen and shouted, in unison, "to save the world." This impassioned plea to humanity is very touching, but there are other issues which need to be calmly examined before we blindly concede our American security to the advantage of the Soviets.

First, by even consenting to negotiate with the Soviets, we have placed ourselves on the same level with the Soviet Union; we have allowed ourselves to be judged at a moral and military parity with our enemy. Such a parity is, of course, necessary for any successful negotiation; yet we all know no such equivalence exists between the U.S.S.R. and America. There is no parity between a country that surrounds itself with barbed wire and concrete walls to keep its citizens in, and one that is flooded by a tide of immigrants escaping communist tyranny in Southeast Asia and Central America. And there is no parity between a regime with a ruling class that seeks to dominate the world, and publicly says so, and another that rather weakly attempts to contain that aggressive expansion.

While the Geneva negotiations continue, and while the Reagan administration eagerly works for "improved relations" ("improvement" means less friction, which means more U.S. passivity and appeasement as the U.S.S.R. behaves as it always does), we cannot forget the true nature of the Soviet regime. We cannot forget the cries of the Afghans as they desperately struggle against the horrible Soviet military machine, which has even used chemical warfare in its genocidal attacks in that country. We cannot forget the murders of 269 civilians in a Korean Airliner in 1983, nor can we accept the latest Soviet justification of an American serviceman's murder in East Germany. We cannot overlook the fact that the U.S.S.R. is pumping thousands of tons of weapons into Central America, for their Nicaraguan surrogates to use in squelching their democratic opposition, and in subverting the neighboring American allies of El Salvador, Honduras, and Costa Rica. And finally, we can never forget the totalitarian repression of individuality and basic human freedoms for the people trapped under Soviet block tyranny.

The military parity with the U.S.S.R. implied by our involvement at Geneva is, likewise, nonexistent. The Soviet Union has greatly increased its megatonage and numbers of warheads by deploying huge amounts of new ICBMs, while the most recent U.S. ICBM deployment was in 1970. Today, in fact, 75 percent of Soviet strategic weapons are less than five years old, while an equal percentage of U.S. strategic weapons are 15 years or older. The U.S.S.R. is now in the process of deploying 200 SS-X-25 ICBMs in a network of tunnels, as they modernize their nuclear forces which already include SS-20s, SS-18s, SS-24s and more. Meanwhile the U.S. Congress bickers over the funding of 21 new MX missiles, and whether to support Reagan's SDI, both of which provide opposition to the formidable Soviet nuclear threat.

What America needs at this point is a more hardline attitude—either we insist that the Soviet leadership makes a dramatic effort to reform its totalitarian internal policies and expansionist international policies, or it should be our turn to walk out of nuclear negotiations in protest. America must stop fooling itself, and must realize that any "peace treaty" forged with criminals leads not to peace, but to a blind appeasement as our enemies eagerly continue along the path to world hegemony.

Death or freedom?

Neil McCabe

There are many reasons that people turn to crime: There are huge profits to be gained. You can be your own boss, and set your own hours. Not to mention the fact that crime is often easier than is working for a living. These reasons will always be true, and will always result in a criminal element. It is when the chances of being seriously punished are small that the criminal element becomes active, and law-abiding citizens lose control of the streets, subways and parks.

The solution is simple and fair. Today our courts spend their time deciding whether someone is innocent or guilty. Once the defendant is found to be guilty a punishment is selected that matches the crime. However, once the public limelight is off, these criminals are released to prosper and multiply. The solution is death or freedom.

Once firmly established this new system would be inexpensive and effective. Under the system of death or freedom, the courts would decide if the defendant's actions were terrible enough to require execution. If not, the defendant would be released free to go. During times of tranquility, executions would be few. During times of upheaval, the number of executions would increase. Imagine the impact on tax evasion, or illegal parking after the first few offenders were destroyed. Of course, they would cease to be problems.

Other crimes such as rape, theft, and plagiarism would also decrease. While "so-called" victimless crimes like price-fixing, rollerskating at the Fine Arts Center, or failing to place a napkin in your lap at mealtime would be decriminalized.

This is not to say there will not be new problems. With the reduction in court business, thousands of lawyers would be forced to find honest jobs. But we believe with the passage of time these lawyers will be absorbed into America's growing economy.

As for the thousands of empty prisons the answers are not all that simple. However, with sufficient tax credits businesses could be encouraged to convert the deserted correctional facilities into malls, office space, or even low income housing. Local communities could turn former penitentiaries into senior citizen centers where people in their declining years could be served hot meals and work on arts and crafts.

The time to act is now. Unless steps are taken to institute needed reforms we will become a nation of sheep and wolves. Failure to base our criminal justice system on death or freedom will send a message to the criminal element saying we lack the inner strength to deal with crime. In the words of our president, "If not us, who? If not now, when?"

Co-op deserves the space

It has been brought to my attention that a decision will be made tonight concerning the future use of the space that once housed Union Records in the Student Union. The student body and the Board of Governors should be made aware of the importance of the decision that will be made.

Two options have risen above the rest for the use of this space. The Bicycle Co-op, which is presently housed on the main floor of the Student Union is diligently vying for this space, in opposition to a proposal to put an ice cream parlor there. It is the duty of the BOG to make a choice which will most greatly benefit the students of this campus.

The Bicycle Co-op offers free help and inexpensive parts and equipment to all students and employees at UMass. In addition, it organizes tours for all bikers, from novice to pro, and it is an effective marketplace for people wanting to buy or sell any type of bike. The space the co-op occupies now is very small in proportion to all the services it provides for us.

Some might argue that an ice cream shop would return badly needed funds to the campus. But we must first spend money on ice cream before we can see the small profit such a business might yield, especially after paying the employees. The Bike Co-op has no paid employees, only enthusiastic volunteers.

I wince at the thought of an ice cream shop in that corridor of the Student Union. It could potentially be a very congested area and would most certainly take so much business from the Coffee Shop that the profits the new store would make may not provide what the BOG might expect.

If we are to consider which proposal would best suit the needs of the students, the Bicycle Co-op undeniably enhances the value of our Student Union much more than any ice cream shop ever could.

But...it was an accident

Herb Ramy

As Mr. Smith and his wife walk into their home, they hear a noise coming from the living room down the hall. Smith, knowing that no one should be in the house, immediately reached for the gun he'd hidden in the cabinet near the door. This is the same gun he'd purchased from a friend of his at the gun shop in town only a week ago. After three robberies in two months he wasn't taking any chances. As soon as he had the gun in his hand he calmed down and began to stare coldly down the hall. "This is one crook who isn't going to get away," he thought to himself as he slowly inched his way towards the living room. His wife tried to grab him, but he shrugged her off and placed a finger to his lips in a gesture for silence. Any noise now and the crook would surely get away.

As he began his trip down the hallway once again, the gun in his hand bolstered his courage with every step he took. Reaching the room, he looked in to see a man hunched over the room's desk rifling through its contents. His first reaction was to shoot this man who'd invaded the sanctity of his home, but instead he aimed the gun and yelled "Freeze!" Hearing this the man jumped, and without really knowing he'd done it, Smith fired, hitting the man in the back of the head killing him instantly.

For a short time he was so shocked that he didn't hear his wife screaming hysterically beside him. When he regained his composure, he was able to calm his wife down enough to have her phone the police. While she was on the phone, he turned on the light to see exactly what he'd done. One look at the scene was all it took before he ran to the bathroom, bent over the toilet seat and began to retch. When he finished, he walked back into the room. For some reason the grisly site held some sort of fascination for him. He felt compelled to see the face of the man he'd killed. He reached down and turned over the body, so as to be able to see the face. For a few moments he didn't recognize it, the bullet had done its work. When he did realize who it was, he picked up and cradled the body of his dead son in his arms.

Was this a true story? No. Was it a bit melodramatic? Maybe. Do events like this happen often? All too often I'm afraid. I guess the bottom line is that as you were reading this newspaper during lunch, or during a boring class, a person was killed by a handgun in this country. By the end of the day about 30 people will have been killed. Admittedly some of them will be criminals, but some will be people cleaning their guns, some will be college students coming home from college break a day early, and some will be small children playing with daddy's new toy.

Beware of those secret parking rules

Attention students, faculty, employees, and anyone else that might park a car on campus: the parking spot on the end of any row in any parking lot on campus is a tow zone. It may look just like any other legal spot but it's a trick; don't park there. What is this idiot talking about, you're saying. It's true, I parked there and got towed away.

March 8, I parked my car in the last spot of the first row of parking spaces in lot 44. At 1 a.m. on Tuesday, March 12, one of the nice officers of the Department of Public Safety decided to make known to me this secret rule and wrote me a ticket for parking, get this, in an access lane. Access lane to what, the car in front of mine? Well, apparently the officer thought my car was such a menace he had it immediately towed, as it arrived in Amherst Towing's lot at 1:35 a.m.

March 15, I went to get it so that I, along with two friends and my sister, could go home for spring break. It was quite the shock when I arrived to find it missing from the lot and no where to be seen. Fortunately, I found someone else with a car that hadn't left yet and another who could lend me $45 so I could go down and get my legally parked car back.

Naturally this event put quite a damper on the beginning of my vacation as well as force me to spend most of it in solitude for lack of funds. I am going to vigorously appeal the $5 ticket I got as well as the towing fee for all the good it's going to do me. My faith in the good of the system isn't very high right now. I have a lot of better things to do with my hard earned money than to pay for someone else's mistakes.

Is there any place where I can park my car where I can be sure it will be there when I come back? I can find an illegally parked car nearly every time I look in any lot on campus. Don't they have enough to do than bother legally parked cars as well? It's a pretty sad day when you follow the rules and still get punished. I'll be forever wondering when I leave my car if it will be there when I come back.

SGA has potential to change for the better

I think it's time to set some things straight here. In Rob Skelton's column, he claimed that if Kim Hacket and I had been elected, we would unfairly cut "government involvement" to the bone. This is in direct contradiction to what we spoke about when we talked of budget cuts. We said we wanted to cut the waste, so that we'd have money to spend on more important things than payroll. Who is wielding the knife that is cutting the BOG? Certainly not students, whether liberal, moderate or conservative. I have personally said time and time again that I do not wish to see SCERA disbanded, or even cut more radically than any other group. Let's look at the truth, Skelton. Again I, as a member of the Budgets Committee, will say it: the SGA has no money. We have to cut everyone's budget. There's not a question of which group's first, because they are all going to get cut.

The next item I want to address is that of giving "lip service" to the Third World. Kim and I were invited to speak at the Third World Steering Committee's meeting on Thursday, February 28. Because of an incident in the Senate the night before, we expressed a desire to wait until things had cooled off a little before speaking, and we were given reason to believe that the matter was understood by representatives of the Committee. Unfortunately, this was not the case, we were branded as racist, imperialist, oppressive, repressive, and quite a variety of unpleasant things. Friday, March 1, saw an "emergency meeting" of all Third World students in the Malcolm X Center in Southwest, where it was made very clear that Kim and I were not going to receive any support whatsoever from any Third World organization. As political candidates, we had to be pragmatic: is it in our best interest to try and beg the Third World to vote for us (an impossibility), or do we work harder on our campaign in other areas? The answer should be obvious. Winning by a majority (of 650 votes) is not the same as winning by 49 states. I believe that Kim and I made an excellent showing, and I hope this encourages more students who are moderately inclined to start voicing their opinions along with students of a more liberal persuasion. We are all students. We need to learn how to make the student government work for the student body as a whole. I believe that with time, patience, and a great deal of hard work, the SGA can change, and for the better. As St. Augustine said, "Credo quiam absurdam est."

Teaching ability should be the criteria

This letter is in response to the article in the Collegian about the UMass track record regarding hiring minority and women faculty members. This institution is here to educate the younger generation. Therefore its faculty should be comprised of the best people for the job regardless of race or sex. So what if 92 percent of the faculty is Caucasian with 82 percent of them male? If they are the better instructors then that is how it should be. I don't think it is necessary to "recruit" minorities and women just to make the percentages look good. This is not the correct priority; the correct one is the best teacher for the job, not the Nobel Prize winner who can't lecture or the brilliant minority whose English makes it impossible for him to interact with students. What we do need are teachers who are here to teach us, not here to take advantage of the facilities for their personal research or spend more time trying to publish their work than preparing for class. And how about if these teachers made themselves more available to the people who pay their salaries: the students?

IRA actions respond to British violence

In response to Lorena Nozzilillo's column of March 25 "When will the killings end" in Northern Ireland, we must first ask "Why did the killings begin?" Starting in 1964, a civil rights movement was formed demanding jobs, housing and voting rights for Catholics. Peaceful marches were met with baton charges from the Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC). In 1969, British soldiers were sent in as "peacekeepers." That role didn't last long for they opened fire on peaceful demonstrators on "Bloody Sunday," killing 13. The Irish Republican Army had been militarily inactive since 1957, engaging instead in political activity. To defend Catholic ghettos from Loyalist and British violence, IRA units sprang up in 1968. In 1980-81, the IRA again withdrew during the hunger strikes while several of the jailed hunger strikers were elected to Parliament. Bobby Sands, MP, died after 62 days of a hunger strike. Nine others followed him. In 1982, the bombing campaign resumed. Irish Nationalist attempts at peaceful solutions have been repeatedly bludgeoned into the ground. Amnesty International and the European Commission on Human Rights have documented torture and indiscriminate killing by the British Army and the RUC. Who are the terrorists in Northern Ireland? In a body count alone, of the more than 2000 victims since 1969, 75 percent have been Catholics, most of them civilians.

There is nothing noble or romantic about poverty and oppression. Northern Ireland has the highest infant mortality rate in Europe, 50 percent of the housing in Belfast is unfit for human habitation and 50 percent of the Catholic population are unemployed. Working hours are longer, earnings are lower, and prices are higher than in any other place in the United Kingdom.

The IRA is not fighting for a "noble" or a "romantic" cause, they are fighting a war, a war for survival. John F. Kennedy said, "When peaceful revolution is made impossible, violent revolution becomes inevitable." We must look to the cause of violence. As long as the British can extract a shilling's worth of profit from Northern Ireland, they will continue their military occupation. Their motives are mercenary, not moral. The British empire was built on the rule "Divide and Conquer." They did it throughout their empire. What is happening there is not unlike El Salvador, the Philippines, or any place dominated by a foreign power. The oppressed of these countries are fighting back because peaceful revolution is not possible. The solution is not to blame the victims. The solution in Northern Ireland is to put an end to British exploitation.

Records and more records

BREWING UP WITH BILLY BRAGG

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

There are records coming out every day. So here's the first batch of shorter reviews.

FLEETWOOD MAC: Cerulean (Shanghai): This two record set was recorded live in Boston in 1970. It features the original Fleetwood Mac line-up, Peter Green, Jeremy Spencer and Danny Kirwan on guitars, Mick Fleetwood on drums and John McVie on bass. The highlight of the album is the third side which is a twenty-four minute version of 'Rattlesnake Shake' which doesn't sound at all dated and only sounds trite for about the last three minutes, an endurance record few bands can still attain. The other three sides are basic blues and R&B covers.

MADONNA: Material Girl (Sire): There's no excuse for this. Not only has music no longer taken on a socially appropriate stance but it is now reinforcing the worst in people. I think that people should shut this shit off when it comes on the radio. Because it does stick in your head. I wonder how many people hear 'Like a Virgin' when they make love now. Oh yea, you make me feel like anything I have learned or felt is nothing. If we gave avacados for this record you couldn't make enough guacamole for a flea from this one.

JOHN HIATT: Warming up to the Ice Age (Geffen): When I first heard the title song from this album I thought it was a joke. "I guess she's warming up to the ice age" the chorus goes. But once you hear the whole album you realize that he is serious. Basically he's an Elvis Costello ripoff. The album is pretty tight and could have been popular in 1971. But people should know better than this by now.

GAP BAND: Gap Band VI (Total Experience): This is a surprisingly good record. It's tastefully done. A lot sound like what Little Feat tried to produce for years. The songs have the usual themes both musically and socially but the percussion makes the album danceable and fun to listen to.

BILLY BRAGG: Brewing Up With Billy Bragg (CD): Yes, refreshing. Billy Bragg plays solo electric guitar wired up really loudly. Occasionally accompained by an organ or a trumpet Billy slugs his way through a series of "puckish satires on contemporary mores." Because of the way the album is recorded it sounds like he is sitting in your living room with his guitar just playing for you. It's well worth checking out. If he must be categorized he sounds a little bit like some Elvis Costello, (but not John Hiatt); his sound is pretty unique.

CONEY HATCH: Friction (Mercury/Polygram): There is once again little excuse for these guys. Generic pseudo-sensitive heavy metal. Real sensitive. Like the picture on the inside sleeve of a woman with torn clothes who seems to be humping a banister on a staircase. The music isn't much different.

RICHARD THOMPSON: Across a Crowded Room (Polydor/Polygram): I never thought I would see the day when I described a Richard Thompson album as slick. But this album is slick that is. Sometimes too much for its own good. Thompson played alot of these songs last semester when he played at the Iron Horse, only then they were acoustic, by his lonesome. Not so here. We have background vocals wailing, we have the band playing on a normal rhythm not that nifty syncopated jig-like rhythm that drove so much of Richard's other material. Some of the material fares well, "When the Spell is Broken" is really pretty haunting for example. But some of the songs get creamed, 'Love in a Faithless Country,' once a subtle song now Busby Berkly. All in all the album is pretty listenable when it is turned up loudly. Oh yes, be sure to go see Richard when he plays at the Iron Horse April 15 with his band, it should be really fun.

THE BLASTERS: Hard Line (Slash): Mellowing out a bit from their last outing The Blasters continue to make some solid rockabilly action. Hard Line offers a fine cross section of songs including one with a fine caberet accordian on it. The version of "Samson and Delilah" is a little dry for my taste (not preachy enough) but on the whole the album can be described by some collection of pleasant adjectives.

VAN MORRISON: A Sense of Wonder (Mercuty): There are two sides to this record and they are rather different. The first side sounds like Moondance or Tupelo Honey. The arrangements are tight and considering the last few of his vinyl outings this one is a pleasant surprise. On the second side Morrison takes a few more rinks and for the most part they succeed. Notable are two covers, one of Mose Allison's "If you only Knew" which is a throw back to Van's early days with Them and "Let the Slave-incorporating-The Price of Experience" which is an adaptation of a poem of William Blake's. Having gotten the boot by Warner Brothers A Sense of Wonder shows that Morrison can still produce.

Rock maverick revisited

Maverick
George Thorogood and the Destroyers
EMI Records

By JACK BRESNAHAN
Collegian Staff

This is another of those albums that should be enjoyed at maximum volume. George and the Destroyers have come up with a batch of raring, blaring new list of songs on Maverick. Though the majority of the tunes are oldsters, the band does some reviving and updating.

Maverick is an apt title for a George Thorogood album. In his rise to success he has left a legend of sorts, crossing unparalleled trails. Prior to being "discovered," he played semi professional baseball, and later began touring in the off season. In 1982 he was billed on the Rolling Stones tour and attained international acclaim. He's since landed another major record contract, and presently galavants around the country in a personalized yellow Checker party cab. He's definitely got more than luck as his companion, more than gambling as his game.

The album adheres to the maxums established by George's main influences. While in the past his sound has been more widely blues oriented, this time around he's opted for a much heavier blues-rock fusion. He still incorporates the Elmore James and Hound Dog Taylor slide. The sound of the songs comes across as very projected, similar to the way he sounds in a large concert hall. His days of playing small clubs are basically over, so he has made the transition well. This was partly due to their engineering, done by Terry Manning, who's had a hand in all of ZZ TOP's albums since 1973. The result is a very big sound, as exemplified on their "Gear Jammer" single.

Among his other new ones are "I Drink Alone," "woman With the Blues," which is a veritable anthem for mistreated women, and "Long Gone." The latter is one of the most high-powered rock and roll songs he's ever penned, and the sax effectively stands out. He also covers Fats Domino's "What A Price," and "Willie and the Hand Jive," which owes a lot to Bo Diddley. A souped-up version of Carl Perkin's "Dixie Fried" is included as well as his buddy John Lee Hooker's "Crawling King Snake." He does an extended version of Chuck Berry's "Memphis, Tennessee," which has additional lyrics that aren't to be found on any Berry album I've heard. He must have some inside information. The apex is reached on "(Let's) Go Go Go," from 0-60 in one second flat. It's definative rock and roll, and you'll want to boogie every time you hear it.

ARTS

live wire
by Peter Wissoker

Tonight is the Al Dimeola, Airto Moreira and Phil Markowitz show at the SUB. Tickets are only five dollars. Dimeola will play solo and with the other two. Dimeola plays some kind of spanish/jazz type guitar and Airto is a master percussionist, best known for his work with his wife Flora Purim, so it should be pretty hot.

If you don't like that well...There is Kiss in Springfield next in the Civic Center after the Grateful Dead. Dead soundman, Dan Healy, said at Hampshire College on Monday that the Civic Center was used a a prototype for Altec-Lansing, the speaker company, and therefore has the best acoustics of any hall its size in the country, so enjoy, KISS fans. There will be four reggae bands at the Agora in Hartford and Sally Rodgers is playing at the Iron Horse, all tonight. 'Til Tuesday was cancelled at Pearl Street.

Tomorrow night The Lyres are coming to the Rusty Nail. The Lyres are built from the ashes of DMZ one of the original Boston punk bands. Now a semi-psychedelic unit they have a record out and seem to be gettinga lot of international coverage. The Lyres will be playing with the Blackjacks and the ever improving Mongrel Puppy. Last week they were really good.

Elsewhere it's jazz, jazz, jazz. At the Fine Arts Center is the Fourth Annual Jazz Showcase featuring most of the University's Jazz Ensembles. At Amherst saxophonist Carter Jefferson will be playing on a bill with the Freddie Bryant Sextet. The concert will be in Buckley Hall. Both concerts are free. In Hartford the Art Ensemble of Chicago will be playing. The Ensemble which features Lester Bowie on trumpet plays a melange of styles from jazz and rock to African chants and spirituals. They've been around for twenty years so you know there must be something to them. Oh yes, the concert is at the Charter Oak Temple off Main St.. For more information call (203)-525-5521.

Saturday The James Montgomery Band is at the Red Balloon, 8th Route Army is at Sheehan's in Northampton and the Persuassions are at the Iron Horse both Friday and Saturday.

Sunday, Larry Coryell will be at the Iron Horse. His shows last year were really good, if that's a good sign. Emmylou Harris who was recently on the Prairie Home Companion will be at the Agora Ballroom in Hartford. Across town (Hartford, that is) Robert J. Lurtaema will be joining with the Hartford Symphony in a "Symphony for Peace". I assume that the Haagen-Daz man himself will be narrating. On Tuesday the Radiators will be playing at the Rusty Nail and Doc Watson will be at the Iron Horse.

Trivia Question: Let's try again. Win a free copy of the Flamingo Kid soundtrack. This is a collection of oldies which is probably much better than the movie. And the question is: What did Elvis Presley like to read in the late fifties? Bring your answer down to the Arts desk with your name, the date and time (no cheating).

The Amherst Ballet Theater is sponsoring a special benefit film showing at the Amherst Cinema Footloose and The World According to Garp will be playing Sunday through Tuesday as part of this program.

A resurrection of Death in Venice

Mabou Mines
A Prelude to Death in Venice
At the Rand Theater
Tuesday March 26

By BRADFORD VERTER
Collegian Staff

Mabou Mines' A Prelude to A Death in Venice, presented at the Rand theater on March 26 is a multileveled piece of satanic slapstick, offering an interesting insight into Mann's novella for those who cared to look for it.

In terms of narrative action, Prelude has very little to do with "Death in Venice." The play takes place between two phone booths in Manhattan where a schitzophrenic ventriloquist Bill Raymond and John his 3 1/2-foot dummy, "live on the edge."

Through John, who is a movie actor, the ventriloquist makes numerous calls attempting to solve his numerous problems. However, there are masks within masks, and John adopts several personalities, including a queegie-fondling Bogart. One of the places he calls is "Johns Anonymous," a support group for perverts. Another is the residence of his mother/lover.

Prelude takes off from there. At one point there is a surrealistic descent into hell engineered through the phone booths upon which John has been playing Bach's Toccata. At another point a gigantic tire from a police car wheels on stage.

It is difficult to pinpoint exactly how "Prelude" relates to "Death in Venice." Certainly there are many allusions to the story: John has an indescribable urge to "shoot" his film on a beach in Venice; John's message service quotes from the book and tells John that "Tom called." "Did he leave a number?" John asks. "Yes: 1875 to 1955." There is also a hilarious scene where John describes his having once projected an ideal onto a cat and followed it around obsessively, forshadowing von Aschenback's actions in the novella.

Bill Raymond in the Mabou Mines' production of A Prelude to Death in Venice.

Whether the ventriloguist is supposed to actually be Mann's Gustave von Aschenbach, or simply another manifestation of an uncommon psyche, is purposely left vague.

This is by no means a fault; there is a delicious ambiguity in the levels of text and subtext. While Prelude can be enjoyed by virtue of its references to "Death in Venice," it is successful in its own right. Prelude is a very funny, a very intelligent play.

Mabou Mines is an artistic collaborative of eight people: musicians writers, actors and sculptors. Their next production at the Rand will be Company, by Samuel Beckett (8 pm, Thursday and Friday). To miss it would be a crass act of mindless negligence.

A Firm grip

The Firm
By The Firm
Atlantic Records

By JONATHAN PERRY
Collegian Correspondent

The Firm, released by the band of the same name, is a good news-bad news album.

The good news is that Jimmy Page, former leader and guitarist extraordinare for Led Zeppelin, is back on vinyl, having formed The Firm with former Free and Bad Company vocalist Paul Rodgers. The bad news is that, while having its bright spots, the album is bland and will most likely not be satisfying to Zeppelin or Bad Company fans.

The Firm's other members include veteran drummer Chris Slade who's played with Manfred Mann among other bands, and newcomer bassist-synthesist Tony Franklin. These two comprise a competent rhythm section.

However, after what amounts to a five-year absence from music, (with the exception of a Death Wish II soundtrack) since the demise of Zeppelin, by one of the most influential guitarists of the 60s and 70s, one expects more from Page and his band. Admittedly, another Led Zeppelin may be asking too much, but this album is far too safe and middle-of-the-road, and seems creatively restrictive for Page, who is capable of much better.

While his playing is solid and consistent, one keeps wanting him to really let loose. Rodgers lyrics at times seem uninteresting and cliche-bound. The biggest of these is The Firm's tired remake of the much-covered "You've Lost That Lovin' Feeling", which adds nothing to the Righteous Brothers original. (Hall and Oates' version is far better).

This is not to say, however, that there are no strong cuts on the album. There are a few, most notably the anthemic-sounding "Midnight Moonlight", which features a sensitive acoustic guitar opening and heartfelt vocal that builds into a Zeppelinesque rocker with a pile-driving rhythm. "Closer" delivers an energetic guitar from Page and lively vocals from Rodgers, and has an tight four piece horn section. "Radioactive" is a spirited rocker with a psychedelic 60s feel.

If Page and Rodgers can rediscover the energy they possessed musically in the 60s and 70s while on tour this summer and inject it into this band, The Firm's next album should be worth hearing.

Tulane players shaved points

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Two Tulane University basketball players surrendered to authorities here yesterday in connection with an alleged point-shaving scandal.

The two members of the Green Wave were booked and fingerprinted by New Orleans police. Boston College was the last NCAA school involved in a point-shaving scandal.

SPORTS

Spring sports begin

Track, golf prepare for seasons

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

With the arrival of sunny days, the hectic spring sports schedule promises to provide fans with a wide variety of events to watch.

Coming off successful indoor seasons, both the men's and women's Track teams look forward to running outside and possibly bringing home a conference title.

Men's head coach Ken O'Brien leads the team into action the weekend of April 6th at Dartmouth, and while he would like to win the title he knows the team will face an uphill struggle.

"I think we should battle for the top three places in the conference along with Southern Connecticut and Maine," O'Brien said. "We have a lot of strength in the middle distances, along with some good individuals in the technique events (hurdles, javelin, and jumping events), but as far as the Eastern Regionals are concerned, we really don't have enough depth to place in the top five. If I had to make a guess, I would see ourselves finishing in the second five."

Women's coach Kalekeni Banda fields a team he expects to compete strongly in New England as well as with some of the more powerful Eastern schools.

"Most of our runners are strong in New England, especially in relays", Banda said. "We're going to finish in the top ten in the Easterns again this year."

Coach Jack Leaman's golf teams will be buss this spring with one more season before budget cuts eliminate both teams after next year. The men's team comes off last season's third place in New England with even higher goals for this season.

"I expect us to have an outstanding year," Leaman said. "We're very close to being one of the two top teams in New England, with co-captains Tyler Shearer and Charlie Ross back, we should be competitive in every tournament."

Unlike the men's team, the women face a very tough season with only four women presently participating. Most tournaments allow six players from each team to score, the two highest scores being tossed out. But with only four competitors, Leaman's team will not have the luxury of a single poor performance.

"We need more women to tryout and enter into the program," Leaman stressed. "There are a lot of good players on this campus that think you have to shoot a 75 to make the team. If anyone can shoot below 100, I would like to see them play for me because as it is, it would be very difficult to improve over last year's 8th place in New England. There's just too much pressure on my four women."

Golf, along with tennis and skiing, was one of seven sports eliminated by the athletic administration's budget cuts in order to facilitate other programs. The team faces elimination, as the wrestling program already has, at the conclusion of next season.

Men's Volleyball, resurfacing after a four year disappearance debuts this week with matches against Springfield College and Bryant. What was a first a promising squad hopeful of a New England Collegiate title, the team has been hampered by internal problems. Coach Pat Ryan has moved on while previous co-captain Juan Maldonado has reportedly returned to his Connecticut home. Outside power hitter Larry Dedesus has chosen not to participate this semester, and amidst scheduling problems with Boyden gym, sophomore hitter Roger Chapman has been forced to give up his playing time in order to take on the coaching responsibilities vacated by Ryan.

Minutewomen explode in 12-0 rout of Holy Cross

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER—After six losses and a tie, the University of Massachusetts softball team finally got back on the winning track with a 12-0 pasting of hapless Holy Cross yesterday at Freshman Field here.

Junior co-captain Lynn Stockley toss struck out 13 and gave up just two hits. Stockley also aided her own cause going went 2 for 3 at the plate with a double and an RBI.

Sally Maher also began to break out of her hitting slump (.200 after the Southern trip) with two hits. She also scored on a four-base error in the top of the seventh after the Cross (0-1) centerfielder dropped the fly ball.

UMass, now 4-8-1, had 10 hits on the day.

"It was nice to win again," head coach Elaine Sortino said. "We were a little tentative at the start. It took us a while to get into our rhythm. It was just a matter of time."

Through the first three innings, UMass only produced one run, thanks to two second-inning Crusader errors and a Martha Jamieson third inning single.

Lynn Stockley fires the ball in yesterday's 12-0 win over Holy Cross as second baseman Carol Frattaroli awaits the outcome. The lefthander had 13 strikeouts and tossed a two hitter.

"It was such a severe change for us (Holy Cross vs. South Carolina competition)," Sortino said. "We will need some more games like this to get back into the flow."

Two singles by Maher and Debbie Cole started off a four-run fourth inning that put UMass in command for good, 5-0.

In the fifth, the Minutewomen added three more with six different players in the line up as Sortino cleared the bench to give her freshman and sophomore laden team more experience. Eight freshman and four sophomores are on the 16 man roster.

Ilene Freeman, who replaced co-captain Beth Talbott behind the plate went 1-for-1 with a single and 2 RBI's in the fifth. Freshman Alisa Fila, who replaced freshman Paige Kopeza at short, also stroked a double to lead off the seventh.

"It was a good opportunity to play everyone. It was a good game. It was the kind of game we needed," Sortino said.

Stockley, who had 18 strikeouts in five games in South Carolina, now has 28 K's on the year, a 2-4 record and her second shutout of the year.

The Minutewomen open their home season Friday tomorrow against a much-improved Boston College team at 3 pm at NOPE. And on Saturday, UMass begins their quest for an Atlantic 10 tournament berth as they open their A-10 season with an important doubleheader with Rhode Island at 1 p.m. on Saturday.

NOTEBOOK—In three games the past two years with UMass, Holy Cross has been outhit 35-6 and outscored by a 31-2 margin...The Minutewomen finally got on track in the fourth inning yesterday but then, UMass left seven runners on base in three innings.

Ultimate team trys to return to Final Four

The University of Massachusetts men's ultimate frisbee team began practice this week, with what looks like its best squad ever.

"We lost several players from last year's team (33-2 in collegiate action)," senior Eric Kehoe said, "but several new players, including transfer sensation Bubba Caravalho, have really filled in those vacancies."

This year the ten best college teams in the nation (which could include Hansas, Texas, Michigan State, Cornell, Tufts, and Stanford) will travel to Palo Alto on May 24 to play at Stanford University. Last year UMass made it to the final four, only to lose to Stanford and take third place nationally.

"We just won't be satisfied with that this year. It will take a great deal of commitment, but I think we are ready to do what is necessary to win," senior Jay Seeger said.

Dave Ellsworth, the varsity head coach of the Ultimate team at Northfield Mt. Herman prep school in Deerfield said, "Ultimate has evolved a great deal of late. Five or six years ago, Ultimate was associated with the Grateful Dead, bandanas, and partying. Now there are varsity teams in high schools everywhere, and the collegiate national champion will be the top team out of some 300 universities across the nation. It's big time."

Sports Log

Tony Betros

Just a few thoughts...

It figures. I spend a week in Florida, desperately trying to get dark, and when I come back, I can't even show my slightly bronzed face in public. Three respresentatives of this year's final four college basketball tournament are from the Big East. The problem is that I thought the ACC was a better conference. What's really bad is that each Big East school got into the final four by beating an ACC team. Yes, the NIKE does taste mighty good, but it could use a little salt.

Georgetown-St. John's will meet for the fourth time this year, with the Hoyas holding a 2-1 edge. This contest should be no different than the others; a tough, physical game right down to the wire. The key for Georgetown will be to apply their full-court press early to disrupt the Redmen's half-court offense...St. John's will have to keep Georgetown from moving the ball, especially when they kick it in to Ewing and back out. That's going to mean either a tough man-to-man or maybe even a box-and-one...The Hoyas are just too deep and should make their third final trip in four years.

Rollie Massimino travelled an interesting road. He went from Lexington High School right here in Massachusetts to Lexington, Kentucky as he makes his first final four appearance with the Villanova Wildcats.

He's going to need exceptional play from Dwaine McClain and Ed Pinckney to stop Memphis State. They haven't been playing all that well in the tournament but they still have been winning. What better time to peak than during the semifinals?...The Tigers should take this one by about seven.

That leaves Georgetown-Memphis State in the finals. Rather than trying to analyze the game, I think I'll do what Sir Lawrence Olivier did during the Oscars. Georgetown will win. Good night.

Pro basketball and hockey are rounding out their regular seasons and frankly, it's about time. Expanded playoff formats have made these two sports quite boring during the regular season. It's a shame when teams like Atlanta in basketball and Detroit in hockey make the playoffs...That's why baseball is the most exciting sport as far as pennant races are concerned. The winner of each division goes and that's that.

Other happenings around the sports world: It looks like people are trying to form a professional polo league, probably starting off in six cities. So, if you make $50,000 a year (or more) and look good in a box and one...I just thought I'd warn you that Saturday night is gong to be pretty dull around campus.

No more need be said.

SCERA to hold events honoring King

By LORI KIRKLAND
Collegian Staff

In efforts to further student power and the democratic principle on campus, the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy is facilitating several projects concerning various awareness issues including next week's celebration of Martin Luther King Jr.

Martin Luther King Jr. Week is held annually on the anniversary of King's death, Dave Martin, student coordinator of SCERA, said. King was murdered in Memphis on April 4, 1968.

"The week was designed to celebrate King's life and ideas and to bring people together to formulate plans of action to further actualize his dream of the day when people would not be judged on the basis of their race or sex but solely on the basis of their character," Martin said.

The anniversary celebration will begin on Sunday, at 3 p.m. in the Hampden Theatre with a play about King and the Civil Rights Movement. Al Eaton will recreate one of King's most famous speeches.

The tribute will continue on Tuesday with a panel discussion featuring Ambassador Yousofou of the Organization of African Unity to the United Nations and Penelope Andrews of South Africa. The Reverend Charles Stith from Boston and Reverend Ronald Peters from Springfield will also participate in the discussion along with UMass faculty members. The discussion will be held Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

On Thursday, there will be a gospel extravaganza with choirs from Bethlehem, Pa., Amherst and Springfield. The guest speaker at this event will be Dr. Brian Mosley and it will be held at 7:00 p.m. at the Campus Center Auditorium.

A series of five films on Martin Luther King will be shown on April 3 and 8 in Campus Center room 163. Wednesday's films include I Have a Dream...The Life of Martin Luther King, Martin Luther King: Doubts and Certainty, and Martin Luther King Jr.: From Montgomery to Memphis. The films will be shown between 3 and 8 p.m.

The two films on Monday April 8 are Black Like Me and Bill Cosby on Prejudice and will be shown during the day-long seminar which begins at 8:30 a.m.

Nuclear arms termed political

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

Nuclear weapons are serving as political symbols, not as weapons, a British freelance defense analyst and researcher said in a lecture last night at Hampshire College.

Dan Smith, who is the current vice-chair of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament in Great Britain, spoke to about 35 people on the subject of the relationship between nuclear weapons and America.

Smith said that to understand the current nuclear weapons situation, people must discover the political reasoning behind the weapons in order to get the full picture.

He said there is a current movement by the New Right Conservatives in America to "get people in line" on the nuclear issue and create a myth about weapons so that there will be less resistance to U.S. Government policies on defense.

"Some of the jokes that Ronald Reagan makes serve a definite purpose and function. A chill ran down the spines of most of the world when Reagan made that joke about bombing the Russians," he said. "It may be deliberate, (but) somewhere in there you find the relationship between nuclear weapons and nuclear war."

Smith said a relationship exists between nuclear weapons and world power, and that "it's a complex relationship."

Smith said this relationship is evident in the false myth created by Reagan to "eliminate the Vietnam syndrome" of American military defeat and lessen the fear of a nuclear arms buildup in Americans' minds. He said this myth is fueled by Americans who desire to get "things back to order" and, "not get kicked around."

Using Central America as an example, Smith said, "Given everything that is said, it would take a lot for the Sandinistas to think of nuclear weapons as a paper tiger."

Smith, also author of The War Atlas, expressed concern for the current U.S. policy on nuclear weapons which he said has been a policy of deterrent.

"Ronald Reagan tried to tell people it was conceivable to have a limited nuclear war in Europe," Smith said. "All Reagan was saying was his strategy. They were describing the strategy accurately rather than changing it."

He said we absolutely cannot rely on keeping nuclear war limited. "It is now a situation where a threat to use nuclear weapons as retaliation is worthless."

Smith is in residence at Hampshire this semester as part of the college's Peace Studies program sponsored by a grant from the Samuel Rubin Foundation. The lecture is part of a spring series co-sponsored by the Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies.

The Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies was started last year from a four year grant from the Ford Foundation.

The program serves to expand the attention and thought given to peace and war issues in the Five Colleges by enriching curriculum and public debate. Several lectures are scheduled for the upcoming weeks.

Alcohol awareness and rise of drinking age force changes

Revised alcohol policy under consideration

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

The University Alcoholic Beverage Policy, recently revised to adhere to the new state legal drinking age, will not only affect students but the entire University community.

The University Committee on Alcohol Use sent the policy draft to Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey before spring break for approval.

The new state law, which raises the legal drinking age to 21, will mean that more than 80 percent of the students at the University of Massachusetts will not be of legal drinking age beginning June 1.

However, a grandfather clause will allow people who have turned 20 years old before that date to legally drink.

"There's nothing in the policy about a dry campus," Carlene Riccelli, chairperson of the University Committee on Alcohol Use, said in response to student claims that the policy would prohibit alcohol on campus.

Riccelli spoke at a recent Human Relations Forum on alcohol on campus, where University administrators and students met to discuss the impact of the policy draft on the University community.

"The campus policy is no more stringent than state law," she said.

The policy's general guidelines reflect the changes in the state law and emphasize the consequences of alcohol-related violations:

- The policy prohibits people under 21 years old from drinking, serving, buying or transporting alcoholic beverages.
- Violators are subject to arrest, criminal charges and fines if a person buys alcohol for a minor, serves alcohol to an intoxicated person, drives under the influence of alcohol or uses false identification.

Bar owners side step ban on happy hours

By BETHANNE MOSKOV
Collegian Staff

The banning of happy hours in Massachusetts has had little, if any, effect on the Amherst area thanks to the various ways bar owners have developed to work around the new law.

Dan Carlson of Barsie's in Amherst said, "There's been no change whatsoever in business. Now instead of having happy hours we'll have a drink special for the week.

"It's really easy to get around the new rule," said Carlson. "We hadn't anticipated any problems from the start."

Bank of Boston fails to report yet more funds

BOSTON (AP) — The embattled First National Bank of Boston received a show of support from shareholders at its annual meeting yesterday, despite its surprise announcement that it failed to tell the government about an additional $110 million in international cash transactions.

Chairman William L. Brown told shareholders that the bank, which pleaded guilty in February to not reporting $1.2 billion in cash transactions with Swiss banks, did not report $110 million worth of cash transactions with banks in Canada and Haiti.

Brown said the bank notified the federal government of the unreported transactions on Wednesday, and did not know whether it would be fined a second time. The bank paid a record $500,000 fine for the Swiss reporting violations.

Patrick Walsh, the federal attorney who has handled the Bank of Boston case, said the government will levy another fine if it learns that the bank did not report the transactions intentionally to avoid the law.

"It really depends on where the investigation goes," he said. "If it was just a systems error, there will be no other criminal charges."

At a news conference after the shareholders meeting, Brown said, "We made a mistake. We should have reported. All we can do is tell you the truth."

House votes for MX

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House yesterday ended a bruising congressional marathon and voted 217-210 to release $1.5 billion for the production of the 21 more MX missiles.

The last of four votes in the Senate and House closed the latest chapter in a decade-long battle over the need for the strategic weapon.

But opponents said President Reagan's first major congressional victory of 1985 also marked the high-water mark for the MX, which critics believe would be destroyed in the first wave of a Soviet nuclear attack.

Reagan said the House vote "shows again that we were able to stand in a bipartisan way before the world as far as our security is concerned."

Chagall dies

VENCE, France (AP) — Marc Chagall, one of the leading painters of the 20th century, died at his home in this French Riviera village last night, his wife announced. He was 92.

His wife said he collapsed about 8 p.m. and died almost immediately. The exact cause of death was not immediately known.

Iraqis launch air raid on Iran

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraq said yesterday its warplanes raided 10 Iranian cities and two tankers near Iran's Kharg Island oil terminal in the Persian Gulf. President Sadam Hussein pledged more attacks "deep in Iran...to end the war."

Hussein also appeared to acknowledge that six large explosions in Baghdad in the past two weeks were caused by ground-to-ground missiles, as the Iranians have claimed.

"Some Arabs have given them (the Iranians) some missiles in hopes of terrorizing the Iraqis," he said. "The Iraqis, who fought for five years, cannot be terrorized by 10, 20 or 30 missiles."

BOG will offer open forum to potential student venturers

By VICKI A. SPAGNOLI
Collegian Staff

Next week's Campus Center Board of Governor's meeting will be an open forum for proposals from University of Massachusetts students interested in starting a student controlled business, after the board's indecisive vote on a proposal to fill the former Union Records Unlimited space in the Student Union with a student-run ice cream shop.

The board tied nine to nine to accept the ice cream proposal at last night's weekly meeting. A tie vote means the board can accept proposals from any group, including the ice cream group, to be voted on at next week's meeting, BOG treasurer Fran Hegeler said.

"I would suggest that they (the groups with proposals) come to the BOG executive meeting next Wednesday at 2 p.m. so that their proposal will be on the agenda for Thursday's meeting," she said.

The ice cream proposal voted down by the board was recommended by the BOG space committee.

The ice cream shop would open in September, according to the proposal. The shop would serve gourmet ice cream, pastries and would be equipped by an outside ice cream company such as Hood Inc., or Bart's ice cream, Cohen said. The shop would also need a $4,000 loan from the Student Government Association for renovations BOG member Bob Cohen, who submitted the proposal, said.

Two other student groups were present at the meeting to present their proposals to the board. The bike coop and the sports coop "Teamworks" both presented their proposals at the meeting.

"I'm against this proposal because it's not guaranteed that the ice cream shop will get the money to open and the other two groups already have management set up and can make a smoother transition (into the space)," BOG member Alex Zucker said.

Board member Jim Shaw said the ice cream proposal would help the image of the BOG. "We're running the CC. If we can be responsible enough to run the Campus Center/Student Union we can be responsible enough to run an ice cream parlor," Shaw said.

Cohen plans to resubmit the ice cream proposal at next week's meeting.

Furniture stolen from office

More than $1,000 in office furnishings were reported stolen Wednesday afternoon from a first floor office in the School of Management, University of Massachusetts police said.

A university employee reported that two swivel chairs and a dictionary were stolen sometime in February. Two original framed prints were also stolen from the same office during spring break. The value of the prints is approximately $400 each.

In other police action:

•A first floor Butterfield House resident reported to police Wednesday night that a man entered her unlocked room while she was asleep. The woman said she thought the man was her roommate but when she turned on the light, she saw him sitting in a chair looking at her in a daze, police said.

The woman told the man to leave her room and he did without incident, police said.

•A student was kicked and punched by two unidentified men in parking lot 22 Wednesday night, police said. The student reported that the men had been hassling him at The Village Inn and had followed him back to campus. Police said the two men assaulted the student after a confrontation in the parking lot.

•A 12 speed bicycle, valued at $240, was reported stolen Wednesday morning from the recreational area in Emerson House. A student told police that the bicycle was locked to a wooden bar with a cable lock before spring break. Police said there are no suspects in the theft.

•A woman student who was working on the second floor of Herter Hall reported that a man exposed himself to her Wednesday afternoon, police said. There are no suspects in the incident.

Campus will not go dry

Most effects of rise in legal age unknown

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

How will the increase in the legal drinking age affect students and local drinking establishments?

Many university officials are taking guesses but aren't willing to make definite predictions yet. However, one thing is certain, the University of Massachusetts will not "go dry."

On campus, non-alcoholic social events will be emphasized while off campus drinking establishments may begin to change their policies to accommodate people under the legal drinking age.

"We must look at creative ways for parties," Carlene Riccelli, chairwoman of the University Committee on Alcohol Use, said. "We can't equate parties with alcohol."

In addition to the revised University Alcoholic Beverage Policy, Housing Services is presently developing a Residential Education Activities Policy. The policy will address specific regulations such as party security and party applications.

Contrary to some rumors, resident assistants will not play the role of police officers and check students' identification at parties on campus, Robert Jennings from the Office of Residential Education, said.

The present activities policy states that two-thirds of the students who attend a registered party must be of legal drinking age. When the drinking age goes up, it will become more difficult to comply with the rules, Jo Bonnie Kaplan, a student of the Residential Education Alcohol Committee, said.

University officials suspect that the new law may cause problems with off-campus parties. But despite the policy changes, Director of Public Safety Gerald O'Neil said he does not expect his department to have a tremendous change in law enforcement on campus.

"At this point, there are no firm or tentative decisions on what action to take when the age changes," William Ellmore, beverage manager of the Campus Center, said.

"We're going to lose business," he said. "But the effect won't be that bad the first year because of the grandfather clause."

"Next semester we'll look at whether we should cut or eliminate alcoholic beverages from the Campus Center," he said.

In the past, 18-year-olds have been allowed in the Blue Wall to participate in events sponsored by student organizations. On these occasions, the room was divided to separate people of legal drinking age from people under 20.

The ban went into effect on December 10, 1984, as part of a state wide push to cut down on drunk driving. The new law has made it illegal for bars to serve cut-rate drink specials, free drinks, and unlimited drinks for one price.

At Delanos on North Pleasant St. in Amherst Kate Clauson said, "We used to have a two-for-one drink special during our happy hours. Now we have changed to Jumbo drinks, which are only 35 cents more than the two-for-one drinks, and a beer of the month special.

"At first we thought the ban was going to hurt business," Clauson said. "But our books show no change whatsoever in sales.

"We still have lines out the door," she said. "The crowd size has not decreased at all."

Bob Dearing, a bartender at The Pub, said, "We've seen a slight change in business, if any at all. We still have our Pub Mug night, plus we have whole week drink specials, which are perfectly legal, and we are also serving better quality free food."

Student reaction seems to be positive. "At first a few students were complaining about the higher drink prices, but I haven't heard any complaints recently," Clauson said.

Judie Flynn, a UMass senior said, "My initial reaction was bad. I thought the bars would no longer attract the students. But I really haven't seen any major effects."

UMass first-year-student, John Petrocelli said, "I don't like the fact that I have to pay more to go out. But it's effected all the bars so there's nothing to do about it but pay the extra money and have a good time."

In addition, the alcohol policy clarifies the consequences of alcohol-related behavior:

● Individuals who become the subject of University police and security reports involving alcohol or drugs will be required to meet with the appropriate vice chancellor or designated representative for dicussion of the incident and possible referral.

● University organizations may lose their recognition if they fail to abide by the new policy.

● University-affiliated housing complexes must also adhere to rules related to alcohol service at social events.

The policy proposal also adds several rules for campus groups selling alcoholic beverages.

● The policy states that all organizations that provide drinks must also provide some sort of food to, "reduce the probability of inebriation."

● All students who are hired to serve alcoholic beverages must attend a mandatory training program by the Alcohol Education Program or by the Department of Public Safety.

If the draft is approved by Duffey, the policy recommendations will be sent to the Board of Trustees for approval. The new policy would be in effect on campus next semester, Riccelli said.

The second purpose of the University policy revisions is to "develop a comprehensive campus policy that includes faculty and staff, as well as students," Riccelli said. The current alcohol policy only addresses students.

"We want to see consistency between students, faculty and staff," said Charmaine Wijeyesinghe, judicial liason for the Dean of Students Office. "When students get disciplined, faculty should as well."

Concerns for the implementation and enforcement of the new policy among faculty and staff have been raised frequently since the circulation of the draft.

Survey probes gay and lesbian concerns, needs

Questionnaires to assess the needs, concerns and experiences of gay, lesbian and bisexual students on campus are now available for completion.

The questionnaires are part of a study to determine the campus climate for homosexuals and bisexuals at UMass. The study is being conducted by human relations advocate and planner, Felice Yeskel.

Yeskel, whose position was created by the administration earlier this year to collect data on the needs of the lesbian and gay community, said that responses to the questionnaire will be incorporated into a report for Dennis Madson, vice chancellor of student affairs.

The purpose of the report is to describe present conditions and make recommendations "for changes needed to create a more positive climate," Yeskel said.

The questionnaires, which were refined on the basis of a pilot survey conducted earlier this month, will be distributed at the People's Gay Alliance dance tomorrow night and will be available from the Everywoman's Center, Women's Studies Program, and Yeskel in Berkshire House.

Yeskel stressed that the anonymity of student's responses will be respected and will be seen only by a very small research team.

Welfare policies discourage college

By MARIANE MEUSE
Collegian Staff

The relationship between current welfare policy and educational aid programs as they relate to women will be the focus of a two-day conference at Smith College early next week.

The purpose of the conference will be to "bring together policy-makers and people who've worked with women" in the welfare program, said Martha Ackelsberg, an organizer of the event.

She said the conference will examine current policy towards women receiving welfare and educational aid programs designed to help them.

"Current policy discourages women on welfare from getting a higher education," Ackelsberg said.

She said a higher education is "at least one way for women to get off welfare."

The conference will kick off with a keynote address by Robert Coles, professor of psychiatry and medical humanities at Harvard University, Monday at 2 p.m. in Smith's Wright Hall auditorium.

The rest of the conference will feature panel discussions focusing on such issues as poverty and employment, education, welfare, and policy issues and strategies.

These issues will be discussed by economists, sociologists, and educational experts.

By examining current policy, the organizers hope to bring about some change, Ackelsberg said.

The conference, which is supported by a grant from the Charles Stewart Mott Foundation, is open to the public free of charge.

Quigley marks 25th year at UMass

By KATHLEEN HART
Collegian Staff

When J. Joseph Quigley was growing up, he had a very low opinion of himself. He wore thick glasses, flunked algebra twice in high school, and made the little league baseball team only because his parents knew the coach.

Today, Rev. J. Joseph Quigley is celebrating his 25th year at the University of Massachusetts. He is the director of the Newman Center, with its annual budget of $329,000. He is campus minister for the 16 colleges in the Springfield Diocese, and he knows that in God's eyes he is a success.

"I always wanted to be the best, never average," Quigley said. "One day I met a priest who told me all you have to do is try your hardest, and in God's eyes you will be a success, even if you're not in the eyes of the rest of the world." From that day on, Quigley discovered what it meant to have self-respect.

"Father Quigley will do anything for the students, anything," Rev. John F. Tuohey said. Tuohey has only been here at UMass one year, but he has seen that Quigley's number one priority is the students.

"It's like a cycle. In the fall, I deal with homesickness, in December it's exams, and in the spring, it's love."
— J. Joseph Quigley

Quigley, 61, has seen many changes in the world and here at the University over the past 25 years, but to him "the present moment is always the best time. I've had a lot of fun here. I like to see young people flourish with the hope of the future. Everyone is a genius, they just need to release their talent."

"The university has grown more sophisticated over the years," said Quigley. "But I can honestly say that Catholic kids have always been good crowds coming to Mass and religious services. Priests across the country can't believe we get 2,500 to 3,000 kids to Mass on Sunday."

Michelle Parsons, a 21-year-old senior at UMass said, "If I were going to be married within the next couple of years, I'd want Father Quigley to perform the ceremony. He's less rigid and more understanding of what students are feeling than any other Catholic priest I know."

The Newman Center was opened April 1, 1963, under the direction of Monsignor David Power, who ran it until 1978. To his own surprise, Quigley was appointed director that year.

"I never thought I would be director. I had hoped, but I was already 54 years old. I'd like to stay at UMass for the next 25 years, I'm hoping to stay. But in this job, you can never tell. I always have to have my knapsack ready," he said.

"When I came out of the army I was a convinced fatalist," Quigley said. "I thought, If you were born lucky, great, if not, tough luck."

"I didn't plan on becoming a priest, but then I met a priest who said things I guess I always wanted to hear. I became a parish priest and was stationed in Westfield for four years."

On April 1, 1960, Quigley was assigned to UMass. "I felt like a fish out of water when I first arrived. I was trained as a parish priest, and I felt awkward here. I soon found the main thrust of my work was with very young students, those who had left home for the first time. It's like a cycle. In the fall, I deal with homesickness, in December it's exams, and in the spring, it's love."

SILVER ANNIVERSARY — The Rev. J. Joseph Quigley is celebrating his 25th anniversary at the Newman Center. Quigley has been the Newman Center director since 1978.

The Newman Center opened with the idea of Cardinal Newman, an English priest, in mind, Quigley said. "There should be a house of religion on a secular campus to act as a catalyst and to bring together various interests into a whole...to give moral integrity...and to give character to the students."

"The Newman center is a house of Humaneness," said Quigley. "You can always find someone there to listen to you. There is a congenial cafeteria, and a chapel to talk to God. I don't know how people survive without religion. It's a scary world full of greed. If we didn't believe in Fatherhood, we'd devour ourselves."

"The Newman Center is a very avant-garde idea," Quigley said. "It makes the church and God very exciting. The number-one problem on campus is loneliness, not booze, drugs or sex. We get kids dates. It's a way to get close to people and help with social problems. The church liberates people who are enslaved by neglect."

The Newman Center has a license to sell beer and wine in the cafeteria and there are three automatic telling machines located there. Said Quigley, "We are not trying to be sensational, but just trying to fill human need. The vice-president of Bay Bank recently told me the Newman Center does the greatest volume of any machine in the state."

Quigley added the liquor license and banking machines bring in revenue to the Newman Center, which has to raise two-thirds of its annual budget on its own.

Rally planned to protest fees

An April Fool's Day rally will be held to protest administration plans to raise university fees for all students to help pay off the loans that paid for the construction of dormitories.

The event has been organized by the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy. Posters advertising the event state, "We must show Whitmore that we want our student rights." The "Rally for Rights" will be held at noon, Monday, on the steps of the Student Union Building.

Chabad House offering traditional culture

By JONATHAN STRYMISH
Collegian Staff

Chabad House is a place for Jewish people to find education and counseling in the traditional ways of their religion. The house is a place where people are welcome not only during scheduled class times or prayer but at meals and the family's leisure time.

Rabbi Zalman Eagle and his wife Yehudis Eagle have moved into Chabad House to take on the duties of leading services, teaching classes and serving meals. Though the prayers are said in Hebrew and classes are taught in subjects such as Talmudic law and Kosher cooking, Yehudis Eagle says that people with little or no Jewish background would not feel out of place.

The Eagles have not been out of the college community for very long and are returning to what they consider home. The rabbi is a 1982 graduate of Amherst College where he majored in history. As a student, he spent two years living in Chabad House.

Yehudis earned a degree in communications disorders from UMass in 1983. As a student, she often worked a table in the Campus Center from which she would try to entice Jews to visit the house with promises of good food and toasting "to life" with strong Russian vodka.

Married seven months, they seem to be on a mission to fill Chabad House full of life and they are already expecting a baby.

He added that "they would not feel that it was wrong if someone showed up just for the meal and not at the services.

Get involved with SGA

The elections for the SGA presidency are over. But in the real sense, the campaign has just begun. As we begin our terms in office as co-presidents we would like to talk about some thoughts we have on the upcoming year.

Out of all our concerns as co-presidents, one stands out most clearly. We want to be accessible to you. We want the students of this University to know where we are so we can continue to hear what's on your mind as we did during the election. Our office is on the 4th floor of the Student Union and our hours are Monday and Wednesday 4 to 5:30 p.m., starting April 3. This will be a time when we hope to see and hear student concerns.

We realize that our position is simply an extension of the student body. We are your representatives, your voice, to the administration here on campus and to the Regents and Trustees in Boston. We are only as strong as you want us to be. Without your support and concern for student rights we cannot fulfill our potential as a strong body. Our potential is in our strength in numbers and in our voice as serious concerned members of this Commonwealth.

In the next year we face a fight to keep the Board of Governors a working, representative student body in the Campus Center. We will also fight against the Alcohol Policy, which the administration wants to implement, a policy that would force R.A.s to "card" students in their own rooms. We see this as an infringement on student rights. We face the Universal Resource Fee which inequitably charges students. We want to work to increase the availability of student study space on campus. And of course we want to continue the fight against President Reagan's proposed student budget cuts.

We plan to be in touch with you about these issues and many others which we'll be working on. We hope you will take the time to come up and speak with us about your concerns, as our campaign has only begun.

Stacy Roth and Dar Purgess are SGA president elects.

'Israeli savagery' with no strings

It was an interesting coincidence when the two settler regimes of South Africa and Israel reminded the world of their commonalities by making headlines last Friday. The South African security forces killed and wounded scores of blacks protesting against the apartheid while the Israeli campaign of terror continued in Southern Lebanon. Last week alone, the Israeli army killed at least 35 people including two CBS newsmen.

Antagonized and exhausted by the devastating invasion and the long and harsh occupation of Israeli troops, the local Lebanese population, composed mostly of Shiite Moslems, in the south has stepped up its resistance against the army of occupation. The Israelis have in turn intensified their harsh treatment of the local population by adopting the so called "iron fist" policy. This has meant inflicting heavy casualties on the Shiite villages, "Terrorist Nests," destroying the houses of those suspected of associating with "Terrorists" — the Israelis consider anyone who resists their occupation a terrorist. Furthermore, hundreds of men have been taken away for interrogation. There have been cases of terrorist bombings that claimed civilian lives in the south. Most Lebanese blame Israel for the bombings.

Meanwhile, the Israelis have barred reporters based in Beirut from entering the area under their occupation. There have been incidents in which shots were fired at reporters or into their cars, usually when they tried to cross Israeli lines. Journalists caught within the occupation zone have been detained and harassed. It was in such a context that the CBS crew came under an Israeli tankfire.

Rashid Sheedfor

Israel, having failed to achieve any significant political or military gains in Lebanon, has resorted to stirring up armed opposition within the Phalangist party against the Lebanese President, Amin Gemayel, thereby creating new obstacles to a negotiated settlement in Lebanon.

Given the U.S. veto of the U.N. Security Council resolution condemning Israeli actions in southern Lebanon, it seems that the Reagan administration is unwilling to restrain Israeli savagery. Israel is totally dependent on U.S. economic and military aid. This gives the U.S. leverage in Israeli politics. So far as the U.S. gives the aid without any real strings attached, Israel will continue its belligerent policies.

Israel is jeopardizing U.S. political interests in the Middle East. Giving unconditional aid and support to Israel does tremendous damage to western prestige and interests. It obstructs any peace initiative in a region where stability is a vital concern of the world at large and the West in particular.

Finally, the Jewish state should know that it will not attain recognition, peace and security by violating international law, pursuing expansionist policies and ignoring the most basic humanitarian principles.

Doors to academic freedom closing

John L. Ruddock

Once again, members of the administration and faculty have neglected to request student input in the decision making process. This latest blunder comes from the department of mathematics and statistics. The dean of Natural Sciences and Mathematics has requested that the chairman of the math department cut his budget by $50,000.

Why is this cut so dramatic? Because the solution that has been developed is to "phase out" such courses as Math 106, 107, and 120. This means that all majors that require Math 120 will now require Math 127 and 128 or 121. Not only does this effect students in those majors requiring Math 120, but also students whose major requires Math 127/128. By forcing more students into those classes, the student-faculty ratio (the number of students per faculty member) will be widened. In addition, the new General Education Requirements, which state that all students must take at least one class in analytic reasoning (which includes Math 120) will make the probable overcrowding and oversubscription problem even worse than it already is.

This proposal also contradicts the University's commitment to equal opportunity and access to higher education. Also, Third World enrollment in majors such as management and HRTA is already low, and the proposed cuts in courses will only provide another obstacle to students who want to pursue these majors. Obviously, this issue is relative to all University students, but will have disparate impacts on several segments of the UMass population.

Graduate students who teach in the math department will also be affected. For the most part, they are the budget cuts. Needless to say, the fewer TAs that are available, the larger the discussion sections will be, and again the student-faculty ratio will be widened.

It seems like every semester we hear cries from both students and the administration demanding better intercommunication. This proposal is simply another example of the precedent that has already been set by the administration — the URF and elimination of the BOG were handled in the same manner. We encourage you to get involved in this issue. Students have already paid for mistakes of others. They should not have to do so again. We must not allow the doors of academic freedom to be shut in our faces by the administration.

Random Notes—

A fight for forgotten promises

One way or another we all feel strongly about the Subway Vigilante. However, there is one thing that by now we can all agree upon: the United States has a violent society. We have the highest crime-rates in the world. But, crimes are not committed by out-of-space creatures, they are committed by common people just like ourselves. The very people who were promised a "land of opportunity" but are condemned to live in the squallor of crowded and filthy slums. Those who were told that their constitution guaranteed "the pursuit of happiness" but are condemned to live in a society where 80 percent of all land, industry, and business is owned by an affluent minority, 3 percent of the population.

The U.S. is the only industrial nation without a free health care system. It is a nation where people who are injured are allowed to die for not having the right insurance policy; the only industrialized nation in which women who are pregnant are fired, simply because they cannot be useful enough to the owners and employers; and this in a country where one wife is battered every 18 seconds.

The average American is told day and night by the TV, radio, newspapers, schools, and parents that s/he is simply on his/her own; that out there is a jungle where only might prevails. On the average, Americans watch an unbelievable six hours of TV per day, where we are taught how to envy the lives of the "Dynasty"s who rule our lives. We are taught daily to admire the most arrogant and corrupt gangsters and corporate executives.

We are taught by our teachers, conservative or liberal, that all should be sacrificed on the altar of the almighty God Dollar. Many of us go to school only in order to become marketable upon graduation. And about "democracy?" How many of us feel that we have any kind of real power with regard to this gigantic state machinery? How can we call this a democracy if we don't have any power over the state?

What about equality? Most of us have held minimum wage jobs, but how many of us have felt ourselves to be equals with the bosses? Did we have the right to fire those creatures the way they could fire us, at will? Do the 35 million people below the poverty line have the same "equal opportunity" as the Rockefellers, Kennedys, and Bushes?

Is this all irrelevant to the violence in our depressed society? Is it just a coincidence that 80 percent of the prison population comes from families in the lowest 20 percent of the income structure?

For some, the four black kids who approached Bernard Goetz are solely responsible for the incident. The fact that those kids were from very poor backgrounds, and that crime rates always increase during economic crises are all irrelevant to highly educated idiots who are considered "experts."

In the case of the Goetz incident, George F. Will (Newsweek, 1/7/85) believes that we should praise anger, "especially anger in the form of a desire for justifiable vengeance." He claims that Goetz's actions are justified by society because they "satisfied a desire for vengeance against the enemies of serenity." We too agree; We believe that it is time for the millions of homeless, starving people living at or below the poverty line (set dictatorially by affluent economists and government officials) to take arms against the enemies of their serenity; for the mystified middle class (who should be correctly labeled upper lower class as any social stratification map will show) who slave week after week, year after year for some almighty inhuman corporate machine, vainly believing that they will someday "make it," to take arms against the enemies of their serenity; for the workers, blacks, women and all other oppressed "minorities" (who together are in reality the majority) to take arms against the enemies of their serenity so that we may finally obtain that which is promised to all and denied to them: "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

ARTS

CINEMASCOOP
by Count Ramin Zahed

Another year, another boring Academy Awards ceremony, and another Oscar for ex-Gidget Sally Field. Although the speeches were kept short, the show received its lowest ratings ever. If you haven't heard yet, Amadeus appealed to the artsy/snobby members of the Academy, and they decided to give old Wolfgang eight awards. Sally Field bagged the best actress award for Places in the Heart and got really sticky with her acceptance speech. Holding the Oscar in her hands, she flapped her wings and said, in true Hollywood tradition, "You like me, you really like me." O.K., Sally we dig you too, but what happened to that neurotic nun we used to know? Haing S. Ngor who won best supporting for The Killing Fields gave the show one if its only honest touches when he thanked Buddha in his great accent. Jack Lemmon was extremely dry and bland as the master of ceremonies and left one wishing for some humor. I personally nominate Pee Wee Herrmann for next year's show. The ultimate relief in these plastic three hours was Steve Martin who never fails to delight and was gracious enough to appear although the Academy wrongly overlooked his brilliant performance in All of Me. By the way, the greatest tragedy was the way Ann Reinking destroyed "Take a Look at Me Now" while Phil Collins was forced to watch, tied to his chair with a tight rope. For God's sake, the woman is a dancer. O.K., you want to give her publicity, have her dancing in the background. But no, poor Phil has to watch with tears running down his cheeks. Let's hope that by next year, Ann Reinking will have drowned and sunk to the bottom of Swan Lake. At this point, let's gracefully drop the Oscars till next spring.

To match the incredible early summer we're having, The Return of the Jedi is rereleased and is playing at the Hampshire Mall. Here's your chance to catch the beautiful Princess Leia and Jabba the Hutt. Buy an ice cream cone and enjoy this great finale to the escapist trilogy.

This weekend, the valley is simply exploding with serious masterpieces of the silver screen. Yes, Friday, The 13th Part IV, hand in hand with Police Academy Part II are there to delight audiences everywhere. Then there's always Baby, a silly adventure film about a dinosaurling and his fake-looking parents. This flick is supposed to be racist, sexist, heterosexist, masochistic, sadistic, syphilistic and all those other adjectives. It's really the epitome of bad entertainment. Finally for all of you tender-hearted people who can't wait to buy your next Hallmark card, your favorite cartoon characters, the Care Bears are film stars now. They star in their own cute little picture, very originally titled The Care Bears Movie. A brief synopsis of the plot: The world stops caring (boy, oh boy) and the Care Bears spread sunshine all over the world. Mmmmmmmm!

Weekend Winner: The great Visconti classic The Leopard with Burt Lancaster and Claudia Cardinale is back at the Pleasant Street Theatre in its original uncut version. 1984, a gloomy essay on totalitarianism plays at the Academy of Music. Richard Burton gives a polished performance in this his last role. John Hurt is equally superb. Peter Bogdanovich's comeback film Mask is supposed to be a real tearjerker. It's O.K. if you cry, because it's a true story and you can feel good about that. Cher is the loving mother of a deformed child who also does a lot of drugs and is a member of a motorcycle gang. Together mother and son conquer all problems and live (almost) happily ever after. Mask plays at the Mt. Farms Cinemas. Remember, don't add salt to your pop corn, your tears will do the job.

Outguess the Oscars Contest Results: The response was amazing. More than 250,000 contestants entered. O.K., I lied, 50 people entered, and Caroline Samoiloff and Kathy Madaus managed to choose the wrong candidates for all the categories. They are the best losers and they get to share a lovely poster of Matt Dillon. Tony Betros and Peter Abraham came in second place and shall enjoy the Vision Quest album. The ultimate winner was BRETT BOWDEN who had six correct answers. Brett, the ride on my bicycle is all yours and you also receive four passes to the Hampshire Mall Cinema.

One Last Scoop: Vanity Fair has a disgusting article about Princeton and Princetonians this month, with Brooke Shields leading the Rah Rah crowd. Don't even look at it. I had an upset stomach hours after reading about the follies of the rich and the pretentious. That's all, folks.

The second coming of Return of the Jedi, appearing locally at Hampshire Mall Cinemas.

Gidget gripping Oscar, with Robert Duvall in tow.

J.B. Wyker, a student in the Department of Music and Dance, will present a recital of vocal jazz selection at 6 p.m. on Sunday in Bezanson Recital Hall. The concert is free and open to the public.

Seminar on Alcohol Use, Laws and Liability

The University of Massachusetts Health Services (Division of Health Education) and the Student Legal Services Office is sponsoring an educational seminar on alcohol and the law which is open to the campus community. The seminar will feature a presentation by panelists followed by a question and answer session.

Attorney Jill Franks will give an overview of Massachusetts statutes and civil liability cases related to alcohol use. She will provide information and answer questions related to protective custody, false indentification, serving minors and/or intoxicated individuals, drinking and driving, open containers and transport laws.

Carlene Riccelli, Coordinator of the Alcohol Education Program, will provide information and answer questions related to alcohol use and community resources for alcohol and other drug related issues.

All students, faculty and staff are invited to attend.

Japanese detention violated rights

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

The detention of Japanese Americans and other American born children descendents of enemies during World War II was a wartime necessity issued by the United States military and backed by the administration according to a retired attorney who lived through the horror.

Minoru Yasui, who will speak at 7:30 p.m. tonight in room 162 of the Campus Center on "The American Concentration Camps: Wartime Necessity or Tragic Error?" said Americans of German and Japanese descent were curfewed and not permitted to leave their homes from more than a five mile radius.

"You can't tell a lawyer what to do," said Yasui, who deliberately broke the curfew because of its biased connotations due to ancestry.

Between 1942 and 1944, Yasui, who chairs the National Redress Committee was relocated first to the WCCA Camp in North Portland, Oregon, Minidoka WRA camp in Idaho and Multnomah County Jail in Portland. In the county jail, he was placed in solitary confinement for nine months.

He recalled the camps were "terrible," and said they were "army type camps." He said the conditions in the 25 long barracks were "terrible, especially for women and children."

Physically, the camps were in isolated areas with barbed wire fences and armed guards, "like regular prisons." However, Yasui stressed they did not compare to Hitler's camps because they were not eliminated, but "in principle is the same."

In June 1944, Yasui was released for employment in Chicago, where he found a job as a laborer in an ice plant. He was given a one-way rail ticket and $25 by the government for his trip and expenses. He was not allowed to resume his law practice until 1945.

Yasui said this is not a Japanese-American issue, but "an American issue." It involves the violation of "human rights protected by the Constitution."

Sigma helps community

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

The Shirley Graham DuBois Library and other interior sections of the New Africa House will get a face lift beginning at 9 a.m. Sunday by the Crescent Pledge Club of Phi Beta Sigma Fraternity, Incorporated, one of the three black fraternities at the University of Massachusetts.

Members of the fraternity said the painting job is one of many services they provide the black community on campus. "(We) feel it's necessary to work on those problems the campus faces before extending our services elsewhere."

Phi Beta Sigma Fraternity is an international social, civic and cultural organization encompassing the principles of brotherhood, scholarship, community service and academic excellence.

The organization was founded in 1914 at Howard University. It was incepted at UMass two years ago, and it became a registered student's organization this month.

Roscoe Robinson, a Sigma member and a business student said they have been well received by the Interfraternity council at UMass.

"It pulls the black community together," he added. Among the many services Sigma will provide this semester include an Easter Egg hunt for children in nearby hospitals, a scholarship awards banquet and a tribute to black women.

Adalberto Valdez, a political science/human services sophomore said he likes the fraternity because of the mandatory hours of study and the development of character. Valdez, who is pledging added one also develops closeness with fellow members.

"It's a lot of time and work, (working for the fraternity), but it's worth it. It's nice to know that you are a part of a brotherhood working towards common goals," Robinson said.

When pledging a fraternity Valdez recommends that people are fully aware of what they are getting into. "You have to be aware of what it stands for and what the outcome of you as a member will be and what you can contribute to the fraternity."

King paved way for today's leaders

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Martin Luther King's dream of a society where a person's character is judged by his or her abilities rather than the person's color, sex or creed has been partially fulfilled according to University of Massachusetts students.

In addition, many agree King's death in 1965 gave way for other leaders to emerge, and his philosophy has served as a model for Americans to follow when fighting for human rights.

King was a charasmatic and fierceful leader of the Civil Rights Movement. During the black struggle, he used his philosophy of non-violence, direct action in trying to achieve civil and social rights for blacks.

Starting Sunday the UMass community will have the opportunity to learn more about King and his impact in society in celebration of the Martin Luther King Week, which ends April 8.

David Martin, a member of the MLK Week planning committee said King's dream has been followed by the efforts of people like the Rev. Jesse Jackson, Mary Berry, former Civil Rights commissioner, and others.

"Every activist who works with King's dream. They work to fulfill it. I have his dream," Said Fran Trainor, an art history junior.

Demitres Jacks sees King as a catalyst. Although the sophomore art major believes King's dream was partially fulfilled with the end of segregation, he noted,"We're not fair to all type of people and I think that's the core of what had to happen, to completely fulfill the dream.

Jacks said family and institutional education is a means by which to ensure the fulfillment of King's dream. Education, he said, is essential to raise an awareness of the different cultures in America and to "see respect for those differences and make sure you're not aiding any historical philosophy that is not fair to all people."

Even if the educational process only affects one person, he said it will ultimately have a chain reaction. "We maybe looking for immediate changes, but it will probably happen gradually."

Although Jacks see the Rev. Jesse Jackson as today's leader and King's counterpart, he said young blacks need leaders to show them how to address the issues confronting blacks today, which have been institutionalized and harder to pinpoint.

Rosa Pereira a senior human services major said the celebration is an important time to reflect on King's contributions and the impact he made in society. "He made an impact on everybody, white, black and Hispanic. Everybody."

She believes if people have a better understanding of who King was, it would encourage them to strive in society. She added young people can keep dreams alive by "one speaking out" about the concerns of the black community "and making sure they are heard and two by following his philosophy of non-violence."

Pereira sees King as a leader who left "a path for others to follow. That is a reason for them to feel they shouldn't fall, but continue struggling for their identity. Martin Luther King gave them hope."

Problems in Africa discussed

By KIMBERLY BURGE
Collegian Staff

Lifting export barriers in the West for a free flow of African exports and disconnecting from the world market and organizing their own, were two of the solutions aired at a panel discussion on Africa Wednesday night at Amherst College.

"The main causes of the problems today are the intervention into the market and the sociocultural conflict of cultures. There's so much happening that Africans can't comprehend what's going on around them," said Abdul Ahman Mohamed Babu.

"If the western world would be kind enough to let us export our goods to their markets, we would be able to stabilize our economy. We also must delink from the world market and reorganize. Our economy would change from where it is now and we'll begin to think in terms of development," said the former cabinet minister of the Tanzania government.

The economic situation is the most serious problem. "The Albanian government has miscredited the economy to produce cash crops instead of food," he said.

Babu also said "Africa is going through a vicious cycle. Most of our people are poor and we can't utilize our resources. We can't utilize our resources because we are poor."

During the decades of the fifties and the sixties, the mentality of the African government was to produce export and not food. In early 1970, Africa was receiving five percent of world food aid. By the end of the seventies, the number had increased to fifty one percent. Even with the famine crisis in Ethiopia the export of coffee continues unabetted.

However, others are more pessimistic about the situation. "The problems in Africa today are a result from the non-choices we made in the sixties. We could have made the right choices if we didn't think that debates weren't important in Africa," Ngethe said.

"In the sixties socialists and liberals were not given the chance to air their views," he said. Ngethe is not surprised at the general decay of Africa. "As economies deteriorate, governments become more authoritarian," he stated.

Ngethe, a political science professor at St. Lawrence University, believes that Africans must reconstitute themselves and ask themselves, what is the national question and what is the national agenda. He said when the answers to these questions are found, only then will Africa be able to solve its problems.

Economies effect women's status

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

As a result of poor economic conditions, the status of women in Third World countries is "abysmally low" when compared with the status of first world women according to Anita Nesiah, an educator and women's movement leader in Sri Lanka, speaking yesterday at the University of Massachusetts.

Nesiah was the keynote speaker for a conference on Issues of Inclusion and Empowerment sponsored by the National Identification Program of the American Council on Education. The program brings together women holding positions in higher education who have shown potential for executive leadership.

"The theme empowerment through inclusion is something that women in the Third World countries cannot afford to achieve in terms of education--as the economic conditions in Third World countries do not permit such a situation," she said.

When comparing the progress of First World women to that of Third World women, Nesiah said, it becomes difficult because "emancipation is in many dimensions and cannot be measured on a linear scale."

She added however, "one of the many pleasures of being in this country is to see women in so many positions of leadership and authority. No doubt you are dissatisfied and rightly so; but seen from a Third World perspective your achievements are very impressive."

Noting the rise of female participation in employment in her country, Nesiah asserted, "much of this progress is not the result of emancipation but rather a deliberate decision by employers to exploit women labor."

Nesiah said traditionally the number of females working on plantations has been high but these women constitute the least educated and least literate section of a community. These women, she said, are preferred because of their low wage rates.

"The employer's preference for women is not to further their liberation but rather to have a docile, unorganized work force," she said.

According to Nesiah, the most significant advances made by Third World women are in the field of formal education, especially in medicine and law, but she added women's success in other professions has not been as high.

"While there may be no formal prohibition against women entering into other professions, in practice, they tend to be excluded from top leadership and decision making positions," she said.

Nesiah noted the number of women lawyers is significant, but the majority of them work behind the scenes in law chambers, and the proportion of women who are in the forefront, is very low. Most women doctors tend to specialize in certain fields like obstetrics or child care and stay away from surgical work.

Nesiah sees the situation in Sri Lanka to be improving slowly but urges that the "female intelligensia should, in addition to developing avenues for further advancement in professional and academic fields, devote special attention to a more broad bases liberation of women form the situations in which the vast majority of them are now placed."

STUDENT UNION STEPS

Don't let the administration fool you — Do you want to pay fees for services you can't or don't use?

—Do you want a larger bill every semester?

—Do you want to be able to afford school next year?

—If the trustees approve the Universal Resource Fee, the Administration will be answering these questions for you!!!

Do you want WHITMORE to have control over who performs at our STUDENT concerts?

Do you really need another UMass sweatshirt? (the administration wants to turn our coffee shop into a clothing boutique!)

The administration thinks we say yes to those questions But we say NO! Show that you want your STUDENT RIGHTS!

The football season and its disappointments are a distant memory. The basketball season, with its games in Springfield and heartbreaking finish, will also soon be forgotten.

Lacrosse season is here.

The University of Massachusetts opens the 1985 campaign Saturday at 1 p.m. at Boyden Field with the University of Delaware.

The Gorillas, ranked tenth nationally last season, haven't played the Blue Hens in recent times but have scouted them well and feel they are well prepared.

Delaware, 1-3 on the season with losses to New Hampshire, Syracuse and Loyola of Baltimore and a win over UNH, was eighth in the country last season and is led by honorable mention All-America attackman Randy Powers.

Powers (12 goals and four assists this season) will recognize one Gorilla when he steps onto the field, and may end up wishing he doesn't.

Opposing the small attackman will be UMass junior defenseman Tommy Aldrich, who went to New York's West Genesee High school in Syracuse with Powers.

"He's real good, he's kind of small and very quick, but I'll take him," Aldrich said, "Whatever it takes to win."

Aldrich, the lone defensive starter returning, will team with juniors Mark Stratton and Gerry Byrne on defense. Freshman Scott Craig will add depth.

Senior Perry Seale had been moved to close defense from midfield, but coach Dick Garber found out yesterday that his co-captain's leg bruise, thought not be that serious a week ago, developed calcium deposits and will keep the 5-10, 165 pounder out of action for the entire season.

"Losing Perry hurts us for two reasons, the first being that he's a captain and the second being that he added quality depth to the close defense. That depth is a major question mark right now and underclassman will have to fill that void."

Aldrich realizes the additional responsibility thrust upon him.

"I want to play the whole game and set the tone of defense," the junior said. "We don't have the depth like coach said so the three of us (Stratton and Byrne) will have to play a lot and play well. I think we can maintain what the team did last season and hold opponents to seven goals or less a game."

At attack, the Gorillas are deep. Transfer Tom Carmean, who was impressive in pre-season practices, will start alongside senior Mike Fiorini (19 goals last season) and either leading scorer Tom Lukacovic (23 goals) or sophomore Doug Musco. Seniors Kenny Freeman and Bubba Sandford along with sophomore Ed Boardman will also see a lot of time.

"It's good to have the depth we have and unlike last season (when Fiorini, Sandford and Lukacovic saw most of the time) we'll run the attack in and out depending on the tempo," Garber said.

The midfield also returns several veterans. All-New England selection Greg Fisk (15 goals) and co-captain Karl Hatton, and All-America with 13 goals, play major roles along with senior Scott Ciampa, a defensive middie. Neal Cunningham, Matt O'Reilly and Stephen Moreland will also see a lot of action. Faceoff man Seamus McGovern will be challenged by the Blue Hens' Steve Shaw (seven goals), who has won 78 percent of his faceoffs this season.

Delaware, like UMass, likes to fastbreak and make offense out of broken plays. Unlike UMass, they overplay on defense and foul often. Garber hopes to take advantage of this.

"I think we can spread them out and run them a little," the veteran coach said. "I think we should have a good game."

Women's Lax starts season against BU

Gazelles fifth in the nation

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

Coming off a positive set of scrimmages in Virgina, the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team travels to Boston University tomorrow for their season opener.

In eight scrimmages the Gazelles, ranked fifth in the nation, compiled a 6-1-1 record. The action was the first the team had seen this season. UMass did suffer a set-back when they lost the services of sophomore Lanna Mason, who sprained her knee, and freshman Ginny Armstrong who suffered a scratched cornea. Both players are possible starters according to UMass coach Pat Hixon.

"I feel good about the team," Hixon said. "I was very pleased with the way we played in Virginia. But I hope we can improve as the season progresses."

Having scouted the BU team at its 7-2 victory over Northeastern University, Hixon feels UMass will be facing one of the strongest BU teams in the recent past.

"They have a pretty good game and they've improved. They have some speed and a couple of strong defensive players," Hixon said.

They play a slow-down game which is the opposite of what we play. Our goal is to try not to slow down and lose our momentum. We'll try to pressure them and work our fast break. If they do stall then we'll use that as an opportunity to rest. But we can't be lulled, we must pressure,"Hixon said.

On offense UMass which finished fourth in the nation last season will try to work the ball to senior midfielder Pam Moryl. Defensively, the Gazelles mainstay will be goalie Debbie De Jesus. UMass beat BU when the two teams met last year.

Freshman key in weekend action

Baseball, softball open at home

By GERRY deSIMAS and
PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It will be a full weekend for the University of Massachusetts baseball and softball teams as both squads open their home schedules with three games at home starting today.

The Minutewomen face an improving Boston College squad today at 3 p.m. at NOPE and square off with Atlantic 10 rival Rhode Island on Saturday in a 1 p.m. doubleheader. The baseball team hosts Temple for a Saturday doubleheader starting at noon and a single game Sunday at 1:30.

The Minutemen, 3-6 after their annual trip South, need at least two victories over the Owls in order to start Atlantic 10 conference action with momentum.

"We need to get established right away," UM manager Dick Bergquist said. "We're looking for the playoff berth in the league so we can't afford any early losses in the conference. It's important to win these."

The Minutemen will start senior righthander Jim Knoph (1-1, 1.93 earned run average) in the first game on Saturday. Freshman lefthander Matt Sheran (1-0, 0.90) will go in the second game. Sunday will see another freshman, righthander Steve Allen (0-2, 6.92) start.

At the plate, the Minutemen are hitting an impressive .312 led by Sheran (.370) and first baseman Jeff Cimini (.364 and a homer). UMass has also stolen 11 bases in 12 attempts. Designated hitter Todd Comeau has three steals in addition to a .351 batting average and a team-high ten runs batted in. He also has a homer.

Second baseman Jack Bloise saw limited action in Florida (three at-bats) with a pulled leg muscle. UMass committed and unusually-high 29 errors in nine games attributable partly to Bloise's absence. Bergquist said the senior may be able to play this weekend.

The softball team, 4-8-1, will face an improving BC squad that lost to URI last week by a 4-3 score. "They will be competitive," sixth year coach Elaine Sortino said. "We know they have a good pitcher in Lesley Lane. She's more than decent."

Rhode Island will be out to avenge last season's sweep by UMass. The WRams will be led by hurler Laurie Whidden, who lost to the Minutewomen 9-1 last year.

Junior catcher Maureen McCabe (.342) and senior Brenda Weaver (.325) are the top hitters for the 5-6-1 WRams.

"The one great play will make or break you," Sortino said. "When Rhode Island and Massachusetts meet there is always the potential for great softball."

UMass will counter with junior lefty Lynn Stockley (2-4, 0.50 ERA), junior Cathy Reed (1-3, 1.13) and freshman Lisa Rever (1-1, 3.00). Stockley set a school record with her 13 strikeouts in the Holy Cross win, breaking her own record of 12 which she accomplished twice last year.

Weather

Enough of this cold stuff already! Today will be absolutely gorgeous, dahling, with highs in the 90s, and a possible heatwave by noon. Tonight will be just a tad colder, though, with lows hitting the 20s and chances of a snowstorm by morning. As for tomorrow, Southwest people, batten down the hatches, as earthquake advisories will be in progress throughout the day. No cause for alarm, though.

UMass to close in June

Ronnie's cuts pass; Prez sez, 'No go, Joe'

President Ronald Reagan's sweeping financial aid cuts package breezed through Congress yesterday, leaving thousands of college students without their financial aid and University of Massachusetts students without a school to attend.

The news to close the Amherst campus because a sufficient number of students will be unable to return without financial aid came from UMass President Nap's office less than an hour after the cuts were announced.

Chancellor Joseph D. Dudley could not be reached for comment, though a secretary alleged he had gone to the bank to take out a mortgage on his state-owned home. Later in the day, his office phone was disconnected, which was surely a nuisance to student reporters, since the school will remain open till June.

In a prepared statement, President Nap said the Southwest Residential Area will be donated to the state prison system, possibly for maximum security use, since spring Town Meeting has already adjourned and Amherst's "liberal residents won't have time to make a fuss by the time axe-murderers and such take up residence in the towers over the summer."

Nap also did not rule out the possibility of re-opening UMass "sometime in the future" as a community college.

As for the students now enrolled who will be left without a school, Dean of Students William Fielding said "many hands" will be needed to restore buildings all over campus, which may be used as archives and museums to "commemorate the learning that went on here and to create a memorial of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst as a victim of the Reagan knife."

Faculty, some of whom may have felt constrained to stay at UMass because of their tenure, will now be free to seek employment elsewhere and can also assist in the museum project, Fielding said.

She won $1m in Collingo pot

Doris: 'Kids'll repent'

Former D.C. worker Doris Dinger is very excited as Collegian finance manager Michael Stockman hands her a $1 million check for winning the first Collingo contest. She will use it to buy sheep.

Doris Dinger was sitting at her kitchen table cutting her toenails when the exciting news that she had won $1 million in the first weekly Collingo drawing arrived.

"Oh, oh, oh!!!" the Hatfield housewife uttered as Collegian finance manager Michael Stockman (who claims to be unrelated to Reagan budget director David Stockman) handed her a cardboard check for the full amount.

Dinger, 41, is a former employee of the dining commons at the University of Massachusetts, having recently left her job to have varicose veins surgery.

"Winning this contest is the only thing I've ever done right!" she squealed ecstatically, while gesturing to the squalor in her home and mentioning that all of her 13 children disowned her when she began working at UMass.

"They said I was a disgrace to them and it embarrassed them in front of their friends (who went to UMass) when I'd call them by name in line. All I wanted was a little extra money to buy a puppy to keep me company in this shack out in the boonies," she said.

Dinger said she will use the money to buy a Rolls Royce and learn how to drive and also to fill her yard with sheep. "They're so cute and fuzzy—I've always wanted sheep."

You, too, can be a Collingo winner. Just use your social security number or the number on your last parking ticket issued by UMass police. If it matches the number of column inches filled with copy in an issue of the Collegian, mail your submission to 113 Campus Center.

Weekly drawings are on Sundays and if no one wins, the editors keep the jackpot—so send in your entry today! Next week's jackpot will be $743,201 (accounting services courtesy of Bank of Boston).

These rhinos were viewed fornicating along I-91 over the weekend. No one knows where they came from, but boy, were they fun to watch!

Coeds flog Bennet w/ surfboards!

AP photo

These are the legs of the students who bombarded Secretary of Education William Bennett's home Saturday. Because many of them (the students, not the legs) were charged with attempted murder, and authorities are seeking accomplices, their identities have been obscured by photo cropping.

WASHINGTON (API) - Education Secretary William J. Bennett is listed in satisfactory condition in George Washington University Hospital after being attacked in his Bethesda, Md. home by hundreds of sunburned college students.

The students, on their way back from Spring Break in Florida, met early Saturday morning to rally against the Reagan administration's proposed financial aid cuts. When Bennett emerged from his home to walk to his car, the students, shouting "Divest from Bennett," encircled him and beat him with their surfboards.

One hundred students were arrested by Maryland police, and will today face charges of assault with intent to murder.

The chant was in reference to Bennett's remark last month that students who want to afford college will have to "divest themselves" from Florida vacations, expensive cars, and stereos, which he said were bought with financial aid money.

Joseph Student, a senior at the University of South Dakota who organized the rally while he sunned himself on the beach, said Bennett "has no clue" what it is like to be a student today.

"Hey, my parents paid for this trip. I didn't even touch my GSL (Guaranteed Student Loan) for this one. How can he assume students are doing such a thing? Maybe he did it when he was in school, so he feels everybody does," he said.

The rally started out peacefully, with students picketing in front of Bennett's modest mansion in the exclusive neighborhood, carrying signs that said "Financial Aid or Bust," and "If you think education is expensive try a Jaguar."

"He's cutting the waivers/ he's cutting the Pells/he's even cutting those GSLs/But we're still filling/out the forms," the students sang, as they sat on Bennett's plush one-acre lawn, clad in khaki shorts and Hawaiian print shirts. The song, sung to the tune of Still Willing by popular vocalist Linda Rondstadt, was written by University of Massachusetts student Ted N. Young, during a recent lobbying trip to the capital.

President Ronald Reagan, who heard about the attack while he was home at his range in Santa Barbara, CA, said he "deeply regretted" Bennett's injury, but said the incident still hadn't changed his mind; "I will still try to slash the hell out of financial aid programs," he said.

Jefes de 4 paises tienen envidio de los espanoles

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (EFE) - Enojados por la entrada de Espana, pero no sus paises, en el Mercado Comun, lideres de cuatro paises hispanos ayer demandaron que el gobierno EE.UU. les diera misiles nucleares y les hiciera miembros de la OTAN para que pudieran tambien juntarse con la organizacion economica.

El ano pasado, el gobierno socialista de Espana, despues de mucha discusion, agredecio a hacerse miembro de la OTAN para mejorar la probabilidad de entrar el Mercado Comun y cesar de ser un pais del Tercer Mundo en Europa.

Ahora, parece que Espana, y tambien Portugal, van a ser miembros del Mercado Comun dentro de poco tiempo y al oir estas noticias el presidente de Nicaragua se enfado mucho.

"Cono! Que podemos hacer?" digo Daniel Ortega Saavedra. "Queremos tambien ser parte de la maquina imperialista, pero no podemos porque no estamos en la OTAN. Yo le digo al senor Reagan, deje de ataquarnos! Denos algunas bases de misiles aqui y aceptenos al Mercado!"

Jose Napoleon Duarte de El Salvador y Julio Sanguinetti de Uruguay tambien expresaron enojamiento. "La CIA me hizo elegido," lamento Duarte,"pero los EE.UU. no nos de la oportunidad que tienen nuestros hermanos en Espana."

Sanguinetti dijo que Reagan es un "cab ron. Primero, asegura que la prensa llama mi election democratica. Pero ahora mira que hace con los comunistas - eh, socialistas - en Espana!"

Un representante de Mejico, que queria quedarse anonimo, no diria mas que, "Bendejo, bendejo," repetido muchas veces.

PARIS-On sait partout comme les francais destestent les influences amercains ici, mais il apparait qu'aux Etats Unis, on embrasse les choses francaises. Comme le croissant, duquel le president Francois Mitterand a decide de cesser le production en France.

"Le croissant n'est pas encore un institution francais," il s'est plaint en manageant des donuts pour le petit dejeuner hier. "Ainsi, il faut que nous cessions de les preparer Je voudrais que tous les chefs de notre pays me obeissent ou il faudra que je propose un loi."

On sait pas l'effet que cette proclamation aura sur la nationalisme des gens francais, mais un boulangerie sur les Champs Elysees a deja declare de ne pas complier avec la demande de Mitterand.

"Les touristes - qu'est-ce qu'ils mangeront?" a dit un chef qui n'a pas voulu etre nomme. "Moi, j'aime bien les croissants, et j'espere que les peuples de la France feront les demonstrations jusqu'au temps que les president deviendra content avec leurs sentiments."

Acid rain contamination dissolves lips, dishes

By RENEE BACHER

Friday, public works officials received a complaint from a group of Amherst residents saying their water tasted "funny."

Saturday, the people called again because the dishes and cutlery had dissolved while soaking in sudsy water.

Today, residents Mark Burridge, Christopher Walsh, and Renee Bacher (no relation to Collegian staff member) were rushed to University Health Services to be treated for injuries sustained from consuming acid rain.

"I told those guys that I thought there was something weird with the water and I didn't think we should drink it because it killed all the plants this morning," said Burridge.

Apparently, the tenants of 1313 Mockingbird Lane didn't heed the warning signs and continued to use their water. To their dismay, each lost a lip.

"When the plates and stuff went, I though it was no real problem because I don't mind eating on paper...but this! How am I supposed to kiss my girlfriend?" Walsh said.

Bacher made no comment but appeared to be trying to keep a stiff upper lip about the matter.

Prof completes study of '&!%$!'

By NICK PROFANITEE

A UMass linguistics professor has just announced completion of a 10-month study of the origins and usage of the work "fuck."

Last night, at a celebratory banquet at the chancellor's house, Victor Kursensware accepted the accolades of his colleagues and demonstrated the amazing versatility of this often used but little understood work.

"The word fuck originally comes from the German word fokken, meaning 'to strike,' but after being adopted into common use, it has come to mean a great deal more than that," he said.

Kursensware went on to show examples of the multitude of ways it can be used in the English language, a partial list of which follows:

Confusion-What the fuck?
Frustration-They just said fuck it and left.
Menace-Don't fuck with me or I'll rip your fucking tongue out.
Magnitude-That guy is fucking huge!
Impairment-Are you fucking blind?
Incompetence-You sure fucked that one up.
Politics-That guy is fucking crooked.
Entreaty-Please don't fuck me over.
Telling time-It's five-fucking-thirty.
Trouble-I'm fucked now.
Cuisine-This is a nice fucking restaurant.
History-That vase is fucking ancient.
Fraud-I got fucked at the used car lot.
Contempt-Fuck the fucking Diaz brothers
Level of intoxication-I was so fucking wasted last night...
Mental stability-That guy is fucking crazy.
Amusement-This paper is fucking hilarious!

Kursensware also announced that he has been awarded an additional $50,000 grant by the Tony Montana Memorial Language Institute to continue his work.

When asked to comment on the award, Chancellor Joseph Scruffey said "It's about fucking time that this fucking university got the fucking recognition we deserve."

Willie will be serving beers to more than a few superstars in the coming weeks' "USA for Africa"-type fundraiser.

Drake will never close

Group says 'We are the drinkers'

In a fortunate turn of events for the UMass student body and the public at large, the Village Inn, Brad's Grapevine, Willie's Rathskeller, Drake, will remain open.

This is due to a unified effort of many superstars in the music industry, much like the recent USA for Africa benefit. Inspired by a recent revenue raising effort by UMass Blues Band, an impressive list of musicians is also volunteering time for a two-week nightly marathon.

Through inquiries and solicitations made by UPC, WMUA, and this newspaper, 14 bands have been confirmed in this concerted effort.

A bastion of pleasure and inspiring creativity, the Drake has been a second home for generations of UMies. Though initially shocked at D.H. Jones' paltry $400,000 acquisition, the powers that be were unwilling to concede defeat to this local party pooper. Beginning tonight, the Pretenders will kick-off the festivities in this standing-room only series, downstairs at Willie's Rathskeller.

Tickets for all shows will be $50, steep, but also an investment for the future, guaranteeing an unpretentious bar in Amherst to drink at. Tuesday night brings Stevie Ray Vaughan, followed by Roxy Music, David Bowie, James Brown, and a reunited WHO and J. Geils Band.

Week two begins with one time Drake patron Michael Jackson (Willie huh?) followed by the Clash, Tina Turner, George Thorogood, Bruce Springsteen, The Honeydrippers, and ending with the Rolling Stones on Sunday.

On the subject of the Drake, Mick Jagger had this to say, "D.H. Jones has simply got to cool out. With the money we plan to raise, we'll be giving the Parkers twice their asking price, as well as enough to set Willie up for the rest of his life."

To help ensure the Drake's continued longevity, MTV has agreed to air some of the videos of the UMass Blues Band's Wednesday night shows, which Willie himself filmed, with proceeds being donated to the cause.

UM prof may star in Tab ad

By Notta Japp

What do Geraldine Ferraro and UMass journalism professor Ralph Whitehead have in common?

They both advertise their favorite diet soft drinks!

That's right, our own Ralph Whitehead, sources say, has received an offer from the Coca-Cola Corp. to appear in a series of national advertisements for Tab, that sparkling diet cola (which was better before they added Nutrasweet) which Ralphie is never seen without.

"I knew when he was in the TV news business," a promotional agent at Coke headquarters explained last week, in reference to Whitehead 's stint as news anchor at a Wisconsin station in the 1970s. "He was a face you just don't forget. That sleek hair, those blue eyes, that jawbone...When I heard that he actually endorsed his product in his classes, I thought I'd check him out."

The agent was referring to a recent class discussion in which Whitehead refuted charges that Tab was a less masculine and less tasty soft drink beverage than its parent company's newer diet soda, Diet Coke, advertising for which has been targeted at a more general audience than the slim women generally portrayed in Tab commercials.

"I love the stuff," he said then, though he has not been available for comment since the commercial rumors surfaced.

While Ferraro critics took note of the $500,000 fee the former vice presidential candidate was paid for her appearance endorsing Diet Pepsi, Whitehead is not in danger of a similar critique. His contract will reportedly provide him with only a small stipend because he will receive a lifetime supply of Tab six-packs, at his own request.

Big drug deal set; vendor front used

So your 20th birthday is June 2, the day after one is eligible to partake of the grandfather clause of the law raising the drinking age to 21 - and you're starting to bum out at the thought of having to wait another year till you can really get down and legally party.

Not to worry. Legal or not, partying is not going to go out of style. Rumor has it that area drug dealers have plans to more than compensate for the increased demand of ID-less students on the party market.

Sources spoke only on the condition that they not be identified so that their plans to rent a jet for a round trip to Columbia will not be foiled by law authorities. The goods have already begun to arrive and are being kept in a secret location.

"What we have to concentrate on now is distribution on a wide scale - we're thinking of setting up fronts with campus vendors so we can best serve the student population," one said. Watch the Collegian for further details.

SECRET STASH: Two-ton piles of cocaine are hidden behind the Physical Plant, as shown to a reporter by a dealer in an off-the-record interview. "We're just hoping the wind doesn't blow," he said.

Dickinson and Dion to play at Spring Concert

As spring rolls around, every UMass student asks one question-"What bands are going to play at Spring Concert this year?" Well, at last that burning question has been answered. RPC (Reunion Program Council, the student run concert group which specializes in bringing the same bands to UMass as many times as possible has released the exciting line-up for spring 1985.

First up are the amazing Gilder Brothers Quintet. Nick, Nick, Nick, and Nick Glider will bring their unique sound to the pond, with Nick on vocals, Nick on keyboard, Nick on guitar, and Nick on drums.

Next, "because, you know, we have to have a woman," an unidentified RPC member confessed, the late, great Emily D. will perform, solo a capella, those haunting lyrics guaranteed to put hair on your chest.

The excitement builds as (yes, calm down, girls) Dion returns to the stage, with his unforgettable origional hit versions of "Runaround Sue" and "The Wanderer."

IMPORTANT: RPC begs students not to tell their mothers about this event, as they fear mass rioting of middle-aged women would result.

The headliner is as usual supposed to be a secret, because God knows the tremendous drawing power of such an act would overfill the pond area and destroy the ecosystem. However, a reporter, by keeping her nose to the grindstone (and her RPC source's nose to the mirror) has uncovered the band's name. We can't release this sensitive information yet. We will only say that if you were planning to study that weekend, or go to visit your grandmother or something... don't let this stop you.

In an effort to control the crowding problem, the concert has been scheduled for the first weekend in June, a week after commencement.

When asked how RPC could afford to lure such illustrious performers to UMass, an RPC drone said that the unprecedented budget of "almost five hundred whole dollars" allotted by the Student Senate for the event made it all possible.

Symphony is super

I must admit, really, that I've never seen a symphony orchestra perform before--all those strings!--and while I've only seen the Boston Pops once on Channel 2, my family and I did go down to the Esplanade once when I was seven but I ended up never seeing them because my brother stepped on a nail after a hippie pushed him through the crowd and we had to take him to the hospital. "Acid," my mother said. But I was disappointed. I wanted to see Arthur Fielder. But now he's dead. And the BSO, though having a lot of the same people, isn't the same thing. Anyway, the arts editor was sitting around with two of these tickets on her hands, and while she gets into Leroy Anderson's and arrangements of "The South Pacific", she wasn't too into them after she found out the BSO doesn't play that stuff. They play lots of Bartok. But here were these two neat tickets in the fourth row, and my boyfriend told me if I took him we'd go to the TOC for dinner before. Hell, we were all dressed up--why not?

Anyway, back to the concert. He did Bartok, and ah-this thing with lots of discordant cacoonic melodies. Some guy played the bassoon. Choruscating. Simply choruscating. Then, Seji, in true classic fashion, lapsed into Bach's Brandenburg Concerto no. 6. I really liked this one. It was fast, with lots of interruptions from the other violins, and it didn't have lots of pauses and stuff like the Bartok. I hated the Bartok. You can't hum to it. And besides, some lady was sitting in front of me smoking a cancerette even after I told her to stop and that whole part was ruined.

You know, up at UMass, we don't get much culture except for the farm equipment museum in Hadley. And I think you shouldn't miss the Pops. Oops, that's the BSO. (Same people, same people.) Anyway, it was a delight and I hope they come back.

Did I fill my line count yet?

Yesiree Bob, this sure was an exciting week in books: Here are some of the new blockbuster titles just released: JAMES JOYCE: Dick, Erin and Spot (Awksford U. Press, $24.98) Recent excavations in Dublin have unearthed this early manuscript which predates Ulysses by six years. It is one of Joyce's most intricate and insightful works, and introduces themes expounded upon in Eggziles and Finnugan's Rainbow. Here is a short, characteristic extract:

See Dick Run.
See Erin Run.
Run, Kids, Run.
Run Run Run.

STEPHEN KING: Children of the Corny (viKING, $18.98) The latest book by the "King" of horror deals with a crazed life preserver which instantly transforms anything (or anyone! 00-hee hee-Hoo-Ha!) it encounters into Manhattan Clam Chowder. The hero, a Maine resident, finally subdues it by dousing it with New England clam chowder, which the life preserver abhors, it being a city buoy.

DANIELLE STEELE and BARBARA CARTLAND: The Epistemology and Ontology of Being (Dull, $3.98 paper) In this long-awaited collaboration by the two leading ladies of love, beach bunny Babs-Seda and carefree Colleen examine their existential existance in an uncertain world. They both marry millionaires in the end.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE: The Complete Truly Vulgar Works of... (Hahvahd, $32.98) It is common knowledge that Shakespeare wrote primarily for the Elizabethan masses, not for the massive Elizabeth. This new book collects his lesser-known ribald works, including King Lear and As You Lick It. Here is an excerpt from his Sonnett CCXIII, "My Love is Nothing Like a Hose":

Jumping with my Dirty toes,
I scratchth my balls and pickth my nose.
Thou knowest not how truly sweet thou art
When thou lets loose a big stinky fart.

Rumour has it that Yoko Ono has been seen in the hottest New York Night Clubs with husband's look-alike, Julian. When asked about this new relationship, Yoko blushed and said, "Damn, he sounds so much like John, he even sings like him. I simply couldn't resist his charms." Julian is currently recording his new album titled It's Never Too Late for Something Oedipal. Nobody told John there would be days like this.....Liberace is directing a 3D film called I Want to Have Your Love Child. Michael Jackson, Prince, and Yves Saint Laurent star in this wild and zany adventure film which follows the lives of three crazy womanizers in the glamorous gay Paris. Liberace says the film is packed with adventure and fun for the whole family in the tradition of Disney.....Joe Duffy is to make a special cameo appearance in the upcoming production of Dino Comes Home. The film also stars Bernhard Goetz as Fred Flintstone and SGA president Jim Keller as Himself. Duffy plays Fred's friendly neighbor Barney Rubble and the plot revolves around Dino's search for a new home after Fred threatens to shoot him.....Joan Rivers plans to produce a new musical for Broadway based on Madonna's popular song "Like a Virgin". The play, which incidentally stars sisters Joan and Jackie Collins as well as Mother Theresa and Ali McGraw, is about these four virtous women who dedicate their lives to serving the human race in India. Rivers commented, "It's kind of like Broadway's version of Gandhi with a little spice of sex." Tony Betros makes a special appearance as an Indian Guru.....Mr. T has released a new single to benefit the Ethiopian cause. Following the tradition of Band Aid and USA for Africa, Mr. T sings "I Pity the Fool who Doesn't Feed the World." Mr. T. said, "We don't need wimpy songs saying we are the world and sissies like Michael Jackson shining their socks for Ethiopia. We got to have a strong image, and I think my song will do that. I pity the fools who don't buy it right now".....In an exclusive interview Penthouse editor revealed that there will be some explicit photographs of Lady Diana and Princess Anne in the May issue of the magazine. Guccione said the publication of these explicit photos of the royal family might lead to their losing their robes and crowns, but he feels that this is his journalistic responsibility. There has already been talk of the public begging Guccione not to print the spreads of Princess Anne as they might prove dangerous to the digestive system.

Noon rally to focus on new fee plan

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

Branches of the student government will join forces today at a noontime rally on the steps of the Student Union to protest the proposed Universal Resource Fee and the administration's plan to take over the Campus Center.

The proposed fee is a consolidated $261 yearly charge that would partly repay debt service in money borrowed to construct and renovate buildings on campus including residence halls and the dining commons. If the proposal is passed, commuter undergraduate students would pay an additional $161 and graduate students would be levied an additional $159 for renovation of buildings they may not use.

"It (the fee) is unequitable," Laura Gottschalk, coordinator of the rally said, adding that the fee would hit graduate students the hardest.

"At least undergraduates use the residence halls at one time or another but almost all of the graduates never will," she said. "If we jack up the fee, we would lose valuable TA's (teaching assistants) that benefit all of us." The graduate student senators have said that if the possible fee increase is imposed, many graduate students would not be attracted to the University of Massachusetts because the stipends are already lower than other schools.

Stacey Roth, Student Government co-president, said the administration has justified the impact of the fee increase for graduate students, saying there will be an increase in stipends. But Roth added that "the stipends are still comparably very low, which would be cancelling out the money."

The administration has proposed combining the trust fund of the Campus Center, conference Services and the dining commons to form an Auxillary Enterprises Trust Fund, which would eliminate the Board of Governors. Elimination of the BOG would nullify most student input.

"The Campus Center is a student building of which we generate 94 percent of the revenue," Gottschalk said." We should have say on what's run and how it's run."

The rally, centered on "Rallying for Student Rights," will feature members of the SGA,BOG, and Graduate Student Senate and will address the effects of the proposed fee and administration's takeover, Roth said

"We're rallying"Fran Hegler, BOG treasurer, said" for student rights. We want to let the administration know that students are not in favor of this and we don't want to stand by while the administration sabotages our student rights."

Full house hears debut of concerto

by BRADFORD VERTER
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD- Pulitzer Prize-winning composer Ned Rorem premiered his latest work, a violin concerto, to a full house at the Springfield Symphony Hall Saturday.

The concert was dedicated to the Springfield Symphony Orchestra, who commissioned the work to celebrate its 40th anniversary.

The Springfield Symphony Orchestra is part of a five orchestra cooperative in New England, which sponsors and performs new works.

The soloist was Jaime Laredo, recipient of three Grammy nominations and a Deutsche Schallplatten Award. This season marks the 25 anniversary of Laredo's professional debut.

According to Rorem, Laredo and the orchestra "played divinely."

"The concerto is not meant to be difficult," Rorem told the audience before the piece had begun. "I love you and I don't like to make things difficult for those I love."

Rorem told the audience that he appeared at the performance primarily to show that "what we call a composer is not necessarily a man with a long grey beard and dead."

Hailed by The Washington Post as "America's foremost composer of songs," Rorem was raised in Chicago and attended Northwestern University, Curtis Institute and Julliard School of Music. He has lived in Morocco and France and currently resides in New York.

Pulitzer prize-winning composer Ned Rorem

Rorem was awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1976 for Air Music. He has also received a Fulbright Fellowship, two Guggengeim fellowships and numerous grants and commisions.

In addition to his songs and orchestral works, Rorem has written an opera (Miss Julie,1965) and ten books, two of which (Critical Affairs,1970; and The Final Diary 1974) won ASCAP-Deems Taylor awards.

Rorem is currently working on a septet. Future projects include a symphoney for strings, a trio, a chorus, and a new book.

Other pieces on the program included Gluck's Overture to Iphigenie en Aulide; Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 ("Pastorale"), and selections from Wagner's Gotterdammerung. The concert will be repeated on April 2. Call 733-2291 for ticket information

Stephen King to speak tonight

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

When the sun sets today, a capacity crowd will encounter terror, gore, and the supernatural when they pack the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at 8 p.m. to spend an evening with suspense novelist Stephen King.

King, 37, a resident of Bangor, Me., has written a slew of thriller novels including Carrie, a story about a girl driven by her religiously obsessed mother to kill her high school classmates with her telekinetic powers, and The Shining, a story of a hotel keeper possessed by the haunted hotel to ax murder his wife and young boy.

Most of King's novels have been made into blockbuster movies. King has recently written two screenplays, Cats Eye and Cycle of the Werewolf, for films to be released in the fall.

From 1977-1981, King published five books under the pseudonym Richard Bachman, according to Stephanie Leonard, his secretary.

Leonard said King wrote the books under a pseudonym because his publisher refused to "overpublish" his works. Leonard said "King's ideas for novels are never written under the same formula."

"He'll get ideas from a conversation, from reading or from going somewhere, "she said.

Leonard said "King thought of the plot for The Shining after he visited a ski resort hotel in the Colorado mountains. She said King wondered what it would be like being a keeper of a large hotel without outside communication.

King graduated from the University of Maine at Orono in 1970 with a bachelor's degree in English. During college King was active in student government and the student newspaper. King is married and has three children.

The event is being sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program; no tickets remain for the free lecture.

Conference rejects Reagan policies

Covert funding comes under fire

By TIM O'LEARY
Collegian Correspondent

President Ronald Reagan's Central American policies were the target this weekend for more than 150 people interested in the current Central America situation and better protest strategies.

A conference sponsored by the New England Central American Network (NECAN), brought to the School of Management more than 50 Central American policy groups from throughout New England, including the Western Mass. Latin American Solidarity Committee.

"Right now we're trying to focus on stopping Congressional and private funding of the Contras," said Cathy Scoppettuolo, a NECAN coordinator. The Contrasare guerrillas fighting the Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

"Also we're urging an end to all U.S. military funding to Central America, including El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala and Costa Rica," he said.

"This is our first conference" to pull all 50 Central American groups together and "we want to solidify our organization," he said.

Redcross ready for donations

The Red Cross begins its three-day blood drive in the Student Union Ballroom today with the hopes of collecting 500 pints of blood.

According to Diane Malachowski of the American Red Cross, "The UMass students, faculty and staff have greatly assisted Red Cross blood services in the past efforts. She said the last two blood drives in the SUB reached their goal, collecting 510 pints last November and 548 last April.

The blood drive is being sponsored by Alpha Phi Omega, GammaSigmaSigma,and the Faculty Wives .Michael Wall, president of Alpha Phi Omega, and members of the three organizations will work in the ballroom on the days of the drive. "We'll label bags, talk to the people donating, and take people to their seats. Basically we'll do the same stuff the Red Cross regulars do," he said.

The Red Cross asks people who donated at least eight weeks ago to plan on giving blood this week, Malachowski said. Anyone wishing to donate blood should stop by the SUB any time between 9:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Luis Mendez, a counselor from the Nicaraguan Embassy in Washington, D.C., addressed a Saturday workshop titled "Update Nicaragua."

The Contras are fighting "a war of attrition, destroying whatever they can get their hands on; schools, clinics, anything. At this point the only thing that is not there is an open war," Mendez said.

Mendez, saying that as an official of the Nicaraguan government he cannot give advice, offered his own opinion of how U.S. groups opposed to Reagan's Central American policies can improve their effectiveness.

"The solidarity networks need to develop a more mature, wise alliance. Constituencies need to be broader. The style needs to change, the approach needs to change," he said.

"If you really want to be effective," Mendez said, "in my experience, you need to be better informed." He also said the best way Americans can become informed is to come to Nicaragua and see the country for themselves.

"We have nothing to hide. We have an open policy to U.S. citizens, no police follow you around, you can ask as many questions as you want," he said.

In a separate interview, Mendez denied charges by the Reagan Administration that Nicaragua is a proxy of the Soviet Union or that it threatens other nations in Central America.

"We are not a Soviet satellite and have no interest in becoming one," he said. "We have agreed in the Contradora Peace Proposals to have no foreign military bases in our country. If we were a satellite, we could not agree to that. We are a nonaligned nation and we want to stay that way."

Nicaragua has "no expansionist pretensions" in Central and Latin America and desires to "live in peace with our neighbors," he said.

Mendez denied that Nicaragua has a Soviet-style economy.

"We have a mixed economy in which 60 percent of the production is in private hands. Our agrarian reform program has in fact created a new class of small property owners," he said.

Another conference speaker, Mary Fran Doyle of the National Network in Solidarity with the Nicaraguan people, (NNSNP), has lived in Nicaragua for the past five years and urged the group to improve its organiztion.

Doyle said the NNSNP has a goal bringing $500,000 worth of goods, including tools, medicines and building assistance to Nicaragua.

Corrine Rafferty, of the Nicaraguan Exchange, told the conference that groups opposing Reagan's Central American policy need "more people, to broaden the movement."

Springfield apartment blaze kills three children

SPRINGFIELD (AP)- Three young sisters died after inhaling smoke yesterday in an early fire that broke out while their babysitter left them alone to buy cigarettes, according to the fire department.

Darlene Rivera, 8, died at 1 p.m., about 12 hours after the blaze, in the intensive care unit at Bay State Medical Center, said Giorge Placanico, fire department spokesperson.

Found dead in their bedroom by firefighters were Edith Rivera, 12, and Janira, 3.

Two other families were rescued down ladders from the burning 2 1/2-story building on Jefferson Street. No other injuries were reported.

He said Candido and Anna Rivera, the children's parents were visiting relatives, accompanied by two sons, and the girls had been left with a baby-sitter, Juan Vlaz, 22, who left the apartment to buy cigarettes at a neighborhood store before the fire broke out.

No charges were filed.

CAMPAIGN for AFRICA

The Need Continues

CARE photo by Rudolph von Bernuth

Famine is not a media event. It's long-term suffering that doesn't end when the cameras stop rolling.

It's little children with bloated bellies and mothers too weak to respond to their cries.

It's old people who will not age gracefully and die with dignity, but will expire hungry and in pain.

It's people in Ethiopia, Mauritania, Chad, Niger, Kenya, Mali, Somalia, Mozambique and Sudan who need your help.

CARE joins the student-run organization S.A.F.E. - Students Against Famine in Ethiopia - in calling on college students throughout the country to give up a meal April 25 and donate the money saved to organizations fighting hunger in drought-stricken Africa.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Recognition long over due

With the exception of the Fine Arts Center, the Student Union, the power plant and a few grim structures in that brick-and-mud wasteland that is the north end of campus, the University Library tower is the only UMass/Amherst building of consequence which has not yet been named after anyone.

The University has bestowed this honor upon American presidents, Massachusetts governors and other notables, most of them UMass alumni. This being Martin Luther King Week, it is appropriate to ask again why this institution, in the 122 years of its existence, has yet to name a building after a member of any minority group.

The library tower already contains the definitive collection of works and letters by and biographies of W.E.B. DuBois, the founder of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. DuBois grew up in Western Massachusetts and was instrumental in stoking the protests against race discrimination and against black Americans' woeful economic state that eventually exploded into the civil rights movement of the 1960s. For these reasons, the tower should become the W.E.B. DuBois Library.

DuBois founded the NAACP in 1909, having spent a number of years criticizing black leaders such as Booker T. Washington who believed the key to improving the conditions of blacks in the United States was education and hard work rather than protest. In The Soul of Black Folk (1903), he poignantly expressed the plight of his people:

> One ever feels his twoness — An American, A Negro; two souls, two thoughts, two unreconciled strivings; two warring ideals in one dark body, whose dogged strength alone keeps it from being torn asunder . . . He simply wishes to make it possible for a man to be both a Negro and an American, without being cursed and spit upon by his fellows, without having the doors of Opportunity closed roughly in his face.

Such is the concern for the status of impoverished blacks that in 1934 he resigned from the NAACP, charging that it had become subservient to bourgeois interests. In 1951, as one of countless Americans victimized by McCarthyism, he faced charges that he was a Communist agent. A federal judge ordered his acquittal, but a decade later DuBois moved to Ghana and renounced his U.S. citizenship. He died there in 1963, a year before the first successful comprehensive civil rights legislation, two years before the march from Selma to Montgomery and the passage of the Voting Rights Act.

The 26-story, $16.5 million quasi-monolith in the center of our campus has had a less than illustrious history, from falling brick fragments, to the closing of several floors because the stacks are not sturdy enough to support the number of books they were intended to hold, to an entrance that stacks up poorly against some subway entrances we've seen. Nevertheless, naming the building might inspire the University to fix the place up a bit. And "The W.E.B. DuBois Library" has a nice ring to it.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Collegian Board of Editors.

Apathy, SGA's and fault

Ray Salemi

Lately, there has been an increasing concern, among those who worry about such things, that more and more students are entering college simply to get a better job. Now, to tell you the truth, there is nothing that I would liked better than being able to afford to go to college simply for an "education." Unfortunately, there will come a time when I must leave the Happy Valley, and go to work. Since I only have one real shot at getting a degree, I decided to get one that would net me a reasonably good job.

Recent surveys have shown that I am not alone, and that 70 percent of the freshmen coming into college have done so for career purposes. This fact has caused much consternation, and has been targeted as one of the major causes of student apathy on this campus. Namely, a lack of interest in the SGA.

Well now, let's look at this. It would not be an exaggeration to say that approximately 60 percent of the students at this fine liberal institution are career-oriented. Yet, there is very little that the SGA does to help these ambitious people. There are for instance, no speakers invited to discuss the job prospects for those with an English or economics degree. In engineering, there are a great many freshmen who are hazy on exactly what an engineer does (if you don't believe me, find one and ask; and don't accept "make money" as an answer).

The SGA could help remedy problems like these. There could be career workshops, which would help people explore their options. People from each discipline could be invited to speak on campus. Services like these would help many people realize their goals, and would help others establish career paths. There are many students on campus who really don't know what they want.

So why isn't it done? Well, judging from the workshops being given and the speakers being invited, it's rather obvious that the leadership of the SGA considers creating "social awareness" more important than the needs of the career-oriented student. And it is from this situation that most of the student apathy results. If the leadership ignores those interested in finding good work, they will be ignoring 60 to 70 percent of the student body. As a result, 60 to 70 percent of the student body find it just as easy to ignore the SGA.

Ah, you say. If the students could vote in the elections, instead of ignoring the SGA, then they could get the things they want. A good point, in theory. The fact of the matter is, the present leadership of the SGA has a strangle-hold on that position. Senators who try to change things soon find that the SGA has become highly immobile. People who propose programs which would aid the career-oriented student find themselves being attacked as materialistic, narrow-minded Yuppies (as if you had to give up your soul to interview with IBM). Rather than deal with this resistance, people find it easier to ignore the SGA.

So what can be done? Do we remain in a situation where the average student has no idea what goes on in the SGA (and couldn't care less)? Or do we remedy the situation? The answer to that loaded question is, of course, fix it. This is the part where I call upon the newly elected presidents to do something. The SGA must begin helping the average working student. People who are in school to get a job have to be taken into account and given services. Remember, they make up 60 to 70 percent of your constituency, a sizable majority.

Now, the SGA may consider it immoral, or just not right, to help people in their quest for money (even if most of the students are after it). If that is the case . . . so be it. It will be just as easy for students to ignore the SGA for another year.

Ray Salemi is a UMass student.

Letters to the Editor

Letter missed point of affirmative action

I would like to tell Richard Gatnik to stick it. In his letter yesterday, he writes "So what if 92 percent of the faculty is Caucasian with 82 percent of them male? If they are the better instructors then that is how it should be."

The whole point of affirmative action is that white males are not the better instructors, nor are they the better scholars. They are overrepresented on the faculty because white males keep on hiring other white males without giving anyone else's qualifications a fair review.

Furthermore, Gatnik's impression of what a university is is pretty damn self-centered. A university is by and for the faculty fully as much as it is by and for the students. We are here not only to educate the younger generation but also to do the kind of research that expands human knowledge and preserves our human heritage. It may surprise Gatnik to learn that professors are hired primarily on the basis of their research background, not their teaching skills. I would suggest that he do a little research himself before mouthing off in print.

* Can you afford to pay MORE for tuition?
* Do you want to pay a fee for the Campus Center Garage, even if you don't have a car?
* And commuters. . .Do you want to pay for the slop in the D.C.s -- even if you don't eat it?
* Do you want the rate in the Campus Center Hotel to get doubled?
* Do you want WHITMORE to take over our STUDENT office space?
* Do you want the flower, jewelry and other vendors on the Concourse to be banned?
* Do you REALLY need another UMASS sweatshirt? (The Administration wants to turn our Coffee Shop into a UMass Clothing "Boutique".)
* Do you want WHITMORE to have control over who performs at our STUDENT concerts?
* Do you want the Campus Center bars to close?
* Do you want your R.A. to card you in your dorm? How about a "Dry Campus"?

The Administration thinks you answered "yes" to these questions, or that you just don't care.

So. they're creating a new and unfair fee -- the Universal Resource Fee -- in the face of severe financial aid cuts. They are still trying to get rid of the STUDENT Campus Center Board of Governors.

And this is only the BEGINNING of the end. We ain't seen nothin' yet. . .

UNLESS WE ACT NOW ! ! !

We answered "NO" to these questions, and we're sure you did too. We must show WHITMORE that we want our STUDENT rights! ! !

Women's lax and softball enjoy the weekend

Boston - The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team put 33 shots on goal against host Boston University on Saturday, but only emerged with a 6-3 season opening victory after a strong performance from BU goalie, freshman Pam Mudry.

The softball team won two of three at NOPE beating Boston College 1-0 on Beth Talbott's second inning homer and spliting with Atlantic 10 rival Rhode Island winning 1-0 and losing 7-1.

"Their goalie kept them in the game," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "She was superb, she stopped twenty-six shots and made a lot of tough saves. If it was not for Mudry the score would have been much higher."

But Hixon was also suitably impressed with her teams performance. With senior stand-out Pam Moryl fighting double and triple team defense all afternoon, the Gazelle's showed they are a well-rounded team with a number of offensive threats and a defense that can hold the lead.

UMass got its first goal four minutes into the contest when Liz Schuler took a Bunny Forbes pass and made it 1-0. BU answered at 16:30 in the first with a Nancy Brown tally. UMass freshman Ginny Armstrong scored UMass' next two goals, her first unassisted and the second after a pass from Forbes.

At 7:00 Terry Geldhart notched BU's second goal of the day. Becky Bekampis added one more for UMass just before the end of the half.

In the second half UMass opened up at 21:00 with another goal coming from a Forbes-to-Schuler combination. Schuler scored UMass' last goal of the day unassisted a minute later.

The softball team improved its record to 6-9-1 with the win over BC and the split with the WRams. But the Minutewomen are mired in a hitting slump that saw UMass gather only ten hits in the last three games.

Talbott and Alais Fila gathered the only hits in the BC game. The Eagles were limited to one-hit as freshman Lisa Rever gained her first shutout of the year.

Freshman Martha Jamieson scored the winning run from second in the bottom of the 7th on a URI error to win the opener. Lynn Stockley (5K's) got the win after working herself out of two big jams

In the nightcap, the WRams blasted Cathey Reed for 11 hits and the UMass defense made four errors, including two by Fila, substituting for the injured Paige Kopcza (sore elbow) at shortstop scored twice, Bill Regan tied the game, Van Bemmell beat Moreau and Powers scored his sixth. Only a Fisk-to-Lukacovic goal broke up the Hen streak and UMass trailed 11-9.

Carmean, with the assist to Freeman, scored with 1:22 left in the third period to make it 11-10.

But Shaw, who battled with McGovern all day, and Sepulveda scored in the first three minutes of the fourth quarter to put UMass down three.

The Gorillas then came back as McGovern won five of the next seven faceoffs and the defense, depleted with the loss of co-captain Perry Seale and not having the best of games, began sticking the Delaware attackmen when they cut to the crease.

Hatton's goal set off a chain-reaction and the Gorillas took it from there for the win.

UMass owned a 39-37 shot advantage as Moreau made 13 saves, including a pressure stop in the final minute. The Gorillas owned a 41-31 advantage on ground balls and made 14-of-17 clears. Carmean and Lukacovic each had three goals with Fiorini and Musco getting a pair each. Carmean also added three assists for nine points with Fisk getting two assists.

Gorillas tough when it counts, 14-13

Lax opens season with OT win over Delaware

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It was clutch. The "let's get together and win this game" type of clutch. The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team wasn't going to disappoint 4,000 win-starved fans by losing the home-opener of what has been labeled a promising season.

Tom Lukacovic capped a streak of four unanswered goals by taking Tom Carmean's feed and bouncing a shot pass Delaware goalie Jim Rourke with 1:25 to go in overtime to lift the Gorillas to a 14-13 victory over the Blue Hens Saturday.

"I think of the way we were down and came back and I'm proud as hell of this team," UM coach Dick Garber said. "For a while there I really wondered what the outcome would be, but these kids have some guts, and the crowd wouldn't let us lose."

UMass found itself trailing 13-10 with 12:50 to go in the game to a run-and-gun Delaware team that had taken advantage of every opportunity the Gorillas had given them.

"When we had a three goal lead I was worried they would out it," Delaware coach Bob Shillinglaw said. "They can run with anybody and score quickly. All we had to do was keep them from getting momentum."

But the Gorillas quickly gained momentum. With 1:26 to go, senior co-captain Karl Hatton cut the lead to two, 13-11, with a blast past Rourke that senior attackman Mike Fiorini answered just 11 seconds later after taking a great pass from Greg Fisk to make it 13-12.

Delaware, forgetting the push-it-up strategy that gave them a lead, tried stalling the ball for the remainder of the game, but the UMass defense stiffened, and with 6:34 left in the game Delaware's Denis Sepulveda was called for a push and added a minute to his penalty after some unsportsmanlike dialogue with the officials.

UMass had its chance with the man-advantage and Fiorini made the most of it, rifling a shot in after a Carmean pass to tie the score at 13 with 5:34 to go.

Delaware got the ball back with 4:14 to go and tried to get the ball to junior All-American Randy Powers who had six goals on the day.

The Hens were checked off the ball and regained it before Garber called time out with 1:53 to go. Then it happened.

The Wave. The first-ever UMass wave started on the Tobin balcony and moved to the hill bordering the field. The 4,000 in attendance washed it through four times.

"I couldn't believe it, the wave at UMass. We were standing there listening to coach and all of a sudden they (the crowd) started doing it. It was sick," Fiorini said. "That really got us pumped. I knew there was no way we were going to lose."

Delaware got the ball to Powers, who cut toward goalie Gerry Moreau's left side with six seconds to go. Defenseman Tommy Aldrich checked his former West Genesse high school teammate off of the ball. Another high school buddy of Powers, UMass midfielder Neal Cunningham, scooped up the ground ball and forced the extra period.

Junior Seamus McGovern won the faceoff from Steve Shaw and the Gorillas worked for a shot. Fiorini, working inside, was denied twice and Hatton once before Delaware's Dan Harley was called for a slash with 2:06 to go as he hacked Doug Musco.

Midfielder Stephen Moreland (13) works past Delaware's Charles Chatterton (5). Moreland had a goal in the Gorilla's 14-13 overtime victory Saturday in front of nearly 4,000 fans.

UMass worked the ball around to Hatton at the top of the offense to Carmean behind the goal. The Farmingdale Community College transfer worked to Rourke's right and fed Lukacovic who drilled a ten-footer in for the game-winner.

UMass started strong, scoring the first three goals of the game as Carmean, Lukacovic and midfield Stephen Moreland connected to make it 3-0. Powers answered with two goals for Delaware before Musco teamed with Carmean to make it 4-3.

to make it 4-3. Sepulveda scored for the Hens with only 1:12 to go in the first period and UMass clung to a 4-3 advantage.

Dave Metzbower and Pete Van Bemmell gave the visitors a 5-4 lead before senior Kenny Freeman and Carmean tallied for a 6-5 UMass lead.

Carmean's goal was a highlight film job. The sophomore chopped defenseman Bill Kemp's stick, forced the ground ball and spun in the same motion to fire a shot from 15-yards out past Rourke.

Powers tied the game at six with 5:18 to go in the half before Musco and Fisk scored in the last three minutes to give the Gorrilas an 8-6 lead.

The Hen's then scored five of the next six goals as Powers

Baseball takes pair from Owls

Knopf's 3-hitter and offensive explosion key important A-10 wins

By JOHN A. NOLAN
and PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team began its Northern campaign this weekend on a successful note, taking two of three games from the Temple Owls at Lorden Field.

Jim Knopf's three-hitter highlighted Saturday's action as the Minutemen split two games, winning the first 4-1, while dropping the second, 5-4.

On Sunday, Angelo Salustri's seventh inning grand slam home run broke open a tight ballgame en route to the Minutemen's 11-6 pounding of the Owls.

"Our goal coming into the weekend was to win two," UMass manager Dick Bergquist said. "We should've won three but we let one slip away."

In Saturday's opening game, a strong wind blowing from right-to-left coming in from centerfield dictated play as neither team could manage much success at the plate.

UMass jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the second inning as Jeff Cimini doubled and then moved to third on a throwing error. He combined with Doug Wright to complete a double steal and give UMass the lead.

The Minutemen loaded the bases in the sixth when Matt Sheran walked, Salustri singled, Cimini reached on a fielder's choice forcing Sheran at third, and Doug Wright was intentionally walked. Steve Messina then doubled over the centerfielder's head scoring Salustri and Cimini. Freshman Steve Allen capped the scoring with a bunt single scoring Wright.

In the second game, Jeff Manto cracked a home run off Jon Martin in the top half of the seventh inning to sink the Minutemen and earn the Owls a split in the doubleheader.

On Sunday, the Minutemen spotted Temple a two-run lead before exploding for three runs in the sixth and four in the seventh to go to 5-7 on the season, and more importantly take an early lead in the Atlantic 10 Eastern Division standings.

Salustri keyed UM's offensive effort with five RBIs including the grand slam, his second homer of the season. Allen (1-2) picked up the win with Steve Allard and Jeff Jensen in relief.

In UM's half of the sixth, Cimini walked before scoring on a Salustri double to left that rolled into the corner. Messina then doubled in Salustri and drove Temple started Amer Abugherir (4-1) from the mound.

Wright greeted reliever Rich Danson with a run-scoring double that gave UMass a 5-4 lead.

The seventh saw Sheran hit by a pitch, Todd Comeau walk and Cimini reach first on an error. Salustri then unloaded a shot over the left field fence that gave UMass a 9-4 advantage.

BITCH 'N' MOAN

Grunts and groans

At the University of Massachusetts, as on other campuses, a small but vocal minority of the student body have forgotten they are here to get an education and spend most of their time denigrating, and thus impeding, administrators' efforts to improve the academic environment.

It is often unclear whether such people are totally misguided in their conception of what college means, need a way to prolong the troublemaking days of grade school, or simply want a "student government" sinecure to put on their resumes. In the '60s and '70s, many students seemed to think a war thousands of miles away was somehow their business. The hemming and hawing these days is justified in terms of "student rights."

What are "student rights?" Many universities have already given students one major privelege that is all too often taken for granted and abused. This is the official subsidizing, with money that would be better used for laiortories and corporate investments, for offices and materials so that egotists just emerged from adolescence can quibble amongst themselves and play Mr. and Ms. Politician.

If the participants in this charade kept it within their own circle, "student government" would not infringe too seriously on the right of more conscientious students to go about the business of being educated.

Instead, UMass' self-styled crusaders came to believe, for example, that the University's hotel/convention center belongs to them because it happens to contain a craft shop and a couple of cafeterias. They howled like children when the vice chancellor for administration and finance tried gently and openly to free them from this fantasy.

Not one of them holds a degree in law, law enforcement or race relations, yet they have branded the administration's carefully considered treatment of a suspected arsonist as unconstitutional and racist. Nor do any of them hold a business or accounting degree, yet when the aforementioned vice chancellor based a fee restructuring proposal on his many years of education and experience, they bitched and moaned. There's no longer a war to which they can yell, "Hell no - we won't go," so they thought up "No way - we won't pay" instead and obstructed the corridors of the administration building for 30 minutes.

One first impulse is to say, do away with student government; it's gotten out of hand. But this would only encourage a number of young, restless individuals to act more aggressively, possibly endangering physical safety on campus as well as the intellectual climate.

The more difficult, but more sensible, solution is to draw unequivocally the line between fun and games and responsibility. The former should belong to "student government," provided those of us who want to learn are not affected, but the latter is and will always be in the hands of those who are qualified to hold it.

Unsigned Editorials don't reflect the majority opinion of the Collegian, they merely reflect one or two power hungry members of the opinion staff who never let anyone see them first.

Minors need booze

How dare the Hatch start carding people at the bar. As a concerned student, under 20, I'm appalled at the apparent lack of concern shown by the Hatch in regards to the rights of students everywhere to drink illegally. The nerve of some people. Fine, take away Cliff Myers from the Blue Wall, stop the daily Happy Hour at the TOC, put in an ice cream shop in place of student controlled businesses, but don't you dare try and enforce the law. Shame on you all.

Scandal in the D.C.!

The time has come! Students, we must come together and fight this cause. We must no longer tolerate this. Finally, here is a cause we can rally around. Forget coed bathrooms occupations. Forget tuition hike rallies. Forget gay marches. Join me in fighting this great injustice; syrup.

Aren't you tired of constantly having to rescue your half-drowned and very soggy pancakes from the clutches of sugary, cancer-producing syrup. You pay good money to get good service from the D.C. Granted, nothing can be done to save lunch and dinner at the D.C. But there is hope for breakfast. Breakfast, the best way to start off the morning, should not be ruined by an overabundance of syrup.

Every morning I ask the D.C. worker to give me just little syrup. And what do I get? Soggy pancakes. It doesn't take much not to pour the whole ladle of syrup over the pancakes. Just think how much money the D.C. is wasting. They could cut their costs in half and keep our board costs down. But no! The D.C. wants our money. The administration wants our hard-earned money! Everyone wants our money.

It's time for us to rally and fight. Together we can save our soggy pancakes and waffles from a fate worse than death. To arms!

Lies, and more lies

Hi, students. Do you know us? Well we're the new SGA co-presidents, but you probably wouldn't know it because only 17 percent of you bothered to vote for us. But never mind 'cause we're so incredibly awesome that as long as we know who we are, it's okay.

Here's a little introduction to us. Stacy, that's me, is really incredibly like wow, into student rights. Stacy, me again, is so much like like a real student, hey she even like, takes classes like trampoline pass/fail and she likes them so much she repeats them.

Dan, that's me now, is like so psyched. Well, he is like so sensitive you just gotta love him.

And then there's me, I don't have a name, but I write all the letters for Stacy and Dan. I get paid through student fees so like, wow, I guess I'm important. I know you are probably thinking, with so many student groups facing budget cuts why should Stacy and Dan have a paid letter writer? Well their SGA co-presidents and that's all that really matters.

Well that's us folks, we'll be looking forward to like serving you, and remember like wow to student's rights.

Love your rodents

I take great exception to William J. Spain's last column "Gerbils - the Universal Panacea." It is shocking and disgusting to me that an otherwise progressive college newspaper would allow someone like Spain to speculate in print about the culinary and sporting potential of defenseless rodents. His sickening pizza recipe and his callous description of a Newman Center badminton game are unwelcome on the pages of my school paper. Obviously, he doesn't realize that gerbils are warm, friendly, intelligent, affectionate, and downright cute little creatures which are totally deserving of all the love a man can possibly give them.

Slime invades tower

I'm disgusted. Yesterday I was attacked by a gold, mucus-like slime, similar to the color of the stuff that drips from your nose when your boyfriend is gazing at you with loving eyes, in the elevator in the graduate research tower B.

We pay good money to come to this school, you would think that the slime could at least be contained in the dining commons, were it belongs, not in academic buildings. The sight of this slime every Thursday makes me throw up in the elevator, and of course the physical plant never cleans up my upchuck, so the same elevator has a nice green and brown glow to the floor.

How much longer do I have to throw up in the elevator before something is done?

Fuck student rights

This letter is to inform students that on March 16, the first day of Spring Break, the administration, under my orders, went into all residents' dormitory rooms and took control over their personal belongings.

Since we did such a good job in taking over control of the Campus Center and eliminating the BOG without any major student uprising, we decided to take over students' personal things, such as their televisions, stereo's and yes, we took their new 1985 Porshe's parked in student parking lots, which we have since converted to administrative tennis courts.

Presently we are making plans for a major announcement affecting students. That announcement should be made May 27.

Fratboys: No pets!

The Collegian's repeated insinuations that fraternity men regularly engage in unnatural acts with barnyard animals are exactly the kind of charges based in ignorance that we have come to expect from your lousy fishwrap of a paper. Even a brief perusal of the Greek Area regulation would have shown you that keeping pets in fraternity houses is expressly forbidden.

Computer sex scandal

I hate this fucking school. Everytime I go to use one of the computers in Grad towers, the fucking thing goes down. What the fuck. I represent COINS majors throughout this campus when I say, we aren't going to take this shit anymore. Just because we happen to be stupid and need the assistance of a machine to do all our work, that is no reason, for us to be treated like shit, even though most of us look like shit.

Either get the fucking computers fixed or stop charging us $35 a semester, or we might band together and break into the main computers in Whitmore and delete the pay records of all UMass employees and start a computer revolution that would make IBM proud.

THE EAR

The Ear has learned that a former chancellor, who will remain unnamed, is writing a book about his experiences at Amherst. The book, titled, "Long Range Planning and Strategic Resolutions for Running a University," is rumored to contain all the juicy details said to really go on during weekly briefing sessions with the chancellor. The book is expected to name names and the Ear has learned that current administrators are sweating profusely in anticipation of the sizzling hard cover.

Despite strong objections by faculty members, Bobby Jones, Secretary of the Faculty Senate, has decided to commission a Special Report examining the status of the Dean of Student's office to determine if that office actually exists or is merely a figment of all of our imaginations. The Ear has learned that faculty are opposed to the idea because, as one professor said, "we are scared stiff we may find out something so horrible that our lives will be changed forever." Nevertheless, Bobby is going ahead with the plans. The EAR says, "That a boy, Bobby. We love you kid."

This just in , the Ear has learned that Billy Colon has been named chair of the Budget's Committee of the SGA, replacing the much maligned Joey Sparkle. Colon you might remember was involved in the great Garbage Can scandle a few years back and is rumored to be on everyone's hit list as the most obnoxious senator since Timi Randolf. Ear's wishing Billy more success than anyone thinks possible.

Ear is the biggest news of the day The Ear has learned that the editor of a certain competing newspaper is really making the nightclub circuit. Apparently this editor has, get this, been seen reading the Amherst Bulletin while drinking at the Drake. Can you believe it? Well, apparently that editor has no morals

Speaking of newspapers, the Ear has learned that our friend Denny Maddog is attempting a coup of the Collegian. Apparently, Denny is a little more upset about the rumors he has been "close" with the goats down at Tilson. Well Denny, Baaahhh to you.

And finally, ear's something you just won't believe. Chancellor Joey Dee, is going to renovate his house for the fifteenth time since coming to Amherst three years ago. Joey apparently doesn't care that student fees keep rising. He just wants to make sure the tiling is the most hip in town. Well the Ear does hope that he gets rid of that hideous blue carpeting in the living room.

Until next time, have a good day, and remember the Ear is watching you.

Bonzo, 56, Actor in B grade movies

Bonzo, movie actor and lovable chimp, was found dead in his room yesterday, apparently after being strangled. Eyewitnesses claim to have seen a tall, wrinkled man accompanied by several other men wearing sunglasses leaving the premises about the time of his death.

Police are investigating this and there have been reports that traces of black hair dye were found on the corpse.

His demise comes just days before he was to complete his memoirs - titled "The Worst Actor I Have Ever Known."

He is survived by his trainer and a pet cat. A memorial service will be held this afternoon at Our Lady of Bestiality Church in West Los Angeles.

All three members of the Northampton based band "Freddy and the Toadkillers" perished Saturday night after a gig in Fraternity/Sorority park. Police say that they had just launched into their hit song "Dumbass Jock Maggots Suck" when a keg of Miller Lite was accidentally spilled onto the stage, electrocuting them all instantly.

UMass police are treating it as a routine case of Greek Area overexuberance.

Ask Butch

Dear Butch, Help! My stomach seems to be getting larger and larger every day and has been for the past three months. The Health Center says its all the steamed food I've been eating at the DC, but I'm beginning to think it's something else. What should I do? Tummy ache in Sylvan.

Dear Tummy ache, Go back to Health Services, if they can't find anything, sue them.

Dear Butch, My Food Science and Nutrition professor is giving us difficult exams and is now requiring us to read books. For the first time in five years, he has changed the answers on the tests. Isn't this against University policy for a professor to change a gut course into one which requires a student to think and read? Flunking in FS&N.

Dear Flunking, More and more FS&N students are finding it difficult to pass 101 and 130 because of a crackdown by professors. My advice is to seek legal counsel because it appears that what they are doing is a violation of the Student Code of Conduct, section D, paragraph two which states "All students taking FS&N classes should expect a grade of B or better."

Dear Butch, I have this compulsion to steal. Hot Tamales, cake, you name it, I steal it. I just can't seem to resist the temptation. What groups on campus offer help to people like me? Kleptomaniac.

Dear Kleptomaniac, I hear the SGA offers help to students like you, check it out.

Dear Butch, I'm in love with my lizard. We do everything together,- sleep, eat, play squash, everything. But that's not my problem. It's that I have this compulsion to study on Friday nights. I just can't seem to bring myself to go out. What should I do? Shut-in in Amherst.

Dear Shut-in, Why don't you see if your lizard will go out to the Drake with you or something? Just having someone to do things with helps in cases like yours.

HORRORSCOPES

Aries (March 21-April 19): Watch where you walk today - beware of telephone poles, moving busses and dogs who appear to be looking for a fire hydrant.
Taurus (April 20-May 20): Do not wear red today and watch your temper. You will not do well on exams.
Gemini (May 21-June 20): Be nice to that special journalism professor who always drinks Tab. You will be rewarded.
Cancer (June 21-July 22): Don't smoke or have x-rays taken today. Breathing may also be hazardous to your health.
Leo (July 21-Aug. 22): Today you will meet that special someone. She will be named Dorothy, have a pup named Toto and you will have the courage to actually talk to her.
Virgo (Aug. 22-Sept. 23): Jump into the sack with someone you don't know - variety, after all, is the spice of life.
Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You will be especially horny today - look up one of your Virgo acquaintances.
Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Watch General Hospital today for a secret message that will change your life.
Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Skip classes today and go to the Drake to contemplate the true meaning of life.
Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Use your excellent financial status to go on a wild spending spree today. Make plans for exciting, foreign travel in the near future.
Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You will be moody today but use drugs to lift your spirits. Don't consummate any large deals, though, that you may be sorry for later.
Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20): Don't even bother getting out of bed today unless you have a yacht or submarine to bring you in touch with your sign. Don't eat any seafood.

Awareness Week

This week's Awareness Calendar:
Monday: Air Awareness Day (Suck it in and enjoy it; if you don't, join an anti-air pollution committee.)
Tuesday: PVTA Awareness Day (Think how long it would take you to walk to campus from Brittany Manor every day, and appreciate your bus driver. Or, report them if they screw up.)
Wednesday: Dining Commons Awareness Day (Think how you'd never bother to cook yourself such a reasonably balanced meal that includes a gooey dessert. Or, fast.)
Thursday: Hair Awareness Day (No matter what color or texture your hair, thank the heavens that you're not bald. Or, if you are, reminisce.)
Friday: Fashion Awareness Day (Take in the varied fashions worn at UMass and be grateful you don't go to an Ivy League school, where it's the same scenery every day. Or, go out in your birthday suit in protest of capitalist dressers.)
Have a good week!

Football, basketball slashed from UM budget

Boyden bosses say: "no $ for losing teams"

By LEIGH McGAMMONS
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts athletic director Frank McInerney announced yesterday that the school would cut the funding of all "non-productive" sports starting next season.

The school cut seven sports, men's and women's skiing, tennis and golf and wrestling last May, but McInerney, along with Dean of Physical Education Dr. David Bischoff, said that now, any team that wins will get funding.

"Look, it's actually very simple. If you win, you get the cash," McInerney said. "That's what sports are all about. Who gets the money in baseball, the .350 hitter of the .200 hitter?"

In the new distribution package the men's lacrosse, women's soccer, skiing, field hockey, softball and women's lacrosse teams, all national contenders, would receive the bulk of funds.

The football, basketball and baseball teams, who suffered through losing seasons last year, will have to earn their funding.

"For every victory a team gets, its funding will increase 10 percent. A loss will cut it back the same amount."

Football coach Bob Stull, who guided the team to a 3-8 season in his first year in the head job, announced his resignation. Basketball coach Ron Gerlufsen, who guided UMass to a 13-15 record this year, will become Stockbridge Basketball assistant under Jack Leaman.

"I'm shocked," Gerlufsen said yesterday at a news conference. "We were rapidly improving and I'd hoped for a winning season next year, but now we have $1.28 left in the budget (the percentage cuts were retroactive back to 1978) and that's not enough to buy a recruit a key chain, never mind a new car."

Stull also expressed dismay.

"This school is nutso. I come in and try to establish a team and now they tell me that I can't have any money, they're giving it to the ski teams and the soccer team. I quit."

Lacrosse coach Dick Garber, who has contended nationally without the aid of funding for 31 years, said that his players would now get the recruiting perks he couldn't afford prior to the new plan.

"I'll be handing out the cash," Garber said. "I might buy Justin Ryan's and turn it into a team room for the guys. They all live there anyway."

UMASS NOTEBOOK: Underclass athletes by the hundreds have begun transfering from the school in response to the move.

Basketball players Carl Smith, Lorenzo Sutton and Wilbert Hicks announced plans to declare hardship and go into the National Basketball Association draft.

The majority of the football team, including the recent junior college transfers, will stay at school and play under new coach Greg Landry, a UMass alumnus.

McInerney said that he hoped the recent unsuccessful team would be able to regain their funding but promised nothing.

"The althletic department took a beating betting on Tulane in basketball games this winter. I thought they were sure things. We need to make some of those funds back and some sports may have to go. It's too bad that we have to take that step, but what can I do?"

25 students prolong Whitmore sit-in

Rally emphasizes resource fee, BOG fate

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

A mob of University of Massachusetts students staged a sit-in yesterday in the Whitmore Administration Building demanding to speak to administrators as part of a noontime rally protesting the proposed Universal Resource Fee and the elimination of the Campus Center Board of governors.

Members of the Student Government Association, the BOG, and the Graduate Student Senate addressed an audience of more than 200 in front of the Student Union Building on the problems of the proposed fee and the administration's plan to take control over the Campus Center before marching over to Whitmore.

The Universal Resource Fee is a consolidated $261 charge to all students that will be used to pay back debt service, money borrowed to construct and renovate buildings that include residence halls and dining commons. If the proposal is passed, students will end up paying up to $200 more for buildings they do not all use, a measure that student leaders call "inequitable."

Sanjiv Dugal, president of the Graudate Student Senate, called the administrators "irrational," "illogical," and "more confused than ever," saying that they are using the recently proposed increase of teaching assistant stipends to justify having graduate students pay additional money for buildings they don't use.

"They tell us that graduate stipends are going up.. but not for everyone. The deans can hire more TA's instead of awarding raises," he said. "The best graduate students are choosing not to come to UMass because of the fee structure and low stipends."

While supporters held signs that read, "Keep Whitmore out of the Campus Center," "Fight for Rights," and "Two Wrongs Don't Make a Right" during the rally, the audience cheered, applauded, and whistled after student leaders' speeches.

WHITMORE SIT-IN—In protest of recent proposals to dissolve the BOG and establish a new fee structure a group of students occupy an office in Whitmore Administration Building yesterday afternoon. Some spent the entire night in the office.

By ANNE MCCRORY
Collegian Staff

About 25 students with a set of nine demands maintained a vigil last night in Whitmore Administration Building and with relief help intend to remain there 24 hours a day at least until Wednesday.

The occupation first began with about 200 students immediately following a noontime Rally for student rights and remained about 50 strong until the building closed at 5 p.m. About half that number persisted when the department of public safety informed them there would be no arrests.

"We will stand together until all of our demands are met or are at least negotiated openly and fairly," John Ruddock, speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate, said about 8 p.m. last night from Whitmore. "We believe in unity, and this is a demonstration of our unity."

The first of the group's nine demands to be discussed at length, that advocating modification of the Universal Resource Fee by leaving debt service payment for dormitories within residence hall fees, was rejected at a two-hour afternoon meeting with Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance John L. DeNyse, his assistant H.J. Littlefield and Dean of Students William F. Field.

The combining of all debt service payments into the URF, including the dormitories and dining commons, is viewed unfair by the students because it will charge commuters, graduate students and off-campus undergraduates for buildings they do not use.

Littlefield said that only 14 percent of the URF pertains to residence and dining halls, and that to eliminate that portion of the fee would hinder the entire plan, whose purpose is to free money for repairs, maintenance and operation from accounts over which only bondholders now have jurisdiction.

"In the overall interest of everyone, not just the current student body, I think the proposed fee is the best choice that can be made," he said, at the same time advocating a $110 "renewal and replacement" fee that will be added to residence hall charges.

The other demands include: Access to high level administrators "to avoid the nonproductive negotiations and communication in recent months"; acceptance of the Board of Governor's proposal to retain student governance of the Campus Center/Student Union complex; a Student Activities Office governing board of students to oversee the SAO and supervise its director; and the immediate foreclosure of the University's remaining investments in South Africa.

The students, who are occupying the office of Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs, who is out of town, were permitted past the double doors near his office only on the condition that they would no be let back in. Consequently, the students were to go without food for the night until one student confronted Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey with that fact as he was leaving the building, Ruddock said.

Duffey took the student to McDonald's and returned with food for the group, Ruddock said, and told the students "he would look with greater intent into the BOG proposal," according to Rudock.

That "initial contact (with the chancellor) is a sign of promise that we might not have to deal with Madson but will deal with the chief administrator on campus-that would be our ideal," he said.

King reflects childhood's eerie images

By LAURA YEE

For Stephen King, childhood fears and real life experiences from "everywhere" serve as tools that raise tales from the crypt and breathes life back into the dead to form his spine-chilling best-seller novels.

As part of the Distinquished Visitor's Program, suspense novelist Stephen King told a capacity crowd of about 1,900 who packed the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall last night that, "Every kid has at least maybe one monster teacher."

The "Master of Macabre" opened the lecture by reading an excerpt from a short story in the works about the fears of a first grader asking his teacher, that is out to "destroy him" about using the bathroom in the basement where a large, human eating tiger resides.

"I'm interested in children," said King who has written a number of books about children including The Shining where young Danny Torrence, who has extrasensory perception, knows his father is determined to ax murder him and his mother, and Fire Starter, a story of little Charlie McGee who uses her pyrokinetic charms to destroy an entire community.

"Children are more open to wonder and belief in the supernatural...kids believe everything," he said. "You ask them, if Ronald McDonald is real and they'll say sure. If

Baghouse gets going

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

The "baghouse" exhaust cleaning system attached to the University of Massachusetts power plant is finally operating, Physical Plant officials said yesterday.

The $5 million baghouse project, begun in 1983 to place the power plant in compliance with the federal Clean Air Act by catching unburned coal dust before it goes up the chimney, was plagued by technical problems and late equipment deliveries which led to delays in its completion.

This caused UMass to miss four state deadlines for starting the system and, most recently, to draw a threat of federal court action against the University if the system was not running by April 6.

But Physical Plant Director Roger Cherewatti said that after several mechanical and electrical snags last week, the baghouse "has been running like a charm" since Friday.

Once the new system's 17,000 filter bags are sufficiently coated with coal dust to be fully effective, Cherewatti said the Mass. Department of Capital Planning and Operations, which supervised construction, will arrange for an independent testing firm to ensure the plant's emissions are within legal limits.

WORLD AND NATIONAL NEWS

Middle East concerns continue

Syria helps to discuss peace

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Syria intervened diplomatically yesterday to try to help end the Moslem-Christian battling around Lebanon's port of Sidon. At least 40 people have been killed in four days of fighting.

Maj. Gen. Mohammed Kholi, Syria's national security adviser, held five hours of talks with Lebanon's Christian president, Amin Gemayel, and Rashid Karami, the Sunni Moslem prime minister.

"We have discussed the Sidon events and ways of facing all eventualities," Karami told reporters. "We as a goverment are determined to shoulder our reposibility in safeguarding the citizens as well as the nation against any harm."

Asked whether the government would send reinforcements to Sidon's army garrison, he said: "The equipment available is on the way."

Besides the Christian-Moslem fighting, there has been a recent rash of kidnapping of Westerners. Reporting on one of the cases, a Christian radio station said yesterday that a shepherd had found the body of a Dutch priest in a ravine. The Rev. Nicolas Kluiters had been last seen nearly three weeks ago and was presumed kidnapped.

There was no immediate word on how or when he was killed.

Kluiters, a Roman Catholic priest, disappeared while traveling in the Bekaa Valley, an area of Syrian troop deployment in eastern Lebanon.

In Sidon, heavy fighting resumed at sundown Monday, breaking a nine-hour lull, journalists there reported.

Lebanese hijacker surrenders

JIDDA, Saudi Arabia (AP) - A hijacker who commandeered a Middle East Airlines jet yesterday and demanded millions of dollars for one of Lebanon's Moslem militias surrendered peacefully when the plan landed in Judda.

Airport officials said all of the 65 other passengers and 10 crew members were freed unharmed. The hijacker, who officials said was armed with a pistol and a hand grenade, seized control of the Boeing 707 during a flight from Beirut, the Lebanese capital, to Jidda.

One Jidda airport official said that when word of the hijacking was received here and the plane entered Saudi air space, the pilot was told, "Go away as it will never be allowed to land at any Saudi airport."

He said the plane circled the airport, with the control tower refusing landing permission, but, "Subsequently, the pilot told the control tower that the hijacker was willing to give himself up and end the hijacking. And the Saudi authorities at once said the plane could land."

Lebanon's state radio quoted the jetliner's co-pilot, Omar Atshan, as saying during the takeover that "the hijacker has no violent intentions. His only aim is to support the 'National Resistance' in the south."

Beirut radio stations said the hijacker belonged to the National Resistance Movement, one of the Shiite Moslem militia groups battling Israeli occupation forces in southern Lebanon.

Beirut airport officials said they believed the hijacker was Ali Kesrouwani, an employee of Middle East Airlines that is Lebanon's national carrier.

The Voice of Lebanon radio stations in Beirut said the hijacker was a member of the Kesrouwani family from the Shiite village of Ankoun in south Lebanon, which was shelled by the Israelis on March 21 during an anti-guerrilla sweep.

Escort head pleads innocent

BOSTON—A Weston woman, arrested and charged with running a prostitution ring advertised in the Yellow Pages as an escort service, pleaded innocent in court yesterday and was released on bail.

Brighton District Court Judge Albert H. Burns set bail at $10,000 surety for Gail Givens, 32, operator of the AaaaH Bella escort service, according to a spokesman in the court clerk's office. Her case was continued to April 10.

Ms. Givens was arrested Friday along with a dozen other women charged with solicitation after police officers set up appointments with them at various locations throughout the city.

Weston Police Inspector Roland W. Anderson, whose department assisted Boston police in the investigation, said the ring was operated out of Ms. Givens' home. He said she had six telephone lines installed.

"This house acted as the switchboard," Anderson said. "She would call her employees where they lived and send them on their assignments."

Police, armed with two arrest warrants and a search warrant, seized several telephones and stacks of records when they arrested Ms. Givens, Anderson said.

He credited the Boston vice unit with a good and lengthy investigation.

"We had to run them out of Boston two years ago," said Boston Detective Mike B. Craven of the vice control unit. "We arrested her in 1982 and 1983 for the same thing. She moved out to get away from us."

Millionaire shoplifts $5 tape

NORRISTOWN, PA—Pennsylvania Agriculture Secretary Penrose Hallowell, a millionaire farmer, was convicted yesterday for the second time of shoplifting a $4.99 cassette tape.

The 56-year-old Hallowell who is paid $48,000 annually as a member of Gov. Dick Thornburgh's Cabinet, called the verdict "difficult, unbelievable and unfair."

Hallowell requested the trial in Montgomery County Common Pleas Court after a district magistrate found him guilty in January and fined him $25. He insists he just forgot to pay for the tape, and did not intend to steal it.

"I am convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that this was retail theft," Judge William Vogel said after seeing a videotape that was secretly recored by a security camera in a Sears store on Sept. 1.

The tape showed Hallowell glancing in each direction before stuffing a cassete of the Boston Pops Orcestra into his pocket. About a minute later, he paid for a second tape.

Monson toilet seat reign ends

MONSON, Mass.—After 86 years of making what it called "The Best Seat in the House," one of the country's oldest toilet seat makers, the Church Seat Co., has closed its door.

"It's just one of those things," said Dorothy Kibbe of Monson, an assembler at the plant for 30 years. "There's nothing you can do about it."

The Church Seat Co. founded in Holyoke in 1898 by C.F. Church, who stamped his name on all of his products, employed 750 people in this town of 7,500 and had plants in several surrounding towns in Massachusetts and Brattleboro, Vt.

Rep. Joe Moakley will launch House bill to suspend deportation

WASHINGTON (AP)—Rep. Joe Moakley, D-Mass., said yesterday he and other lawmakers are launching a campaign to build nationwide grassroots support for his bill to suspend deportation back to El Salvador of refugees seeking asylum in the United States.

Moakey said he and Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., sponsor of a similar bill in the Senate, will participate in a news conference Wednesday with civic, religious and Hispanic leaders to launch the nationwide effort.

"The U.S. presently sends an average of 400 Salvadorans each month back to a country engulfed in a civil war and plagued with wide-spread violence," Moakley said.

According to Moakley and DeConcini, thousands of Salvadorans have applied for political asylum in the United States, but less than 3 percent of those applying have been granted that status.

The two men said that percentage is drastically lower than the figures for countries such as Iran, Ethiopia, Honduras, Nicaragua or Poland.

In response to the situation, Congress, in 1983, passed a sense of the Congress resolution recommending that the Reagan administration grant extended voluntary departure status to Salvadorans in this country, a move that would have allowed them to stay in the United States.

"Unfortunately this language has gone unheaded and deportations persist," Moakley said.

According to Amnesty International, at least 40,000 civilians have been killed in El Salvador since 1980. It also is estimated that 1 million people, or 20 percent of the population, has been displaced from their homes.

"I do not endorse the activities of the sanctuary movement, although I certainly understand and sympathize with their motives," DeConcini said. "For this reason, I believe we must endeavor to change the law, not break it."

Technical advances utilized to increase arrests of rapists

BOSTON - A computer and a half-dozen women police officers are being enlisted in an effort to catch an increasing number of rapists, police say.

The computer will use 72 categories to describe an attack, including physical profile of the rapist, phrases he might have used and his method of entering a dwelling, according to Detective Thomas H. Miller, who teaches rape investigation at the city Police Academy.

Miller said the system will narrow the range of suspects so that the victim could end up looking at only 20 photographs instead of 20,000.

He expects the system, which should begin operation in two months, to increase the rate of arrests.

Last year, 380 rapes were reported to police in Boston-a higher rate of rape per 1,000 residents than in New York and Washington, according to city statistics. The number of reported rapes had climbed from 367 in 1983 and 332 in 1982.

Police said the rise comes both from more rapes and from more women reporting rapes. A recent Justice Department study concluded that about half of all rapes are not reported.

There has been a rape-reporting increase even since the unit was formed, Police Superintendent John E. Barry told the Boston Globe.

"Girls will say to the female detectives, 'I'm telling you this, but I wouldn't to an ordinary officer,'" he said in an interview published Monday.

The unit has been praised by rape crisis workers, but it has not done much to improve the rate of arrests. During its first six months, arrests increased 14 percent over the previous six months, but there was a 50 percent increase in the number of reported rapes.

Civil Rights panel to explore activism

By LAURA KOESTER
Collegian Staff

The Ambassador to the United Nations from the Organization of African Unity Oumaru Youssofou and civil rights activist Rev. Charles Stith will join a host of other activists and educators in a panel discussion tonight at the University of Massachusetts as part of Martin Luther King week events happening all week. (7:30 p.m. in CC Aud).

"The panelists cover local, regional, national, and international activism. We wanted to see how King's dream was being fulfilled throughout the world. It's important to have a dream - we're using it as a focal point to commemorate the man and what he stands for - equality, peace, justice, and freedom," said organizer Fran Trainer who is a trainer on the anti-racism team for the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy at UMass.

The discussion, titled "Making King's Dream a Reality: Struggle for Peace and Justice in our Community and throughout the world - from Amherst to Soweto."

Appearing with Stith and Ambassador Youssofou will be South African native Penelope Andrews who is also past counselor to the NAACP Legal Defense Fund. Rev. Stith of Boston has been active in the Civil Rights Movement and recently turned down the position as head of national PUSH organization offered to him by former presidential candidate Jesse Jackson.

Local activists to speak include Sherwood Thompson, director of the Office of Third World Affairs, and Esther Terry, co-director of the Institute for the Advance Studies in the Humanities and a professor in the UMass Afro-American Studies department.

The anti-oppression coordinator for East Side Residential Education, Susan Allen, will also speak tonight.

"King had a dream to make this world a place where color, race, class, and gender wouldn't matter, where we'd all be human beings living in harmony," Trainer said.

6th Ritter race slated

Proceeds to aid runaway kids

By KATHLEEN HART
Collegian Staff

Registration has begun for the sixth annual Run for Ritter Road Race at the University of Massachusetts, a fundraiser for a crisis center which cares for the needs of runaway children, according to race director Bob Coulter.

The 10 kilometer race will be held April 20 and all proceeds will go to the Convenant House, an international childcare agency in New York started by Fr. Bruce Ritter in 1968. His goal, said Coulter, was to provide shelter for runaway children who are abused physically and emotionally.

"I've encountered a lot of kids who would be better off dead than in their current situation," Coulter said. "Covenant House can provide an answer for a lot of these kids."

The race was started at UMass six years ago by the Newman Student Association, who wanted to help Fr. Ritter's work. The event has "sky-rocketed," Coulter said, adding that last year 500 runners earned $7,000 for Covenant House. Coulter said they are hoping to reach $10,000 this year.

"I ran for charity," said Kevin Kelleher, a senior sports management major. "It's a great way to donate money. You get out and do something for these kids and help yourself at the same time."

There is a $5 entry fee, which goes directly to Covenant House. Runners also get sponsors to pledge a certain amount per kilometer. Last year there was a dormitory competition with Hamlin and Van Meter raising the most money.

The race starts at Alumni Stadium, goes through Amherst and Hadley and finishes back at Alumni Stadium.

You can register to run M-F 9-3:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Concourse through April 19. Also, in the Newman Center after Masses on April 7 and 14.

UM Police impound rental car

A Hertz rent-a-car was impounded Sunday night after a student was found to have accumulated more than $3,000 in charges from the rental agency, University of Massachusetts police said.

Police recovered the 1985 Mercury on North Village Access Road and learned it was rented by a UMass student. The rental agency at Logan Airport in Boston claimed the student did not intend to pay for the car rental because his charge card credit was less than the amount owed to Hertz, police said.

In other police reports:

The theft of two cars and vandalism to several others were reported over the weekend.

- A 1977 Chevrolet Camaro parked in lot 22 and a 1978 Pontiac Trans Am parked in lot 44 were reported stolen Friday afternoon.
- A car belonging to the head of residence in Patterson dormitory was vandalized while parked in the dormitory's parking lot. Police said there have been judicial problems in the dorm and that there are suspects related to the incident.
- Police arrested a 20-year-old John Adams resident for indecent exposure to pedestrians outside the dormitory Saturday morning. The man was arrested and put in the Amherst jail after a short chase on foot by campus police.
- A student tried to break into a second floor room in Thatcher House by using a power tool Friday night. Damage done to the door lock was the result of a disagreement between two students, police said. Damage is estimated at $120.

Sign wielding and concerned students March up the ramp to the Whitmore Administration Building yesterday after attending a rally in front of the Student Union to protest the Universal Resource Fee and the pending takeover of the BOG.

★ Rally

James Keller, former SGA co-President, told the audience that resident assistants who have room paid for as part of their salary will also lose money through the proposal.

The administration's plan to take over the Campus Center would dissolve the power of the BOG by combining the trust funds of the Campus Center, Conference Services, and the dining commons to form an Auxillary Enterprises Trust Fund, although negotiations to maintain the BOG are underway.

"The administration is taking advantage of us," Jane Donohue, BOG chairwoman said, adding that the Campus Center is a building for students and should be run by students. "We can't have an administration who wants to eliminate the BOG (because) we are the University."

Donohue, who moderated the rally and urged students to fight for student rights by aiding in the occupation of Whitmore offices, said "they make no effort to come see us so we'll go see them."

During the rally, student leaders asked the audience to sign letters opposing the fee addressed to Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey calling it "grossly unfair" and an "inequitable burden." A petition was also used to gather student support against the administration takeover of the Campus Center.

About 75 to 90 students then began to march to Whitmore while chanting "No way, we won't pay" as they ascended the stairs to occupy the office of Dennis L. Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs, and the Affirmative Action Office.

Although Gerald T. O'Neil, director of Public Safety, said he did not expect any trouble from the protesters, two of his officers picked up and threw UMass student John Paterson against the wall when he attempted to block the entrance to Duffey's office.

The protesters, who demanded to speak to Duffey or Madson, who were out of town, could also not reach the other three vice chancellors because they were out at lunch. However, Dean of Students William Field met with them to arrange a meeting later that afternoon.

In reference to the elimination of the BOG, Field said, "Student and faculty input should come from all channels (but) I think it should be more than a student board."

"It's a pretty awful thing," Chris Hughs, a sophomore economics major, said at the rally, adding that the administration's plan to take over the Campus Center are "unethical."

"They (administrators) aren't listening," he said, explaining if the Campus Center is run by administrators, "they would give you a chance to voice your opinion but they aren't listening."

Sabina Hsia, a junior animal science major, called the proposed fee "absolutely ridiculous," saying that it would be cheaper to move back on campus.

"The main reason I moved off campus was to save money," she said.

Lab fees: Inconveniences that can't be ignored

By KATIE GARDNER
Collegian Correspondent

Lab fees, due last week, are for some students at the University of Massachusetts a way to save money but for others they are a problem. In any case, though, lab fees must be paid.

For students who pay no more than $4 or $5 a semester, fees are at most an inconvenience. "It's just a hassle to pay them," said business major Darron Lobdell.

A $4 lab fee, however, is a way to save money for Jeanne Albano. "I had to pay $4 for xeroxing excerpts from expensive books that people in the other sections had to buy."

Yet for students who have high fees, they can be a pain. "Thiry-four dollars seems like a lot of money in the middle of the semester when you don't have any money," said sophomore Rick Fotin. And for many students the situation means not paying the fees until next semester when they are tacked on the tuition bill if not paid for.

"I never pay my fees when I'm supposed to. I don't have $30 or $40 in the middle of the semester. I think fees should be included in tuition," Jeff Bach said.

If lab fees are not paid, a student may be withdrawn from the University. "Depending on the size of the charge, we send out a letter saying you must pay—if not you are administratively withdrawn," said Bursar Robert Mishol. But only unpaid large fees result in a withdrawal, he said.

If it is a smaller fee not paid, the charge is carried to next semester's bill. Administrative withdrawal involves the removal of a student's records and "is used primarily to get students to pay their bills," Mishol said.

Lab fees are used for specific items not covered by tuition and only benefit the students in the course. They cover copy services, scientific supplies, bus rentals, movies and other services that a professor thinks will be worthwhile to the class.

The ultimate decision about whether to have lab fees, is left to the professor. If a professor feels it would be worth it to the students, he or she might use lab fees to rent a film or go on a field trip—things that would not otherwise be available. Lab fees then cannot be included in the regular tuition bill. They must be processed after add-drop period.

All lab fees must be approved by the Provost's Office, which is the main office in charge of academic affairs. Each professor submits a budget to the provost's office each semester and after authorization fees are processed through the Bursars Office.

Volunteer hotline will protect consumers

By JOYCE REILLY
Collegian Correspondent

A consumer hotline (545-0199) sponsored by MASSPIRG began yesterday and is now available to students at the University of Massachusetts on Mondays and Wednesdays from 3 to 6 p.m.

The hotline will provide explanations of consumer rights and will refer consumers to other agencies for further action, according to Sylvia Smith, organizer of the project and senior Consumer Economics major at UMass.

The hotline, run by UMass student volunteers, will initially be limited to the University. However, if the hotline has a positive response within the student body then an expansion of services to the Amherst community is a possibility, according to Smith.

Volunteers at the hotline will advise callers of their rights as consumers as defined by various consumer protection publications. The MASSPIRG hotline will not be involved in mediation according to Smith because the student volunteers are not yet qualified to provide that service. "We will however refer callers to Legal Services, the Better Business Bureau, the Consumer Protection Agency in Northampton and other agencies for further action."

According to Smith once the staff gains more experience and training the hotline could develop into a mediation center.

Smith anticipates housing and automobile complaints to constitute the majority of the calls to the hotline, but encourages people to call the hotline not only for a problem but to be informed of their rights.

Various MASSPIRGS across the state provide consumer hotlines and it was tried once before at UMass but was unsuccessful due to lack of student volunteers, stated Smith. The hotline presently has 20 volunteers and any student interested in volunteering is encouraged to call 545-0199.

you ask them if Mom and Dad are, they'll say maybe."

When asked if he was "warped as a child," he replies with an emphatic "of course," admitting that reading comic books when he was young gave him "terrible nightmares but made me a rich man."

King said some of his best ideas come from driving when "there's nothing else to do except listen to the radio" or when in an airplane even though he said he has a fear of flying.

"The only way to deal with it (flying) is to get drunk (with) 20 gin and tonics," he said.

King cited an experience that gave him the incentive to write The Shining when he and his wife stayed at a Colorado ski resort on the day before it closed for the season.

He said that the room 217 which he stayed at in the hotel gave him the idea to house the decaying old woman murdered by her husband, the former hotel keeper. King added that the "only time I ever got scared myself" was rewriting the scene in room 217 for The Shining when Jack Torrence, the keeper, thought he was embracing a beautiful naked woman that turned out to be a decomposing corpse returned to life.

King said when asked why he writes horror and suspense novels, he replies with, "why do you think I have any choice?"

"I'm haunted by the image of Alfred Hitchcock," because he had "a need to terrify people again and again," King added.

"You write about stories you can't find in the library, so you write them yourself, he said. "People have strange ideas-they pay to go to psychiatrists to get rid of terrible feelings whereas I write them down and people pay me."

King, a resident of Bangor, Me. and married with three children, has been writing books since the early 1970s. Many of his works have been made into motion pictures including Carrie, The Shining, Fire Starter, Cujo, and a recent novel Pet Cemetary that will begin production in August. He also writes screeplays and will give his first shot at directing with Trucks, a collection of his short stories, this summer.

Turn enemies into friends

Deborah Kutenplon

The man held a knife to the college student's chest. The scene was a lunch counter in Virginia, 1960. Of the college students sitting in to desegregate the counter, only one was white. A man, his face red with fury, made straight for the white face.

"You've got five seconds to get out of here, nigger-lover, before I stick this through your heart."

The student, David Harsough, remembers that suddenly nonviolence seemed just a nice philosophy. But he took a deep breath, looked into the man's eyes, and said, "Friend, do what you believe is right, and I'll try to love you anyway."

The man dropped the knife. Within a week every lunch counter in the city was desegregated.

It's amazing what people will sometimes do when they are treated as human beings. When we move beyond the labels of bigot, criminal, drunk, enemy, we can see the people beneath—people different from you and me only in the ways they have dealt with the problems life has dealt them.

Active nonviolence is the art of holding clear the humanness of people, even as you try stubbornly to change their actions and/or beliefs. Violence, in contrast, sends the strongest possible message that you consider someone to be less than human, capable of understanding only violent coersion. Nonviolence requires responding to what someone is really asking for, speaking to the pain or insecurity below the surface, just at the time when it may be hardest to do because your own defenses spring up looking suspiciously like fear or anger. In this way, it is often harder to act nonviolently than violently, and often it is more effective.

Imagine responding to a punch by inviting the bully home for dinner. At best, you could have a new friend and help to diffuse her anger towards others. At the least, she might be surprised enough to stop hitting you.

A similar tactic was used in WWII with Nazi occupying troops. Citizens would invite a young Nazi soldier home for dinner saying, "You have no right to be in our land as a soldier, but you are also a young man far from home and we offer you our hospitality. After a time, troop desertion was a significant problem (for the Nazis, anyway).

Of course, nonviolence does not work all the time, any more than violence does. But by separating the person from his actions, nonviolence gives a person the space to change; I know that I change most when someone challenges my views while somehow also making me feel secure and affirmed as a person. Nonviolence also continually reminds activists that they are fighting a system, not just individuals within the system.

Nonviolence works because one person refuses to play her role, refuses to be either victim or responding aggressor. What happens to a tug-of-war when one side starts swinging the rope for jumprope instead?

A California psychologist asked that very question. After identifying pairs of enemies on campus—people who for one reason or another simply hated each other—he invited one member of each pair to participate in his experiment. The participants' task was to shower praise, help, and warmth on their particular enemy, without revealing why they were doing so. By the end of the semester, every pair was fast friends.

There is an old Christian saying, "The best way to get rid of an enemy is to make him a friend." At the very least we can speak to that which is good in him, to help him—as well as ourselves—see clear to acting on our own humanness.

Education the key

As a responsible firearms owner, I was aghast after reading Herb Ramy's article in Thursday's Collegian. While he didn't say so explicitly, the underlying message was clear: banning handguns would prevent many horrible tragic deaths. While any accidental death is tragic, I must question his assertion that such deaths happen "all too often." After his admittedly melodramatic and fictional story, Ramy tells us that about 30 people per day are killed by handguns, and that "some" will be criminals. This adds up to about 11,000 deaths per year. According to 1977 National Safety Council statistics, there were 1800 accidental deaths due to all types of firearms, including 600 to 800 hunting-related deaths. Therefore, very few of the 30 people killed per day are accident-related. When one considers that there are an estimated 55 to 60 million handguns in America, the small (although still tragic) number of accidental deaths is quite remarkable. Instead of banning handguns, the vast majority of which are safely used, I propose that education be made (even more) available to those who incorrectly keep guns around young children or clean guns that are still loaded. For such firearms, safety courses are required in many states before a hunting license can be obtained, and if everyone who owned a gun took such a course the number of accidental deaths would probably decline.

I'm not asking anyone to believe me just on my say-so. If you are interested in the issue of gun control, not just on accidents but on crime as well, may I suggest Sociology 220: Guns, Crime, Violence, and the American Experience (if it is still offered), and its textbook Under the Gun, by James Wright (of UMass). Then draw your own conclusions.

Jefferson said...

After reading Herb Ramy's column "But...it was an accident," in Thursday's Collegian about a tragic hypothetical shooting accident, I prefer to respond standing on the firmer ground of facts, to wit: based on the latest official figures from the National Safety Council (1977)—the same report Ramy quotes from—deaths by accident numbered 103,202 per year of which 1,800 were from firearm injuries. Of these, 600 to 800 were hunting accidents leaving between 1,000 and 1,200 deaths from all other firearms accidents. That's between 1.1 and 0.9 percent of all accidental deaths... a far cry from the 30 deaths a day Ramy asserts which, if you read the report, is for all homocides of which about 60 percent are firearms related or about 18 a day. By comparison, almost 490 die of falls each day.

The possession of arms by the lawabiding citizens, men and women, is a complex issue—politically and socially. The legal root is in our Constitution in which Thomas Jefferson's ideas bore fruit. The notes in his handwriting in his Common Place Book were the wellspring from which he drew on. He wrote "False is the idea of utility that sacrifices a thousand real advantages for one imaginary or trifling inconvenience; that would take fire from men because it burns, and water because one may drown in it; that has no remedy for evils, except distruction.

Letters to the Editor

Another one tricked

I just read John Mackesy's letter Thursday and I understand what he's saying. Although my car didn't get towed, I did get a ticket. Now you may call me foolish, but that empty space in lot 44 with a car parked on either side of it sure looked like a parking spot. But I guess I, too, was tricked.

The night was Feb. 9 to be exact, and I will admit I don't have a photographic memory, but I'm sure that the lines marking the space were covered with snow. Anyway I parked the car and didn't go back down to it until the following Saturday.

At 1:05 a.m. on Feb. 13 I was given a ticket for violating 321 on the Parking Violation Notice—parking in an access lane. Now I thought, "If I couldn't see the lines and the space appeared legitimate, then how come I got a ticket?" "Well," I thought, "the officer was only doing his job. I know, I'll explain the situation and they'll see that I wasn't at fault." So I appealed the ticket. Now you can really call me foolish.

I have the top copy of my appeal with the ticket stapled to the corner and the Appeal Denied box checked. That's it, no explanation given. To be honest I don't think the almighty Parking Appeals board spent more than five seconds looking at my appeal. Granted with all the tickets handed out here at the University I'm sure they're quite busy. But I don't think an explanation for their decision would take away too much of their valuable time.

What's the moral of the story? Well, if you've got a gripe don't take the law into your own hands—oh and by the way, don't bother appealing any decisions. You'll just be wasting your time.

Response 'off-base'

Regarding Mike Cerrato's indignant response to Rob Skelton's recent column, if he had taken the pains to read that column carefully, he may not have had to reply to "false" charges, for none existed:

—At no point was it implied that Hackett/Cerrato, if elected, would cut programs to the bone. The words read: "if elected, could preside over a trend reflective of national politics..."; Read it again, Cerrato.

—Nor was it stated that the Hackett/Cerrato team would cut the BOG, SCERA, etc.

—As for a lesson in alienation, wherever the blame is placed, one did occur this year and future candidates will have to take note.

Skelton was not off-base in his commentary, Cerrato. You were, in your response.

Animal rights ignored

We read in Wednesday's Collegian that Professor Jeffery Blaustein has received a $250,000 grant to do "research" with sex hormones on rats.

Congratulations to the UMass psychology department. Now Dr. Blaustein can be relieved of teaching duties for five years, so he may indulge full-time in the cold scientist's ultimate dream—"experiments" and "research" on captive live animals.

As those of us who support the animal rights movement know, much of this research and experimentation is cruel and needless, with scientists endlessly repeating or varying experiments done in the past. It is the opinion of a growing number of people that much of what passes as "gathering knowledge" for humanity is often thinly disguised sadism.

Also, the public is left to wonder how a bunch of rats revved up on sex hormones relates to human behavior? Are rats humanlike or are people ratlike in the psychologist's view?

We can only hope that the UMass psychology department's activities will not soon include intelligent, sensitive animals such as cats, if they do not already. Has anyone looked in Dr. Blaustein's cages lately?

It's the same old story

One characteristic of advanced civilizations is that as they grow richer and fatter, they become softer and more vulnerable. Throughout history, the leading civilizations of their time have been destroyed by barbarians, not because they lacked wealth or arms, but because they lacked will; because they awoke to calate to the threat and reacted too timidly in devising a strategy to meet it.

Today, the United States faces such a challenge. The Soviet Union has built the most powerful war machine ever possessed by an aggressive power, not for the benefit—or by choice—of the Russian people, but to extend the domination of the Kremlin leadership. We are dealing with a country that puts no value on truth and lies as regular policy. The latest use of this policy took place last week in East Germany.

Just as the Soviets told the world they fired tracer bullets as "warning shots" at KAL 007, they now tell us they fired warning shots at U.S. Army Major Arthur D. Nicholson Jr. However, these "warning shots" obviously haven't been very useful to the people the Soviets were just about to kill. Perhaps it was just an honest mistake, but why then, didn't they allow the major's driver to administer first aid? In short, the warning shot was a lie, the same as the cover story surrounding the shooting down of KAL 007.

Putting an American officer in your sights, and gunning him down by "mistake" is roughly equivalent to the Soviet fighter plane stalking KAL 007 for two and a half hours and gunning it down by "mistake". We don't know the purpose of the KAL shooting or the killing of Maj. Nicholson, but every time something like this happens, and we hear the cheap Soviet lies once more, we are reminded of what kind of adversary we are dealing with.

Asian women discuss issues

By PAULA DUVAL
Collegain Correspondant

Looking for a place to come together and air their problems and concerns, Asian women issues group will start at 7 p.m. tonight at the Everywoman's Center in Wilder Hall at the University of Massachusetts.

This group will meet on Tuesdays and Sundays until May 21, and will be facilitated by Chong Yu, co-coordinator of the Third World Woman's Program at the Center.

Yu said the group is an important element because there is no place on campus where Asian women can come together. She does not know if such a goup exists in Amherst.

"We need space to get together, hear each other and share our experiences to find out what other Asian women's concerns are on campus and in the community," she said.

The issues to be addressed by the group will be discussed by the participants. Yu said the group will be used as a voice as well as a place to share concerns.

It is difficult for her to assess what problems Asian women confront because there are very particular cases, like her own as an immigrant from North Korea.

Carol Young, assistant director of the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Blacks and Other Minorities (CCEBMS) agrees. But she said common problems faced by immigrant women include culture shock in language and American lifestyles.

"Other problems they face hs to do with or is associated to their economic situation," he it finding employment, using their skills, or obstructed by language or housing hariers.

Young said she is "excited" to see the group formed. Because it's rare for Asian women to get together, forming such a group "proves there is a compatible environment for it."

She suspects the group has not been previously formed because there wasn't an appropiate facilitator, but she believes the interest and the need has always been present.

Problems confronted by Asian American women are mainly cross-cultural conflicts, "related to how they were raised with family customs in conflict with what is communicated in the American society of what a woman should be."

She added there is also conflicts between, "pursuing their interest of their rights as women (which) may be in conflict related to one's culture."

She advises Asian and Asian-American women on educational and career planning, personal problems as well as on difficulties in their relationship "related to ethnicity whether it is black and white or subtle."

Programs to focus on Asian society

By YADIRA A. BETANCES

In an effort to foster awareness in the Pioneer Valley area towards people from Southeast Asia, a program of lectures and a slide show on the peoples and cultures of Indo-China will be broadcasted starting at 9 p.m. tonight on CCA-TV Channel Three.

"Laos: A Land, A People -- The Way It Used To Be," by Barbara Kerewsky Ahalpern, adjunct professor at UMass will be the first in the series. She will speak about life before the war in the 1950s.

There will also be a photo exhibit by anthropology professor Joel Halpern and UMass student Samuel Pettengill from April 4 to the 15 in Wheeler Gallery in the Central Residential Area at UMass. There will be a reception for the exhibit from 6 to 8 p.m. on April 4.

Lucy Nguyen, academic counselor at the Bilingual Collegiate Program and adjunct professor at UMass said the program is an essential tool in order to understand Southeast Asians.

Another tool is education, like the two classes she teaches at the University. "Readings in Vietnamese Literature" is the first of its kind in Western Massachusetts, the Commonwealth and New England.

The class gives an extensive analysis and discussion on the independent literary group of Vietnamese literature in the 1930s, the most important 20th century Vietnamese literature.

She said the courses not only demonstrate the efforts the Asian students make in struggling with a new language and a new culture, but teaches first hand about Asian culture.

Although teaching presents an extra load of work from her academic support services at BCP, Nguyen said, "I do enjoy it very much. It's a teaching and a learning experience to go back into the literature."

She also co-teaches a "Culture of Southeast Asia" class with Professor Halpern. The class focuses on the social and family structures from the anthropoligical point of view, with a historical and compartive perspective.

Chantava Chanthavong, a senior at Greenfield High School said the class is "very interesting." A student in the anthropology class said she has "learned so many things about my cultural background." Although she came to the United States at age 13, she said one tends to forget the culture as one grows older.

Chanthavong said she now understands her parents better and why they adhere to their traditions. She will be attending UMass next fall.

Nguyen hopes the administration sees the need for more courses on Southeast Asia. She said it would attract prospective students into considering attending the University with greater interest. Subsequent lectures, to be aired at 9 p.m., include:

"How Could This All Happen To A Peaceful Country Like Cambodia?" on April 9 by Richard Brown, resettlement consultant of the ecumenical Refugee Ministry in New England, and former diplomat in Indo-China.

On April 16, "There Was A Vietnam Before American Involvement" by Nguyen. The series will end with The Vietnamese New Year's Celebration held at UMass on Feb. 20.

Black struggle meets tougher opposition

By YADIRA A BETANCES

Stevie Wonder's music will not be heard on South African radio stations any more because he accepted his Oscar, "in the name of Nelson Mandela."

Mandela, 66, former leader of the outlawed African National Congress has been jailed for 23 years on charges of treason to overthrow the white minority government.

The banning of Wonder's music is the first step of a series of strict measures taken by President P.W. Botha to "restore and maintain law and order." Speaking to a special joint session of Parliament in Cape Town on March 27, Botha did not specify what "appropriate steps" he would take.

However, Friday he banned all meetings by 29 opposition groups in Port Elizabeth's black townships for the next three months. It prohibits them to peacefully gather where the government is likely to be criticized.

This came after 10 outbreaks of violence have erupted near the region. A campaign against apartheid has swept the country since March 21 when 19 blacks were shot and killed by the police as they marched towards a whites-only industrial city. They marched on the 25th anniversary of the Sharpesville Massacre where 83 blacks were killed and 365 others were injured as they protested pass laws.

The American people have also been very vocal in their opposition to apartheid. Thursday has been declared "National Student Anti-Apartheid Day," with a rally scheduled at Harvard Yard calling for Harvard University to completely divest their shares with corporations doing business in Africa.

More than 80 blacks have died in a month of fierce rioting. Nearly 300 blacks have died as resentment over the Pretoria government has grown over the last eighth months, according to independent monitoring reports.

Yesterday, Pres. Botha rejected calls by the opposition party to dismiss Louis le Grange, Minister of Law and Order. "It amazes me that while rioters defy and challenge the laws of the country, and try to make South Africa ungovernable...attacks are launched on a minister doing his duty," he said. Over the weekend, five political parties, including the white Progressive Federal Party demanded Grange's resignation.

Blacks in South Africa lack social, political and economic equality despite the fact that they are the majority. Under apartheid, the 23 million blacks live in segregated areas or homelands, barren pieces of land comprising 13.7 percent of the country. There are five million whites.

But the government blames the riots on a dispute between black radicals against black moderates. The New York Times reported Sunday that, "rather than confront the military power of the whites authority directly, however, youthful blacks appear to have turned their wrath on those blacks they regard as collaborators (to the Pretoria government)."

"What the government is doing is telling the world that blacks are killing each other to turn their attention from the real issue; the cruel, inhumane and fascist treatment of the majority," said a S. African student in Amherst who asked not to be identified for security reasons.

He said the present violence is only the beginning of a concerted group's effort to bring justice for blacks. "It hurts me to see and hear about the violence. I wish it didn't have to happen, but we can't turn the other cheek anymore," he said. "South Africa must be free and it will."

Race, sex haunts minority lesbians

By PAULA DUVAL
Collegian Correspondent

Third World lesbians face sexual repression in addition to racism, according to the facilitator of a Third World lesbian issues group sponsored by the Third World Women's Program at the Everywomen's Center at the University of Massachusetts.

"They are problems unique to them as lesbians and women of different cultures," said Nancy Pleasent. The Hampshire College senior said these issues create the need to have programs such as the issues group.

But there is an additional problem. Pleasent said Third World lesbians are "more in the closet than white lesbians." Only two women attended the first meeting of the issues group last Monday. The group is to meet for eight weeks at the Center.

She suspects that because they are a minority in the area, it is harder for them to be open about their sexual preference. Pleasent said the best way to contact them is personally. It has already worked; two other lesbians have responded. "We will be building on that." Pleasent added she would have to explain to other lesbians interested in the group their purpose. "They are looking for something realistic that meets their personal needs."

Positive image of blacks shown on Cosby

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

The Cosby Show is one of the few hits of the 1984-1985 television season. It has consistently ranked among the top ten shows and has often knocked down such ratings giants as Dallas, Dynasty, and 60 Minutes from their number one positions.

One of the many reasons for the show's success is the portrayal of a black family in a positive light. While other shows such as "Good Times" portrays the black family as being poor, living in the ghetto, and show only one parent working, The Huxtable family is upper middle-class, lives in a Manhattan brownstone, and both parents have well-paying jobs.

Another reason for the show's phenomenal success is that it crosses all ethnic barriers. Every family can relate to at least one of the many humorous situations which are shown each week. Every family has at least one "Theo," "Denise," "Vanessa," "Rudy," or "Sandra" in their crowd. And all people believe or know grandfathers like the elder Huxtable who loves to tell stories about how they walked "fifty miles in a raging blizzard to school everyday."

But the main reason for its success is Bill Cosby. He graduated from the University of Massachusetts with a doctorate in education. He applies what he has learned to the show. He reads over every script and if he's dissatisfied, it is written and rewritten until it meets his approval.

The Bill Cosby Show has many fans at UMass for all those reasons. "The comedy is extremely well-done. I think Bill Cosby is extremely talented," said Lisa Alexander, a junior Hotel, Restaurant, and Travel Administrations major.

"The family situation is very realistic and the humor is light," said Tracy Brennan, a freshman industrial engineering major.

"He's a very talented man who works well with children. All the characters interact well together," said Annette Corben, a freshman zoology major.

"I think the show is excellent. It presents a respectable picture of the black family. The style is very low key. There's no loud talking like George Jefferson or flouncing ground like Nell Harper. Every show tells a morality tale without preaching. The kids are ordinary, not precocious," said Professor Chester Davis of the Afro-Am department.

Solitary company

Mabou Mines' Company
At the Rand Theater
Saturday, March 30

By AMY LEE LIPMAN
Collegian Correspondent

The Mabou Mines' production of Company last Friday and Saturday night, adapted from Samuel Beckett's novel was wonderfully effective in displaying the miserable feeling of being alone, showing that company is something that we all need.

Frederick Neumann, producer and main character of the one man play stars as an elderly, once very intelligent man trying to do, say, or think about anything simply to pass time. He craves for something to be different, an itch, a fly, anything. His voice flows elegantly, as he looks for the ideal tone in which to speak, "neither offending the ear with loudness, nor through converse excess constraining it to strain."

As his mind recycles from the present to the past and back again, he "finds comfort in figures," as he speaks about time and space.

The audience sees childlike qualities, in the man dressed in rags, as if a little boy on a lazy afternoon is without his friends and has nothing to do.

We in the audience feel for this man's loneliness, while hoping outside, that a feeling as this will never have to be experienced within ourselves.

As he sits "on his back in the dark", he longs to hear a voice, he looks to the left and then the right "trying to decide which of the two darks will be better company."

Company is an extraordinarily different play which is witty and complex, leaving the mind to think about the self and the sadness of being alone.

Frederick Neumann's Company was a study in solitude.

Politics of dancing

Pioneer Valley Ballet
Academy of Music, Northampton
Saturday, March 30

By ANNE D. CHENEY
Collegian Correspondent

When looking at a dance performance, one tends to notice only the most external aspects of it--dancers, choreography, costumes--but when I saw the Pioneer Valley Ballet perform at the Academy of Music on March 30, I was struck by how much its director, Gail Giere Collins, had done with the company. I found the organization of the PVB as artful as any of its choreography of dancing.

Around ten years ago, the Pioneer Valley Ballet Guild was formed, with two directors: Therese Brady Donohue, and Gail Giere Collins. Several years later, due to artistic differences, there was a split into two companies, which are now the Amherst Ballet Theatre Company (Donohue) and PVB (Collins). Since the split, PVB has become a member of the National Association for Regional Ballet, having successfully auditioned pieces of repertory at regional festivals. PVB has also found solid local sponsors (Bay Bank, Coca-Cola Bottling, and others), as well as grant money from the Mass. Council on the Arts and Humanities.

The end result, seen on Saturday night, was a collection of dances bringing together the best of the local choreographers, fairly accomplished young dancers, and beautiful (ie, expensive) costumes, scenery, and lighting. Everything spoke of good organization, the responsibility of the artistic director.

Despite good management, the performance did have some flaws. Pas de Quatre, staged by Mount Holyoke's Hannah Wiley, was too mature a dance for the four young dancers, who were strong enough technically, however. Also Jim Coleman (MHC faculty) was carried away making beautiful shapes with the dancers available to him, and let his piece (Road's End) meander purposelessly. The lightest weight--though to be fair, also the funniest--of the dances was a piece for the junior members of PVB, by Priscilla Clarkson, Going Camping with my Friends, set to a medley of favorite campfire songs such as 'Happy Trails'. It's hard to tell with a piece like this whether it is intended to be good-natured and cute, or very funny and high camp; which is what it is.

Field Suite and Boutique Fantasque, the remainder of the program, were both quite professional and charming.

SNACKSENSE
ARE SNACKS BAD FOR YOU?
not necessarily.
As long as snacks don't replace nutritious foods or add unneeded calories they aren't bad for anyone. The TROUBLE WITH MOST SNACK FOODS is they aren't nutrient dense, that is THEY DON'T PROVIDE MANY NUTRIENTS FOR THE NUMBER OF CALORIES THEY CONTAIN.
FOR THE SAME AMOUNT OF CALORIES, skim milk gives you 23% of the protein, 39% of the calcium and 36% of the vitamin A and B12 that you need for an entire day, while a cola gives you only carbohydrate.
Sensible snacks are carbohydrates PLUS NUTRIENTS, like fresh fruits and vegetables, whole grain breads, crackers and cereals.

Softball team heads to Providence

Look to break hitting slump

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team will keep trying to break out of its three-game hitting slump in a doubleheader against Providence College at 2 p.m. today in Providence.

"We just need to start hitting the ball better," coach Elaine Sortino said. "We have to improve on previous performances, especially defensively."

UMass, 6-9-1, gathered just 10 hits in its last three games after pounding Holy Cross for 10 in the Minutewomen's 12-0 Northern opening win.

"We're going to do a lot of practice and work with those people who are struggling at the plate and hope the hard work pays off," Sortino said.

The pitching has been the bright spot for the Minutewomen the past week. Junior co-captain Lynn Stockley (2-4, 0.43 ERA) was named the Atlantic 10 pitcher-of-the-week for her two shutout wins over Holy Cross(12-0) and URI (1-0).

Both Stockley and freshman Lisa Rever (2-1-1) have a 0.00 ERA since returning north from South Carolina. Stockley is slated to throw in the opener while Rever should hurl in the nightcap.

Today's doubleheader is Providence's season opener and the Friars posted a 8-15 record last year, including a 8-2 pounding of UMass last spring. UMass won one game, 3-2.

"They can really swing the bats and they have good pitching", Sortino said.

"It's been taking us a couple of innings to get going," junior catcher Beth Talbott said. "If we could start earlier we would be O.K. It just takes us a while."

In the 7-1 loss to Rhode Island, UMass got only three hits through the first five innings. In the last two, UMass got three hits and a run but it was too late.

"Once you're so far down, it changes everything you can do," Sortino said.

"We saw much better pitching in South Carolina," Talbott said. "They threw a lot harder down South.

"We'll do fine," she said. "It just takes time. We should peak at the right time."

Defensively, no changes are scheduled but the emphasis will be to cut down on errors. Starting shortstop Paige Kopcza, a freshman, is still out.

Kopcza hurt her elbow sliding into second last Thursday in practice. It will be examined tomorrow and if it is fractured, Kopcza could be lost for the season. Freshman Alisa Fila has taken Kopcza's place.

Villanova upsets G-town

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP)—Underdog Villanova, shooting 79 percent from the field, denied Patrick Ewing and Georgetown a second straight NCAA basketball title yesterday night with a 66-64 victory.

The Wildcats also hit 22 of 27 free throws and matched the Hoyas on the boards with 17 rebounds. And they limited Ewing, the Hoyas, All-America center, to 14 points.

Georgetown was trying to become only the seventh team and the first since UCLA in 1973 to repeat as NCAA champions. They were being rated among the greatest teams of all times, after breezing through the last part of their schedule and looking stronger with each game.

But Villanova, which finished in a third-place tie in the Big East Conference with Syracuse, began a six-game winning streak in the tournament, knocking off other ranked teams such as No. 2 Michigan and No. 5 Memphis State in Saturday's semifinal.

Men's tennis team splits over weekend

The men's tennis team ended up with a 1-1 record over the weekend, bowing to Boston College at home on Saturday but coming back to defeat Providence College at Providence, Rhode Island on Sunday.

B.C. had little trouble in disposing of the Minutemen as they took the match 8-1. The lone UMass victory came at the number five singles, where Rick Lingren beat the Eagles' Brian Bortnick 6-3, 0-6, 7-5 in an extremely close match.

UMass found the Friars of Providence quite a bit easier, taking the contest in a cake-walk, 8-1. Jeff Brady, a transfer from Tennessee, took number one singles 7-6, 6-4. Earl Small had little trouble at number two singles, winning 6-3, 6-2.

Lingren went to 2-0 on the year, this time winning at number four singles. Flicka Rodman and John Sommerstein kept the momentum going, taking numbers five and six singles respectively. Rodman won 6-0, 7-6 and Sommerstein waltzed to a 6-1, 6-1 match.

All three doubles teams won as well. Brady and Lingren teamed up to capture the number one doubles 7-5, 6-1. Paul Zaretsky and John Deklerk took number two doubles with a 6-4, 6-4 victory. Small and Dave Singer capped off the match with a 6-1, 6-4 triumph at number three doubles.

The minutemen will be in action Wednesday as they travel to the University of Hartford. Their next home contest is against the University of Rhode Island next Monday.

"It's a battle for prestige more than anything else," Bergquist said. "We both have perennially solid teams winning against each other always looks good. It would do a lot to help our confidence if we can beat them. I think we have a good team, it's just a matter of showing it and UConn is a good team to show off against."

BASEBALL BITS: Jim Knopf (2-1, 1.65 earned run average) was nominated for Atlantic 10 pitcher-of-the-week with Salustri getting a player-of-the-week nomination. UMass faces St. Joseph's in Philadelphia this coming weekend for a three game series.

Injury-prone baseball hosts Connecticutt

Freshmen on mound for U-Mass

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Freshman righthander Brett Valentini will be on the mound today as the University of Massachusetts renews its rivalry with the University of Connecticut at Lorden field.

The Minutemen, 5-7 after beating Temple twice this past weekend, and the Huskies, 5-9 after downing Boston College twice in the same span, are traditional New England rivals, although the game (3 p.m.) doesn't mean as much as UM manager Dick Bergquist would like it to.

"With both of us being in other conferences (UM is in the Atlantic 10 and UConn is in the Big East) the games aren't as important. We'll both save our aces and probably be looking toward conference games coming up. But I think the kids still have the feelings and continue to play with the same emotion."

UMass is hampered by injuries to three starters. Designated hitter Todd Comeau (.350, one homer and 11 runs batted it) is slowed by a pulled muscle in the lower back, second baseman Jack Bloise (.286 in limited action) is bothered by a pulled leg muscle that Bergquist fears could have developed calcium deposits in that it has been slow in healing, catcher Todd Ezold (.143, 0, 1) tore tendons in his left hand and can't grip a bat, thirdbaseman Tom Fabian ran into a thrown ball in pre-game warm-ups on Sunday and broke his nose, he will miss next week.

UMass outfielder Bruce Kingman dives back to first ahead of a throw to Temple firstbaseman Stuart Rossner. The Minutemen host UConn today.

"It's hurts us not having those guys," Bergquist said. "A guy like Comeau can really change a game quickly. Hopefully he will be able to play, as for the other three, it's on a day-to-day basis."

Valentini, 0-0, pitched six innings in Florida allowing one earned run, striking out none and walking one. Bergquist said if the freshman isn't ready, junior Bob Kostro will get the call.

At the plate, UMass is hitting .305 as a team. Firstbaseman Jeff Cimini has been on a tear, hitting .381 with a homer and 10 RBIs. Freshman thirdbaseman/pitcher Steve Allen (.364) and shortstop Angelo Salustri (.349, 2, 11) have also been hitting well.

The Huskies will go with righthander Mark Thalmann (0-2) or Joe Simonocko (also 0-2). The Huskies are 2-1 after a 3-8 trip to South Carolinia. Thirdbaseman Scott Cormier (.354, 3, 10) has been their gun along with designated hitter Jerry LaPente (.333, 5, 15).

Womens lax battles Yale in home opener

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team, coming off an impressive 33 shot, 6-3 opening game victory over Boston University faces Yale University today at 3:00 on the NOPE athletic fields. It is the Gazelles' first home game of the season.

UMass coach Pam Hixon, who believes in taking one game at a time, admits she does not know much about the Yale team but expects a tough game.

"When teams from our own region play us they tend to enter the games with fire in their eyes since we are one of the teams to beat," Hixon said of the Gazelles, the nation's fifth ranked team.

Hixon's fast-breaking team will be up against a Yale team that has compiled a 2-2 record (1-0 in the Ivy League). Junior midfielder Kelly LeCont leads Yale in scoring and total points. In four games she has tallied 12 goals and two assists (for 14 points). Freshman Jen Lange has also gotten off to a fast start for Yale, contributing seven goals and two assists.

UMass will look to senior midfielder Pam Moryl to work the Gazelles' transition game and pressure the Yale defense. But the UMass offense relies on a number of players. Liz Schuler had three goals against BU, with Ginny Armstrong adding two and Becky Beckampis scoring one. Bunny Forbes had three assists in the BU game.

The two teams met only once last year, in the first round of the NCAA Tournament. UMass won that contest 6-5 in overtime.

"It's like any other game; we have to take it as it comes, play intelligently, take the smart risks and create the opportunities to score," Hixon said.

Women's soccer gets revenge: UNC falls in indoor tourney

Down Tarheels on penalty kicks at UConn

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team never had its chance to meet the eventual champion University of North Carolina in the NCAA Final Four during the fall.

So it was a sweet victory for the Minutewomen in the University of Connecticut indoor tournament this past weekend when they beat the rival Tarheels 2-1 in double overtime on penalty kicks.

The Minutewomen came out on top of a 12-team field by beating Boston College, New Hampshire, Keene State, UConn, Nassau Community College of New York, Soccer Plus (a club team from Hartford) and UNC.

"It was an emotionally good win for us," UMass coach Kalekeni Banda said. "I played all freshmen except for senior Lori Stukes and they played well. The nucleus for the fall are these girls and for the first time I saw the look in their eyes that they wanted to show everyone who they were dealing with".

In the championship game, the Minutewomen went ahead on a Debbie Belkin goal before UNC tied the game at one.

The teams played two sudden-death overtime periods of five minutes each before going to penalty kicks. Kristen Bowsher, Stukes, Jolie DePauw and Caroline Micheel all connected to give UMass the win.

"It was good to serve some notice," Banda said. "I have a good feeling about the girls that played in the tournament. They have shown me a lot of dedication to the sport and to the team. I don't want any players not willing to give me that type of commitment."

SOCCER NOTES: Goalies Jeanne Paul and Lisa Ellis, who split time on the varsity last season, have left school and Banda, who had indicated he would he would replace them beforehand, is looking at several high school players to step in and play for UMass.

Banda has committments from high schoolers Michelle Powers of Massachusetts and Virginia's Cathy Cassady. Both are halfback/forwards with a lot of skill and figure, according to the coach, to contribute right away.

Whitmore sit-in persists despite Duffey meeting

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

After meeting with Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey for more than half an hour, student leaders decided to continue their sit-in through last night at Vice-chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson's office at Whitmore Administration building.

Both Duffey and student leaders agreed at the meeting that no further negotiations of the students' demands would take place until the protest ends. "Of course both sides might still be disappointed," Duffey said.

At the meeting Duffey and the student leaders agreed to arrange a meeting between Assistant Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Welch and former student senate Speaker Chris Sullivan to discuss the status of the Campus Center Board of Governors.

Duffey also said he would join with Dan Burgess, the student representative to the UMass Board of Trustees, in asking the trustees to hear student arguments for further divestment from companies doing business in South Africa.

According to Student Government Association co-President Stacy Roth, "Duffey agreed to start negotiations about a student governance board to oversee the Student Activities Office, "which handles the accounts of registered student organizations.

"The meeting was very positive. I felt that they really listened," Roth said.

Roth said the students were continuing the protest because "obviously, there are several issues left to be resolved. We couldn't address the Universal Resource Fee proposal."

The Universal Resource Fee proposed by the administration would be a yearly charge of $261 to each student. Students would help pay for loans used to build and renovate dormitories and dining halls, whether they live on campus or not.

She added that the students wanted to continue the protest to send their message to the trustees, who are meeting today at the UMass/Boston campus.

About 80 students agreed to stay in Whitmore again last night.

Director of Public Safety Gerald T. O'Neil said students would be allowed to stay because, "The basic thing is, what's to be achieved by removing the students? Nothing is obstructing the operation of the building." It will be up to the administration to decide how long the students will be allowed to remain, he added.

The sit-in is an attempt to force the administration to act on a series of demands submitted by student leaders. The demands include the selling of UMass' remaining investments in businesses involved in South Africa, the retention of student control over the Campus Center, modifications to the Universal Resource Fee, a board to oversee the Student Activities Office and judicial amnesty for students involved in the protest.

BOG recommends ban on Coors beer

Brewery family under fire for labor stance, right-wing ties

By VICKI A. SPAGNOLI

A vote by the Campus Center Board of Governors last week recommended that the CC administration halt the sale of Coors beer in the Blue Wall because of reported union-breaking and employee discrimination by the Coors company and because of the political viewpoints of the company owners.

When you buy a glass of Coors beer, you're "supporting a company which infringes upon the rights of workers," said BOG member Jim Shaw, who is also an official member of the Massachusetts AFL/CIO.

"You're supporting a company which supports a family that supports right-wing organizations. We don't want to subsidize their views by buying their product on campus," Shaw said.

The Adolph Coors Co. has recently expanded its distribution into New England. Coors beer can now be purchased in most New England states as draft beer, and has been sold in the Blue Wall since the first week of March.

Assistant Director of CC Administration Bernard Wilkes, Jr. said the CC will not purchase any more Coors beer until the information presented on the company by the BOG is reviewed at tomorrow's meeting.

"It's just a precaution at this time," Wilkes said. "All of the charges levied probably could be levied against any company, including this university."

Shaw said the Coors company is discriminatory against workers' rights and is considered anti-union by the AFL/CIO. He said that the brewery union was "forced out" of the company following a worker's strike there in 1977.

Arthur R. Osborne, Mass. AFL/CIO president, who supports the BOG recommendation, said the AFL/CIO initiated a national boycott against Coors beer last year because the Coors family has "taken the lead in anti-worker, anti-union issues in the U.S. Their hands are up to raise money and distribute it for the sole purpose of breaking unions," Osborn said.

Eric Riggle, a Coors spokesman, said the employees at the brewery "voted out the union," in 1977. "There have been no attempts by unions to reorganize here. All they want to do is keep spreading this issue by spreading misinformation," Riggle said.

Shaw said UMass should not support Coors because of unfair work policies within the company. He said the employees are subjected to polygraph tests and to periodic searches and seizures.

Riggle said the polygraph test is used as a pre-employment screening device to "evaluate what people are saying on their applications," adding that searches and seizures occurred "only four or five times" in the past ye ars when there was "reason to believe that the brewery was in danger." Riggle said suspicion of firearms and drugs in workers' lockers were two such occasions when a search did occur.

Shaw said the Coors family publicly and financially supports right-wing political organizations like the John Birch Society and discriminates against blacks and the Third World community. The John Birch Society based in African diplomat stands by activism

"We did not start the violence, but the only language the white man understands is the language of violence," declared Organization of African Unity ambassador Oumaru Youssofou in a panel discussion last night assessing progress made toward making the dream of Martin Luther King a reality.

Youssofou explained that the current U.S. policy of constructive engagement toward South Africa, which stresses dialogue and interaction, is not working.

"We are told to be patient, we are told that we are too emotional and violent. We've lived with the white minority for over 300 years, and we have come to know them better than you," he said.

Youssofou reminded the Campus Center audience that African leaders were told independence for Namibia was right around the corner. Now "we are wondering how big the

Gorbachev is called willing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev has "agreed in principle" to a summit meeting with President Reagan, but the time and place still must be worked out, a senior U.S. official said yesterday.

Two possible sites and times are Helsinki, Finland, in August, and the United Nations in New York in September, said the official, who insisted on anonmyity.

It would be the first U.S. - Soviet summit since 1979, which former President Jimmy Carter and the late Leonid I. Brezhnev signed the second Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT II) to reduce some types of nuclear weapons.

The two sides are stockpiling other missiles, however, and have been unable to agree on ways to stop their arms race. In declaring it was "high time" for a summit, Reagan said at his last news conference two weeks ago that he would try to quicken the pace of negotiations now being held in Geneva, Switzerland, if he met with Gorbachev.

But Reagan and the U.S. official said the agenda would range beyond weapons to include other issues, as well. Among them, presumably, are human rights, which the Soviets pledged to improve when they and 34 other countries, including the United States, signed the Helsinki agreement in the Finnish capital in 1975.

Reagan has frequently criticized the Soviets' record. The Helsinki agreement will be marked by a 10-year anniversary observance on Aug. 1. It is an important accord for the Soviets since it climaxed more than a decade of effort to confirm their influence in Eastern Europe.

Finland, as the host, has been considering invitations to the foreign ministers of the 35 governments that signed the agreement.

The opening of the annual session of the U.N. General assembly, meanwhile, draws foreign ministers and other senior officials to New York. Last September, Reagan chose the session as a forum for a major speech urging a new dialogue with Moscow.

The president's spokesman, Larry Speakes, told reporters that "there have been no discussions about arrangements for a summit, no meeting set, no time set, nothing along those lines."

Speakes added, "Nothing has taken place now and I don't know of any specific plans for any meetings or arrangements."

More violence strains Pretoria

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Violence flared in at least seven townships in the eastern Cape Province before dawn yesterday. A year-old baby was burned to death in one black enclave after rioters with a gasoline bomb set the house afire, police said.

In Johannesburg, about 40 demonstrators crowded into the headquarters of Citibank, protesting what they called the "indifference" of the American bank and foreign firms to the killings of blacks by police.

Police said black townships in the Eastern Cape had calmed later yesterday after 10 days of bloodshed that have left at least 39 blacks dead. Nineteen of the dead were marchers shot by police outside the industrial center of Uitenhage on March 21.

A spokesman at Pretoria police headquarters said the baby died during the night when rioters threw a bomb into a house in the Veeplaas black township outside Port Elizabeth on the Indian Ocean.

The explosion set fire to the house and nine nearby shacks, including one in which the child was sleeping, said the spokesman, who spoke on condition he not be identified.

Police used shotguns, rubber bullets and tear gas several times during the night to break up crowds that stoned police patrols and piled up burning roadblocks, the spokesman said. Two policemen and two soldiers were slightly injured in townships near Port Elizabeth, he said.

Israelis closing prison camp

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Israeli army began closing the Ansar prison camp in southern Lebanon yesterday and the military command said more than 600 of the prisoners would be released.

Israeli radio reported that 1,200 of the Shiite Moslem and Palestinian prisoners at Ansar were being transferred to Israel and the camp dismantled as part of the second phase of the Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon.

The military command in Tel Aviv said the prisoners being moved were "being temporarily transferred to a detention facility in Israel."

Lt. Gen. Moshe Levy, the Israeli chief of staff, told Israel radio that more than 600 prisoners will be released starting today.

An army announcement suggested other prisoners might be released if Shiite Moslem attacks on Israeli soldiers diminished. The army "will release the detainees in accordance with developments in south Lebanon" as the army withdraws, the announcement said.

Victim's family faults BU cop

BOSTON (AP) — An attorney for the family of a 19-year-old janitor who was fatally shot by a Boston University police officer asked the state Supreme Court Tuesday to set aside an inquest report that said the officer's actions were justified.

Daniel G. Harrington, who represents the mother and brother of Christopher Dignan, said in a petition to the court that the report by Brighton District Court justice Albert H. Burns was one-sided and did not accurately reflect the testimony at a four-day inquest.

Higher education ignored as boost for welfare recipients

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

Welfare agencies place too much emphasis on "getting people off the welfare rolls," which causes an ignorance toward higher education according to welfare administrators speaking yesterday at Smith College.

Sandra Rice Murray, Director of the Office of Field Service of the United Planning Organization, said states continue to encourage welfare recipients toward temporary or low-paying jobs without "saying a word about higher education."

Murray said, "We must first ask, how do you get people to want to do these things for themselves?" adding that in order to address sociological, psychological political and ethical issues," "motivation must start where one lives."

Murray pointed to Kemmi Gray, who organized and encouraged women in a Washington D.C. housing project to send their children to college. Gray's movement also allowed these women to manage the entire housing complex; providing day-care, legal assistance, and family counseling, for its residents.

Margaret C. Dunkle, co-director of the Equality Center in Washington, D.C., said there is a need to change current welfare and educational aid policy, which by allowing the receipt of one type of aid reduces the chance of receiving assistance from another agency.

Dunkle said in order to increase motivation toward higher education and prevent the "feminization of poverty," the focus must be stopping teen-age pregnancies which accounts for 41 percent of female high school drop-outs.

Policy makers must also work to increase the availability of child day-care which can be the "make or break issue" for mothers seeking an education, she said.

Brenda Algar, a Smith graduate and case worker for the Department of Youth Services in Springfield, said she was filled with feelings of "inferiority" when she began receiving Aid To Families With Dependent Children (AFDC) in order to support herself and her daughter.

"I spent a seven year journey through periods of self-analysis and self-reproach and finally to self-realization and activism," she said.

Algar called herself a victim of welfare "stereotyping" saying her idea of attending a community college was met by her caseworker with the reply, "You would be better off finding a nice man to take care of you and your daughter."

"In much the same way that people come to believe a blind person can't hear, the 'defect' of welfare is infused to encompass one's entire identity," Algar said.

Historically rich holidays commence over the weekend

Easter Sunday cause for Mass, bunnies

By KATHLEEN HART
Collegian Staff

Catholics and Protestants around the world are preparing this week to commemorate the resurrection of Christ on Easter Sunday, a day to celebrate life and, for many a day to get goodies from the Easter Bunny.

The end of Holy Week marks the Tridium, a latin name for the last three days of the week. Catholics celebrate Holy Saturday in preparation for Easter Sunday.

"Easter Sunday is a wonderful, joyous day," said the Rev. Joseph Quigley, Director of the Newman Center. "It is the greatest feast in the Catholic calendar. It is a day of victory. It verifies everything that Christ represented."

Holy Thursday represents the day of the Last Supper, and according to Quigley, at this meal Jesus instituted the Eucharist, Priesthood and Mass. This is a day of festivity, of trying to get away from the somberness of lent.

The Holy Thursday celebration will include a procession around the Church in honor of the Eucharist. "The procession is a sort of 21-gun salute to the Lord", Quigley said.

Good Friday marks the day Christ died on the cross, and is the only day of the year a Catholic Mass is not celebrated, "because Christ is symbolically dead," Quigley said, adding that a special service will be held.

On Holy Saturday, the church prepares for the Easter Vigil, when flowers are brought into the church and the alter is decorated for the coming of Christ. The Newman Center will have an Easter Vigil with a service of light, which will be held outside the front entrance of the Newman Center.

Easter Sunday marks the "Resurrection day — the day Christ triumphs over death," Quigley said. "He was the first of many brothers and sisters to rise from the dead."

To many, April 7 will be the day the Easter Bunny comes. The Easter Bunny is a "European pagan symbol of fertility," according to Ed Phinney, Chairman of the Classics Department.

Phinney said Easter is in the spring, and the bunnies are viewed as a symbol of new life. He said chicken eggs are also a symbol of new life. "However," said Phinney, "I don't know how those chicken eggs ended up in the bunny's basket; I guess two symbols are better than one."

Leslie MacIver, a junior communications major, said "My family gets together and we have a big dinner on Easter. We used to get Easter baskets, but we're too old for that now."

Passover festivities recall Jews' exodus

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Between 1200 and 1400 B.C. Jews in Egypt were slaves, denied freedom by the Pharoah Ramses. The Old Testament says Moses went to Ramses and begged him to "let my people go." Despite assurances from Ramses that they would be freed, it was not until Jews began a forty-year journey to Israel that freedom was achieved.

This weekend Jews around the world join in celebration of the exodus from Egypt. At the University of Massachusetts, the celebration of Passover begins at sundown Friday.

This year, as in past years, the emphasis will be not only on celebrating freedom won centuries ago, but on examining Jews around the world today and on calling for the freeing of those still persecuted particularly in Ethiopia and the Soviet Union, according to Rabbi Saul Perlmutter of the University of Massachusetts Hillel.

"The struggle for freedom continues. For me on Passover, I think of Moses saying to Pharoah, 'let my people go.' I also think of Jews saying to Russia, 'let my people go.' During Passover I strengthen my resolve to get Jews out of Russia," Perlmutter said.

In Russia today, Soviet Jews are denied visas out of the country and those that apply for them sometimes have to wait years before having them approved. The Soviet Jews face public indignation, loss of jobs and homes merely because they applied for visas, he said.

Statistics show that in 1979, 50,000 Jews were allowed to leave Russia, while just last year less than 1,000 Jews were granted permission. Jews in Russian also face religious persecution, he said.

In Ethiopia just recently, black Jews were allowed to leave that drought-plagued region, and for a long time the passage had to be kept secret for fear of government intervention.

"Their struggle for freedom continued daily," Perlmutter said.

One of the main themes of Passover is to "share our bread with others," which means that Jews are supposed to removed all leavened (yeast) products from their homes. Perlmutter said that traditionally, Jews at UMass have been asked to donate those items to area survival centers. This year he urges Jews to send donations to Africa to help the Ethiopian Jews.

UMass students who won't be able to spend Passover with their families can spend it with the larger "family" unit here, beginning with a seder dinner Friday evening at the Kosher Dining Commons in the Hampden Dining Commons. That dinner will begin a night of celebration including singing and reading from the Haggadah, a Jewish prayer book.

Another seder dinner will take place Saturday night. Students must preregister by today for both dinners at Franklin dining commons. Students on the Kosher plan must still sign up but do not have to pay the additional $1.00 for those on the regular meal plan and $5.50 for those not on any meal plan.

corner is. We've already been looking around it for four years," he said.

He cited the recent killing of 19 black demonstrators as evidence that the violence on the part of South African black is in self-defense, adding, "why should it not be justified when we are being killed like rats?"

He drew an analogy to the American struggle for independence from the British. "Your ancestors lost their lives and shed their blood to achieve independence."

Youssofou is the ambassador to the United Nations representing the entire continent of Africa. In addition to Youssofou, each African country has one representative.

Reverend Charles Stith of the Union Church of Boston, a prominent civil rights activist, outlined a national perspective and strategy to achieve King's dream.

"In America today we have a leadership vacuum at best, and at worst a leadership crisis," he said.

Stith said the Democratic Party should work to build a new consensus for the 1988 presidential election based on "hope, harmony, justice and opportunity."

He said this new consensus should be modeled on the "rainbow coalition" promoted by the Rev. Jesse Jackson which would "cut across color, class, custom, creed and culture" and "bring people together to re direct this nation from insanity to salvation."

Belmont, is a private anti-communist group which promotes various ultra-conservative causes.

William Coors is currently involved in a lawsuit in Denver, Colorado following a statement he made in 1984 at a convention of black and minority businessmen in that city. Coors attributed the economic problems in black-governed Africa to a "lack of intellectual capacity," according to a Denver newspaper.

Joseph Coors, vice-chairman, president and chief operations officer at the company has said, "I personally have supplied funds to both of these organizations, (the Birch Society and the Heritage Foundation) and I am proud to be able to do so because they are promoting many fine solid principles which I heartily support. One of these is opposition to ERA (the Equal Rights Amendment)."

Any Coors employee "has the right to free speech and political beliefs," Riggle said, and "if the Coors family individuals feel they want to further their own political positions, that's their right."

Shaw said he and other BOG members are organizing a coalition against Coors beer in Massachusetts, which would be the first boycott against Coors in the state.

Riggle said boycotting Coors beer on campus would have no effect on the Coors company or the Coors family. He said a boycott would affect the distributors in N.E., some of whom belong to unions.

"People need to quit listening to union propaganda," Riggle said, "It's the consumers who should make their own decision about drinking Coors beer."

Attempted murder charges dropped

A 20 -year-old University of Massachusetts student was cleared of attempted murder charges but still faces two counts of assault, a Hampshire County District Court judge ruled yesterday.

In a pre-trial hearing, Judge Philip Contant extended the case of Arthur J. Papandrea, arrested Feb 10 after his alleged involvement in a fight at a party. The trial will be held June 3.

Papandrea, free on $1000 cash bail, had pleaded innocent to charges of assault with intent to commit murder, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and assault with a dangerous weapon.

According to Amherst police, Papandrea reportedly struck the victim, Michael Hennessy on the head with a beer bottle during a fight that began after Papandrea threatened to stab him with a kitchen knife. Hennessy, a 19-year-old UMass student, received 130 stitches to his neck and face.

Hennessy would not respond to questions about the case or about yesterday's proceedings.

Neither Papandrea nor his attorney, Charles S. Christy, was available for comment.

A stand for student rights

Very few institutions of higher education allow for as much student participation in the decision-making process as the University of Massachusetts. Here, we sit on governing boards for campus buildings and on residential area judicial committees. Our student senate has the power to allocate hundreds of thousands of dollars garnered from student fees in any way they see fit, free from administrative interference. These factors have helped make this into one of the most progressive and highly regarded universities in the United States.

All this is rapidly changing.

The 1980s are becoming the decade of the cost-cutter, the manager, the "fiscally responsible" administrator. Running things in the black, "efficiently" if you will, has pushed all other considerations aside. While a private industry, whose primary concern is to make a profit, must adhere to such policies in order to survive, we believe that an educational institution needs to have other considerations.

The UMass administration appears to disagree. Recent attempts on its part to eliminate student involvement in the Campus Center and to subordinate student needs for space to merchandising concerns illustrate this all too well. It has become caught up in the business-oriented spirit of these times and is adopting financial policies better suited to a shopping mall than a public facility dedicated to the advancement of knowledge.

To fight it, members of the SGA, the BOG, the Graduate Student Senate, and other campus groups have organized rallies and sit-ins in an attempt to influence the board of trustees. Some 27 of these individuals have proved dedicated enough to camp out in Vice Chancellor Dennis Madson's office since noon Monday.

We applaud their motives and join them in deploring the frequently under-handed actions of certain Whitmore bureaucrats. However, we cannot condone flippant insults that divide students along political lines—"What are you all, conservatives?" shouted a student trying to recruit others for the sit-in yesterday—or the lack of respect accorded Dean of Students William Field by people who bounce balls up and down when he tries to open a dialogue. Such silly and self-serving theatrics do little to win friends and only alienate those whose support is most needed. Being radical simply for its own sake is pointless and counter-productive. A unified front is necessary if we are to make any headway against an administration that has lost sight of what student input means.

A dark eerie night at Baybanks Express-24

I knew things were starting to get our of hand when I began waking up with palpitations seconds before my alarm clock went off. Now when it finally screams, I jump a foot into the atmosphere as if its noise is some great surprise to me. I slam my snooze button and drift back into five more frightful minutes of sleep before the whole process repeats itself. It takes two or three encores until I usually feel safe enough to drag myself out of bed and into reality. It's a scary world we live in. Even on a local level

The other night I was at Baybanks Express-24 trying to cash my $10 paycheck (fame doesn't pay very well). It was about 10:45, just the time that I usually run to Barts to eat $10 worth of ice cream.

It was dark with the exception of the dim lights above the five vacant cash machines. The place was eerie and I was all alone. As I began filling out the envelope into which I was about to place my check, a man slipped his cash card into the slot by the locked door, the door buzzed, and he entered. I was feeling a little nervous. Should I smile at him? Should I ignore him? What if he were armed? Maybe he would try to steal my $10 and run to Barts with it. Now I was getting really nervous. I began filling out my envelope at a faster tempo. Name, address, account number, phone number...

I stole a glance at him out of the corner of my eye. He was watching me. He smiled. Oh no, I thought, maybe he's going to do something deranged. Suddenly his voice broke the silence. "Bet I get to the machine before you do," he said.

Obscuring the real issue

Loren Spivack

Have you ever noticed, painted on sidewalks and walls around UMass, a picture of a mushroom cloud from a nuclear expolosion with the ominous question "Today?" printed next to it? Sure, this accounts for only a small percentage of the left-wing graffiti that one is likely to see around campus (it would seem that leftists have a great deal of trouble expressing themselves without a can of spray paint), but it is a perfect example of a tactic commonly employed by various elements on the left of the American political spectrum, especially the nuclear freeze forces. The tactic I refer to is the inducement of fear. What President Roosevelt called "Nameless, unreasoning, unjustified terror which paralyzes needed efforts to convert retreat into advance."

The goal of the American left is to discontinue the revitalization of America's armed forces and to weaken our military position. They claim that they spread their ideology by teaching people about the dangers of nuclear war. In fact, the leftists attempt to terrorize the American populace by vividly describing the effects of nuclear explosions and by encouraging the notion that such an occurrence in inevitable, even imminent. The effect they desire is that Americans should become convulsed with fear and, without considering the implications, aid the left in its political battle to disarm America which, according to the leftists, is the only way to avoid the imminent catastrophe.

A fundamental part of the leftist position is the arrogance that they are the only one interested in preventing nuclear war. Instead of acknowledging that there is a good-faith disagreement on the best way to prevent World War III, they imply, in effect, that those who oppose their political goals are somehow in favor of a nuclear holocaust. As absurd as this notion is, it is surprisingly wide-spread. Prominent main stream liberal democrats such as Jerry Brown of California and President Lyndon Johnson ran for office with television commercials depicting nuclear mushroom clouds and implying that if their Republican opposition won the election, the world would end in a nuclear inferno. This tactic does the public a disservice, for instead of disputing the other side of this controversial issue, it attempts to obscure the fact that an alternative opinion exists at all.

The fact is that we conservative Republicans are also quite fond of the world and have no desire to see it destroyed. We feel, however, that the primary threat to world peace—and hense to the world—comes from the Soviet Union and that American deterrence is serving to keep the peace. The leftists offer no plan to save the world from Soviet nuclear weapons (they don't allow peace-movements in Russia), except to trust in the Kremlin's "good will." We Republicans care too much about our world and our country to leave the preservation of world peace up to the "good will" of a Soviet Union with a nuclear monopoly.

While misrepresenting the true nature of the controversy, the leftists do go to great lengths to educate the public about one particular aspect of the nuclear arms issue. They love to describe in great detail, the destruction that would be caused by a nuclear war. Leftist literature is replete with statistics such as estimated death tolls and scientific theories regarding potential effects on the environment of a nuclear exchange. While the facts may very well be accurate, the point is moot. Every sane, thinking person left or right understand that nuclear war would be unwinnable and unsurvivable and must never be fought. And no one at all is advocating such insanity. Emphasizing images of mushroom clouds and statistics of death serve only to obscure the real issue (i.e. what is the best way to prevent nuclear war) and to promote an atmosphere of panic which discourages clear thinking and furthers the ill-advised and, in some cases, the highly dangerous goals of America's left wing.

Not 'sparring' or 'debating'

The Collegian ran on March 22 a front page story reporting on a dialogue between Bishop Peter Rosazza, a co-author of the Catholic Bishops' Pastoral Letter on the U.S. Economy and myself. The story pictured the Bishop and I as "sparring" and "debating" when in fact we are in general agreement on most of the questions at issue. I wish to set the record straight.

As stated in your article, I did indeed argue that "the letter is in tremendous conflict with standard economics" on several basic issues. However, I did not argue, as the reporter implied, that standard economics is always right. In fact, I am far more supportive of the bishops' position on the issues than I am of standard economic doctrine.

Let me explain the main lines of conflict. First, the bishops develop basic ethical principles to evaluate our economic system. They stress the central importance of community, the mutual responsibility of people for one another, the virtue of cooperation, and the basic economic rights that each individual possesses simply because he or she is a human being and a member of the community. Standard economic theory sees only isolated self-aggrandizing individuals, recognizes only those economic rights associated with private property, and preaches the virtue of competitive struggle among individuals. Second, the bishops find the institutions, processes and outcomes of the American economic system to be seriously flawed from a moral perspective. They strongly condemn the poverty, high unemployment, gross inequality, and hierarchical work relations that characterize our economy.

Finally, the bishops offer progressive policy proposals and suggestions for institutional reform which conflict with currently fashionable tricle-down, supply-side economics. Their proposals for institutional change include substantial worker-participation in all important business decisions and increased reliance on economic planning; they call these institutional reforms a "new American experiment in economic democracy."

Thus, the bishops do present a major challenge to both standard economic theory and the American economic system. They propose an alternative, and in many ways more attractive, vision of society and a different set of criteria for evaluating economic performance. They support institutional reforms that swim against the main current of standard economic thought. As I see it, there is nothing inherently unsound or economically illogical in the general thrust of their ideas for public discussion and debate. My only criticism of their Pastoral Letter is that it is not as theoretically coherent and careful as it could have been, and thus it appears to be more vulnerable to attack from defenders of the economic status-quo than it really is. I agree with Bishop Rosazza that it is the responsibility of those economists who share their social and ethical concerns to provide the expertise required to help the bishops convert their ideas into more concrete and pragmatic proposals for economic and political change.

Shooting just a part

In your letter of April 2, Matthew Levin, you cite a tendency to richness and fatness as the inevitable downfall of "advanced civilizations" and implicitly use this premise as evidence that we need to be less tolerant of opposing political systems. I wholeheartedly agree with your premise and would like to add that fatness and richness inevitably lead to another dangerous condition, namely that of conservatism and intolerance.

Well, Levin, I don't know how fat or rich you are, but your conservative intolerance indicates an advanced stage of these conditions. May I suggest you remove your nationalistic blinders and recognize that the shooting of the American officer you refer to is not the whole problem, but a single move in the idiotic political games played daily with our lives and with equal cunning by every major power in the world.

RSOs are 'lifeblood'

The UMass Republican Club is unimpressed with the inflamatory theatrics of Kevin Sweeney during last week's Student Senate meeting. At the risk of dousing Sweeney's proposal with cold water, we will not follow suit in setting fire to our budget.

If, as Sweeney claims, his University Democrats can find sufficient alternative sources of funding (which shouldn't be too difficult as they are relatively inactive and therefore require little money) then more power to them.

The UMass Republican Club, however, is the third largest RSO on campus, as well as one of the most active. We are certain that we cannot maintain our present program through outside sources. It should be remembered that in Massachusetts, ours is the less moneyed party.

More to the point, however, we believe that the fair allocation of student funds ought to be determined by a group s accomplishments, activities, the size of its membership, and its record of service to students. Our budget for the past fiscal year was $1,200. This is a pittance in comparison to semi-student groups such as SCERA ($88,248) and Senate Operations ($65,484) to name just a couple.

Student groups are, in large part, the lifeblood of this campus. Budgetary constraints will make it difficult enough for such active and successful groups as Students Advocating Financial Aid (SAFA), the PGA and UMass Credit Union, with proven track records. The UMass Republican Club is one such group. Without meaning to be unkind, relatively speaking, Sweeney's groups is not. In burning his budget, he destroyed something of comparatively little value.

We ask that other RSOs join us in insuring that all student organizations receive the funding they deserve.

Rodman R. Snelling

Help needed for questionnaire

This letter is directed to members of the lesbian, gay, and bisexual community. I am writing to ask for your help. As a result of some of the heterosexist incidents that took place at the end of last semester a position of Human Relations Planner and Advocate was temporarily created by the vice chancellor for student affairs. I was selected for this position and one of my primary responsibilities is to prepare a report for Vice Chancellor Madson.

This report will include: information about the needs, concerns, and experiences of lesbian, gay, and bisexual students at UMass, the services and programs currently provided by existing campus offices and agencies for them, the attitude of students in general toward heterosexism on campus, and recommendations to the vice chancellor for what needs to change here at the University to more adequately meet the needs of lesbian, gay, and bisexual students.

However, in order to accurately reflect what life at UMass is like for you, I need help. I have developed a questionnaire that assesses the needs and experiences of lesbians, gays, and bisexuals on campus. The more of you who fill this out, the more complete the information and the report will be. If you are dissatisfied and want to see things change, thake 15 minutes to fill out the questionnaire. Here is an opportunity for you to have your opinion count.

The surveys will be available this week and must be filled out and returned by Friday. They will be available at the following locations: LBGA Office in the SUB, Everywoman's Center in Wilder Hall, the Women's Studies Office, 208 Bartlett Hall, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Office in Whitmore, and from my office 99 Berkshire House. The surveys can be returned to any of these locations by Friday.

Fighting the current trend

The current trend in American politics does more than just ignore education. If the Reagan administration is reducing funds for raw education and financial aid, it is because it knows that the supply side cannot absorb an educated populace. I think, while rejoining in the value of every sort of education, that there is more to our society than a supply side or private sector. There is a public sector which needs at all costs to maintain an access to inexpensive and quality education.

I was willing to risk arrest last night at Whitmore to voice my opposition against the URF and for the BOG. UMass is still a relatively inexpensive institution, due largely to the current power of students. If the URF passes, the trend will be to raise the cost of all students, grad, undergrad, on and off campus. An institution which gives people a chance to educate themselves is absolutely necessary to maintain an equal and fair society. The question of the BOG and the URF are very relevant threats to such an institution. If the URF passes this Wednesday, the trend will need to stop there.

'Far from tasteful'

I am writing in response to the April Fool's section of the Collegian. I commend your staff for joining in on this tradition and trying to make the front section humorous; your effort is definitely appreciated.

What concerns me, however, is the content of what you published. I question your wisdom of publishing the picture of the rhinos, more so, I was offended by its caption: "These rhinos were viewed fornicating along I-91 over the weekend. No one knows where they came from, but boy, were they fun to watch!" Tasteless. The advertisement for drugs and arms is questionable because of the seemingly-condoning values it communicates. Also, the article on the many uses of the word "fuck" is not funny to me and appears inappropriate for our college paper. This work is far from the tasteful humor and good judgment I'm sure your staff is capable of.

Where were you yesterday?

Last night at 2:30, as I once again attempted to fall asleep, I contemplated why I was participating in this "Student Rights-Civil Disobedience Rally." With a high top sneaker for a pillow and a borrowed coat for a blanket, I began to question why I was sleeping on a cold floor in the Whitmore Administration Building and what my response would be when my actions were questioned in the morning.

Would I explain that it was proposed the Board of Governors be eliminated at the whim of the administration? Would I state the students should program what students want in their concerts, not administration's idea of "entertainment?" Would I tell them that the Coffee Shop is a facility for students, not a "designer" sweatshirt outlet for the University Store? Would I tell of the devastating financial aid cuts while disclosing the administration's plan to raise our tuition?

Would I respond that we as students, generate 95 percent of the revenue the Campus Center/Student Union Building and believe that we have unalienable rights in the management of our money? Would I say that I participated to protest the violation of basic student rights?

How would I respond to the question, "Why did you spend the night at Whitmore?" Maybe the question should be, "Why didn't you?"

Karen-Karina Gray
Vice-Chairperson of the Board of Governors

Others excluded

Thank you for your excellent coverage on March 29th of the upcoming campus celebration of Martin Luther King Week. However, when one reads the article one is left with the impression that SCERA alone is facilitating Martin Luther King Week. In actuality, SCERA is one of many groups and individuals who have worked to make this celebration a reality. Some of these groups include Afrik-Am, BMCP, CCEBMS, DEC/UPC, DVP, Hampden Program, Iota Phi Theta, MLK Planning Committee, SGA, 5-College black studies department, UMass Arts Council, and the Commuter Area Government. Each and everyone of these organizations, including SCERA, deserve credit for further actualizing King's dream.

Letter Policy

All letters must be signed and include the writer's address and telephone number, which will not be published. Please type double spaced at 67 characters per line. Due to space limitations and the volume of mail, we regret we are unable to acknowledge unpublished letters. All letters are subject to editing for clarity and length.

Last week, you published an article reporting that UMass ranks as one of the top schools in the country. This is bound to help our school's reputation. I, for one, would like to see an end to the disrespect UMass receives in-state, and its characteristic "Zoo-Mass" reputation. We, as students, need to be aware of how we portray our school, and I can only speculate as to what kind of impression the April Fool's section makes on potential employers (Are you listening, seniors?), potential students and their parents, and the community, in general. Let's not fool ourselves.

Inside funny business

The Lotus Crew
By Stewart Meyer
Grove Press

By JON STRYMISH
Collegian Staff

Stewart Meyer's The Lotus Crew is a portrait of the lifestyle and lifecycle of a heroin dealership. Running junk is a tough business which hardens men: "Rafael was not born the mean son of a bitch he was. It was something he learned." Drug running may be too tough to get involved in, but Meyer makes it fun enough to read about.

As he points out in a quote from Milton, "The mind is its own place, and in itself/ Can make a Heav'n of Hell, a Hell of Heav'n..." Thus Meyer's imagination makes his hellish world entertaining.

Mostly what The Lotus Crew does is make Hell into a movie. The scenes are short, 2 to 5 pages a chapter. Each chapter shows a different aspect or stage of the business.

A heroin dealership runs on about the same premise as a car dealership. Exotic foreigners, through their brutal reputation, can give out franchises to bland young men who are competent to take care of the business. The market principle and business hierarchy affecting all companies apply also to drug running. The cubism involved in only giving us one scene at each stage of the group's structure would have made Gertrude Stein proud.

Meyer's prose is streetsmart. He welds the language of these men to a poetry that can be explosive and scary, but always exciting. Beat is coming back into fashion in New York intellectual circles, and this is the kind of language that is coming back with it. The vocabulary is in a glossary in the back of the book.

Like Ginsburg, Meyer tries to show as much as he can of the great culture that he is rebelling against. We see the characters from their early days as junkies, to their obvious destiny of brutality, violence, failure and death.

At one point a character notices "There was something impalpable about his hostess that conforted him." I was comforted by the impalpability of The Lotus Crew. The people and emotions depicted aren't possibly human, while at the same time not hard to understand: They are hybridized for survival in an ugly world.

American rock rolls again

Let It Be Replacements

By ADAM BRIGHTMAN
Collegian Staff

This is the great American rock and roll album of 1984 that Springsteen's Born in the U.S.A. could have been. Replacements lead singer and songwriter, Paul Westerberg, shows an incredible range of ideas, music, and emotion for one person. Westerberg and band are part of a new surge of American music of organic origin, interested in satisfying both the fury and wit of punk-rock and the quiet beauty and melodicism of folk-rock, and epitomized by bands like R.E.M. (whose guitarist, Peter Buck, guests on one track here.)

Westerberg has the markings of a major rock and roll voice. He sings with the raw urgency of a young Morrison (Van or Jim) or Springsteen. That does not mean that he can't get away with a sweet, heartfelt slow song called "Androgenous," in which love wins over external appearances.

The tone of the songs themselves run the full gamut; from a piano with a voice, to jangly folk-rock, to furious punk-rock rage. Westerberg and band can shake their asses just like the New York Dolls ("Gary's Got a Boner"), sing "rip, rip" while Tommy gets his tonsils out (a title), and pummel their way through Kiss' "Black Diamond" until it sounds like a real punk anthem.

Westerberg sings about being unsatisfied, though not like the Rolling Stones were. He woes saying goodnight to an answering machine, and he has seen your video (and he doesn't want to know). While these topics seem on the surface unrelated and too personal to gel, he manages to bring them to life and make the listener care about every one of them.

The ideas seem extremely well thought-out, with guitar solos, tempo changes--the works. The performances, on the other hand, remain just ragged enough to confirm the spontaneity and honesty of their origins. This is not the work of some smartass hipster, but that of a real human being.

Westerberg seems to me to be the most versatile singer/songwriter since Chrisay Hynde. Like Hynde, Westerberg can zing around from one emotion to another and still make a believer out of listeners. There is clear and unmistakable depth and intelligence here. Let It Be is no small treasure and deserves a place on your turntable.

Padraig O'Malley will be speaking at 8 p.m. tonight in 104 Thompson Hall. Mr. O'Malley's lecture is titled "The Irish Americans."

Trombonist David Sporny is featured artist in a faculty concert entitled "With A Little Help from My Friends" on Wednesday, April 3, 8:00 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall at the University of Massachusetts. The concert is free and open to the public.

Mod dinosaurs

BABY
Directed by B.W.L. Norton
Starring William Katt and Sean Young Mountain Farms Cinema

By THOMAS HARRINGTON
Collegian Correspondent

Whoever said that dinosaurs are extinct has never been to Hollywood. "Baby" is the latest addition to the age-old tradition of "lost world" movies, and it has absolutely nothing new to add.

Not that it doesn't try, mind you. Director B.W.L. Norton mixes equal parts of ET and The Beast From 20,000 Fathoms, with generous doses of Raiders and Bringing Up Baby in an attempt to make it a modern treatment of the subject.

William Katt is the sports writer husband of Sean Young, a budding archeologist in Africa. Will wants to go back to the states and raise a family, but Sean is obsessed with her pursuit of what she believes to be a living Brontosaurus. They find the brontos, of course, and spend the rest of the film trying to save a young hatchling from an evil scientist (Patrick McGhoohan) who has captured the Baby's mother.

Or something like that. Frankly, I never fully understood why the young couple feels obligated to follow McGoohan around when he has the safety of the mother utmost in his mind, and has ordered his thugs to kill the Katt and Young on sight: It's all typical adventure film stuff, with good guys and bad guys looking for any possible excuse to pit themselves against each other.

The baby dinosaur is created by the simple use of the old two-men-in-a-horse type costumes, while her parents seem to be some sort of puppets enlarged through trick photography. They're moderately convincing, but Baby's face is much too plastic for the numerous emotional close-ups it receives (did you know that dinosaurs could weep?) and the several-ton adults have a funny habit of floating on the ground like Macy's Thanksgiving Day balloons.

At least the dinos have an excuse for not seeming real. Katt and Young are actual humans, but you wouldn't know it from their performances, which are purely TV-level. McGoohan's is more credible, but he's so stuffy that he has to commit several gratuitous murders to remind us what a stinker he is. Julian Fellowes as McGoohan's gay sidekick varies between interesting and pathetic, and is usually the latter.

Homosexuals will certainly have something to say about some of Fellowes' silly antics in the film, but that's nothing compared to how the native Africans are portrayed. The blacks, including a group of obnoxious guerillas and an atypical lost tribe of primitives, are even more stereotyped than the whites, and that's saying a lot.

Overall, Baby is derivative, slow, and insulting. Unless you have a weak spot in your heart for cuddly brontosaures with plastic eyeballs, you'd best avoid it.

Mask features bold preformance

MASK
Directed by Peter Bogdanovich
Starring Cher and Eric Stolta
Mountain Farms Theater

BY HERB RAMY and MATT MACHERA
Collegian Staff

This year's latest entry into the tear jerker category is Peter Bogdanovich's Mask. This film focuses on the life of Rocky Dennis, a teenager born with a disease that caused his skull to grow to twice its normal size.

The plot here is very simple, and one that we've all seen before. The main character encounters many hardships because of his physical appearance, but in spite of it all he remains a loving and caring individual.

The fact that he displays so little malice towards others though, is one of the movies flaws. It's unrealistic to believe that an adolescent abused to the degree that Rocky was could continue to turn the other cheek for so long. The reason behind this flaw is that Bogdanovich has tried too hard to make us feel sorry for the main character. As a result some of the scenes seem to be too melodramatic.

On the positive side we have the acting. Eric Stolta gives a very commanding and powerful performance as the afflicted Rocky. Working under pounds of heavy makeup, he was still able to convey a wide range of emotions using only eye gestures and his voice.

In many ways Cher gives us an even better performance as Rocky's biker mother. Even with a weak screenplay, Cher comes through with an excellent performance.

It is because of these performances that we recommend Mask. It may not be the year's best movie, but not because of a lack of effort on Cher's or Eric Stoltz's part.

SAO requests budget hike

A budget increase request of more than $18,000 for the Student Activities Office will be raised tonight at the Undergraduate Student senate meeting.

In a year when the Student Government Association is facing a fiscal crisis, members of the senate will demand that the SAO cut its budget by 10 percent to share the burden of scarce money resources with other student organizations.

Although the SAO is one organization which does not have a budget controlled by the senate, if the issue is raised tonight there is hope to come to terms with the SAO, according to Dave Valade, a senate member. "We might be able to find a way to cut the SAO budget if they agree with the senate demands," Valade said.

According to the senate agenda for April 3, funding to Registered Student Organizations will be decreasing in total by $175,359 this year.

Author to raise Ireland issue

Author Paidraig O'Malley will lead a colloquium on Northern Ireland, The Uncivil Wars: Northern Ireland, tonight at 8 p.m. in Thompson Hall 104. O'Malley, a native of Dublin is the senior policy analyst at UMass Boston's John W. McCormack Institute of Public Affairs and is the winner of the 1985 Ewart-Biggs Award for the individual who has done the most to further Anglo-Irish understanding.

His book, entitled The Uncivil Wars: Ireland Today, examines the history of the Northern Ireland conflict without taking sides but instead being rough on people who do take sides. The Boston Globe called his book, "A remarkable, innovative work of contemporary history and keen journalism...A human as well as a literary achievement."

Luther Allen, the political science professor sponsoring the event, expects that O'Malley will bring the passions of the audience on both sides of the question "to a boil." Allen hopes to have "lots of supporters of Northern Ireland, with their questions and speeches, and supporters of England and the Ulster Protestants."

Softball sneaks by Providence in doubleheader

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE R.I. — The University of Massachusetts showed signs of breaking loose pounding out 12 hits in a 5-0, 2-1 sweep of Providence College Tuesday.

Atlantic 10 pitcher-of-the-week Lynn Stockley tossed a one-hitter while striking out three in raising her record to 3-4 in the opener.

Freshman Lisa Rever struck out seven in the 2-1 win, raising her record to 3-1-1. Rever, who gave up an unearned run, and Stockley both still have 0.00 ERA since coming back North from South Carolina. UMass is 5-1 since come back from the South.

The Minutewomen, now 8-9-1, broke open a scoreless opening game with a five run, five RBI explosion in the fifth inning.

Sophomore Emily Bietsch led off with a single followed by co-captain's Beth Talbott's RBI triple. Sally Maher (CF) followed with an RBI single for the 2-0 lead.

Stockley and freshman Martha Jamieson (1B) loaded the bases for Cathy Reed's (DH) three-RBI triple and the 5-0 UMass lead. And all this happened with none out.

Talbott went 2-for-4 with a triple, Carol Frattaroli went 2-for-2 and Reed went 1-for-2 with the double and 3 RBI.

The second game was closer and the Friars who were in their season opener, hung tough.

Maher got on base in the UMass fifth with a fielder's choice and promptly stole second. Frattaroli walked and after Debbie Cole popped out, Bietsch hit an RBI double for the 1-0 Minutewomen lead.

Providence tied it up in the bottom of the fifth but UMass pulled off its first successful comeback of the year.

Maher (2-for-3, 2-for-2 stolen bases) led off the top of the seventh with a single and Frattaroli's sacrifice bunt moved Maher to second.

A passed ball sent Maher to third and a Stockley sacrifice sent Maher home for the 2-1 win.

The win puts UMass one game away from .500 for the first time since the middle of the spring trip when Miami of Ohio tripped UMass to send them to 3-4.

The road trip continues for the Minutewomen when they travel to Piscataway, New Jersey for an Atlantic 10 doubleheader with Rutgers University on Friday at 2 p.m.

UMass, 1-0, in the Atlantic 10 must finish in the top four of the seven team league to make the A-10 tourney. Only the opening game of the URI doubleheader on Saturday (a 1-0 UMass win) counted in the A-10 standings. The second A-10 URI-UM game will be the opener of the April 30 doubleheader in Rhode Island.

★ Gorillas look for second win

All-American Kevin Cook.

Goalie Chris Modesti (.536 save percentage) has started all three games. The faceoffs are handled by either Jeff Doughtey (20-of-30) or Frank Kelly (23-of-37).

Moran, who worked his team on Boyden field yesterday afternoon, had nothing but praise for UMass.

"Dick (Garber) has the best team in New England and one of the best teams in the country," Moran gushed. "They (UMass) have some fine players, especially on attack. Their middies are excellent and the defense is solid. I expect them to play a great game against us."

UMass' run-and-gun offense scored three quick goals in the last quarter against Delaware, taking advantage of man-up situations following penalties. Garber doesn't expect the same good fortune against Cornell.

"I haven't seen them play, but from what I've heard they are a sound team in that they don't make many mistakes. We'll have to score off of our set offense to win."

The set offense will include attackmen Carmean (three goals, three assists), Fiorini (two goals) and Lukacovic (three goals). Garber started midfielders Karl Hatton (a goal and an assist), Greg Fisk (a goal and two assists) and faceoff artist Seamus McGovern.

Defensemen Tommy Aldrich, Gerry Bryne and Mark Stratton will start in front of goalie Gerry Moreau.

GORILLA GRUMBLINGS: USA Today made a few mistakes in their reporter of the Delaware game, crediting the game-winning goal to a "Lou Carmean" (It was Tom Lukacovic's from Tom Carmean) and giving UMass a 3-0 record (they are 1-0) and Delaware a 2-4 mark (they are 1-4).

The Gorillas are ranked first in New England. Of the top 15 teams in the nation, UMass will play five...Some enterprising Gorillas are marketing a shirt with the UMass logo on the front "Catch a Thrill on Boyden Hill" on the back. Get them at the game for six bucks...Rumor has the Tobin balcony crowd starting The Wave again today.

Gorillas' evolution

A common question among the masses of lacrosse fans here on campus is the origin of the nickname "Garber's Gorillas". It dates back to the late Sixties, a UMass lacrosse player, and his girlfriend.

All-American Kevin O'Conner's girlfriend, an avid lacrosse fan, with a lot of artistic talent, drew a picture of a gorilla in a UMass uniform. This playful ape donned O'Connor's number 20 and was later used to represent the team.

Head coach Dick Garber, conveniently, had a last name which fit in well with the name gorilla. Therefore, "Garber's Gorillas", a name pseudonym dripping with alliteration, was dubbed as the official nickname of the UMass men's lacrosse team.

WMass lax club victorious

The Western Massachusetts Lacrosse Club evened its early season record with a 7-6 win Sunday over the Boston Lacrosse Club at Newton South High School in Boston.

Western Mass. (1-1) earned its victory with tough defensive play, led by 1984 UMass All-American Barry (Sleepy) Cam and supported by Jim Scanlon, who played his high school lacrosse at Amherst and college lacrosse at UMass.

The defense was backed up with strong goaltending by Steve Zito, a 1984 UMass gorilla, and John Robbins from Southampton.

Western Mass.' next game is its home opener on Sunday, April 14 at 2 p.m. against the Skoal Lacrosse Club from Greenwich, Ct. The game will be at the lower Boyden athletic fields.

Lacrosse battles rival Cornell today

Gorillas face 15th ranked Big Red

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The 1985 University of Massachusetts lacrosse schedule takes a turn toward the difficult today as the Gorillas tangle with 15th ranked Cornell on Boyden Field.

UMass, ranked 13th in the nation, struggled with unranked Delaware on Saturday, winning 14-13 in overtime. The Big Red, one of UMass' traditional rivals, are 2-1 this season and will be looking for a big victory.

"I think it would be an important victory for both of us," UMass coach Dick Garber said. "We always play a good game with them and both of us seem fairly strong this season."

UMass beat Cornell in Ithaca last season, 10-9 after rebounding from an 8-6 deficit going into the final quarter. Cornell leads the season series with UMass 9-2.

Garber said that he expects to tighten up the Gorillas' defense for the game (3 p.m.), admitting he wasn't pleased with UMass allowing Delaware the scoring chances they had Saturday.

"It wasn't the close defense that was accountable for all the goals," Garber said. "The middies didn't spot the open man enough and slide over. We've been working on that in practice."

Offensively, however, Garber was enthusiastic about the output thus far.

"The attack and middies have really been doing the job. We scored pretty easily, but there were still some shots, especially by the white middie line (Rich Abbott, Stephen Moreland and Neal Cunningham) that I felt should've gone in. Those will come in time.

"But the attackmen, especially (Tom) Carmean, (Mike) Fiorini and (Tom) Lukacovic were pretty impressive and I'm looking for us to open up even more."

Cornell, led by coach Richie Moran for the last 17 years, went a disappointing 6-6 last season and is looking to regain the form that saw it make the NCAA tournament in 1982 and 1983.

The Big Red have balanced scoring led by junior Bill Hughes (four goals, five assists), Ken Entenmann (five goals, three assists), ad junior-college transfer Ed Cook (four goals, two assists), brother of graduated

Gazelles swamp pesky Yale, 7-3

By ANSEL ZINTER
Collegian Staff

Senior All-American Pam Moryl registered three goals to spark the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team to a 7-3 victory over Yale University yesterday at NOPE field.

All of Moryl's goals came in the first half as the Gazelles built up a 4-1 halftime lead and never looked back. Moryl's first goal came about ten minutes into the game as she beat Eli goalie Nada Sellers to give UMass the early advantage.

Junior attack Bunny Forbes scored on a nifty move to give the Gazelles a 2-0 lead. Forbes ran from behind the net, faked right, spun left, and shoveled a backhander past Sellers.

Forbes and Moryl combined for UMass' third goal of the contest. Forbes was again stationed behind the net but this time dished it back out to Moryl, who faked left, spun to the right, and shoveled it in.

Moryl closed out the scoring in the first half as she tallied on a penalty shot to give her the hat trick and the 4-1 halftime lead.

The second half saw the Gazelles control the tempo, especially on Yale's end of the field.

Rebecca Bekampis, a sophomore attack, scored on an assisted goal to continue the Gazelle onslaught. Freshman attack Virginia Armstrong took up right where Bekampis left off, as she scored an unassisted goal of her own.

Goal number seven was scored by Forbes as she came in from her favorite spot, behind the net, dodged defenders and ran towards the front left side of the net. She then wound up and blasted a shot over Seller's right shoulder to close out the UMass scoring.

UMass goalie Debbie DeJesus, a senior, was hardly tested in the net as she made 13 saves while receiving only 20 shots on net.

"Our defense played exceptional, and our team as a whole had a better second half," UMass coach Pam Hixon said.

The Gazelles were a force at the Eli end of the field, as they ended up with 44 shots on goal, giving Yale goalie Sellers quite a workout.

"The Yale goalie (Sellers) played very well. We had good scoring opportunities and I feel that we should have scored more. We'll have to work on our scoring percentage."

UMass, who will play Northeastern at home on Thursday, is sixth in the nation, according to the latest polls.

Minutemen power way to 6-3 win over UConn

Baseball climbs to 6-7 on season

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Correspondent

John Martin struck out the University of Connecticut's leading hitter with the bases loaded in the top of the ninth to preserve the University of Massachusetts' 6-3 victory over the Huskies yesterday at Lorden Field.

Martin went to a full count on Scott Cormier (.354) before he blew a fastball by him. Coach Dick Bergquist was pleased with the junior righthander's performance.

"Martin looked great," said Bergquist. "He came in and threw strikes. This was a big win for us."

The Minutemen improved their record to 6-7 and are 3-1 since coming north from their Florida trip. The key for UMass has been the surprising performance of the pitching staff.

In yesterday's game, Brett Valentini and Mick Wydra (1-1) combined for a five hitter through eight innings. Bergquist had nothing but praise for his staff.

"I was very pleased with his (Valentini) pitching, he is just a freshman," said Bergquist. "Mick (Wydra) threw well. We thought he was capable from what we saw. He should be able to do some pitching and help out the team."

The Minutemen jumped out on top in the second inning when Steve Messina lined a home run over the left field fence in the second. The Huskies got the lead momentarily in the fourth when Keith Kockenmeister hit a shot of his own off of Valentini over the centerfield fence.

UMass tied the game in the fifth when Todd Comeau (.341) singled and came all the way around to score on Angelo Salustri's (.340) two-out double to center.

The Minutemen took the lead with a two-out rally in the sixth. Darrin O'Connor started things by walking and stealing second. O'Connor scored on a bloop single to right by Bruce Kingman. Matt Sheran followed a line shot double to center which scored Kingman.

The lead grew to four in the eighth when the Minutemen got a home run from an unexpected source. After a walk to Sean Flint, O'Connor a 5-9, 160 pound freshman, drove a 0-1 pitch over the 370 marker in left-center.

Meanwhile, Wydra was mowing down the Huskie's. Through three innings, he struck out two batters and allowed only two base runners, one of which was on an error and was promptly eliminated on a double play ball.

But the junior righthander ran into trouble in the ninth. With one out, he gave a walk and a base hit to Dave Darling. Wydra came back and struck out Al Franceschini, but then gave up a single to pinch hitter Mike Pingree that loaded the bases.

Wydra walked Jon Gery to force in a run, causing Bergquist to call in Martin to finish the game.

Trustees approve $261 resource fee

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

BOSTON - Despite numerous protests, student leaders yesterday suffered a bitter defeat here when the board of trustees passed the Universal Resource Fee.

James Keller, Student Government Association co-president, was the only trustee to vote against the proposal after a lengthy discussion between trustees and a handful of University of Massachusetts students.

G. Ronald McArthur of the trustees budget and financial affairs committee rationalized student protests by saying that the Amherst campus' "debt service bills are due."

The single fee is a consolidated $261 fee to be stored in trust funds which will be used to pay off debt service, money or bond issues once borrowed to construct and now renovate buildings on campus including the residence halls, dining commons, and the Campus Center.

McArthur said the fee will serve as "a single stable revenue source which will allow the University to plan maintenance programs for major renovation without impacting room rents."

"Everything would be fine," McArthur said, while discussing the rationale behind the fee, "except for one major issue. Students have said that the single fee is unfair to off-campus students because facility renovations are not used by them."

All commuter, graduate, Greek area and married students, who are exempt from the University's room and board system, would end up paying for buildings they do not use and could not take advantage of reductions to be made in room and board fee next fall.

The trustees and UMass administrators said that since it is mandatory for students to live on campus and then most students live off-campus for the same length of time, students will actually make $24 with the consolidation of fees.

Though Jay Flynn, president of the Interfraternity Council at UMass, told the trustees that the fee would cause Greek houses to fold and Sanjiv Dugal, president of the Graduate Student Senate, said it would discourage quality teaching assistants from coming to UMass, trustees argued that "86 percent of new bond issue (for renovations) is applicable to facilities to which all students have access."

McArthur said the other option, to borrow $2 million to repair facilities, "at an additional annual cost of $2.9 million would have required a significant across-the-board increase to all students."

But Duffey emphasized that $100 million is needed for deferred maintenance. "We have a very serious deferred maintenance problem," Duffey said. "A tax on all students (the URF) is the most equitable way to address our problems...instead of not confronting it."

"It shows a lack of concern for student input," Dan Burgess, SGA co-president-elect, said. "It also demonstrated a lack of communication between the administration and students because it pushed so hard for it."

Remembering Martin Luther

By JOYCE REILLY
and LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

When news of Martin Luther King Jr.'s assassination reached the University of Massachusetts campus 17 years ago today, a "very large, very quiet" group of students gathered at the town common, according to Robert N. Brooks, associate dean of students.

Brooks, who was assistant to the dean at the time, said he was in a student government meeting when he heard the news. "The meeting immediately broke up," he said.

Afro-American Studies Professor Michael Thelwell said, "My reaction was to call people in different cities, especially in Washington D.C., where there were demonstrations in the streets." He added, "Some people, black and white, came over to my house and we discussed it and held a vigil."

The day after the assassination, "There was a series of teach-ins because the information we had was incomplete and people were unsure of what exactly had happened," Brooks said.

"I remember a great deal of anger," Thelwell said. "I talked to Stokely Carmichael, who said he was going to Washington, to the streets," he said.

Brooks said, "The first reaction (of the people he was with) was one of disbelief, then stunned silence and then a 'What should we do?' reaction."

"We didn't want to be disruptive," Brooks said. The students stayed at the town common for about an hour and the police cooperated. Brooks added that the police helped to stop traffic while the students made their way through town.

King was assassinated by James Earl Ray in Memphis, Tenn., where he had been in a sanitation worker's strike.

Chairman of the Afro-American Studies Program Ernest Allen recalled hearing the news and running to a television in order to get the full story.

King's death was felt by black Americans across the country and it created a numbing effect, Allen said. "After a death, people tend not to remember the differences and King became almost bigger than life," he said.

According to Allen, younger blacks criticized King's non-violent protest strategies. "They wanted a more radical movement especially in terms of self-defense. Yet the civil rights movement would not have gotten anywhere had this been the policy at the beginning," Allen said. "On the other hand, many did lose their lives," he said.

As part of Martin Luther King Jr. Week, there will be a gospel extravaganza today featuring choirs from Bethlehem, Pa., Amherst and Springfield. Dr. Mosley will be the guest speaker at the event which starts at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Faculty Senate to see report

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

Today the Faculty Senate will review its special report on Yvette Henry and vote on several proposals designed to aid the University in dealing with a crisis situation.

The proposed motions include a clarification of the responsibilities of the Dean of Student's Office in relation to the welfare of all students, a study of the procedures to be followed when off-campus agencies are involved in on-campus investigations, and more crisis training of campus police be provided.

The report, compiled in the spring of 1984 by the Faculty Senate Committee on the Status of Minorities, found evidence of civil rights violations in the arrest and interrogation of Yvette Henry, a resident assistant arrested and charged with one count of arson in a series of fires which plagued Crampton dormitory in the fall of 1983.

Henry has filed two $6.5 million lawsuits against the University and law enforcement agencies, alleging violations of her civil rights. Although the report has been published in the Collegian, the Faculty Senate will be seeing it for the first time.

The senate will also review the Program and Budget council's special report concerning the regents' fiscal year 1986 budget proposal, which states that the Amherst campus' share of the overall higher education budget has declined from 27.8 percent to 27.2 percent.

The report states that "the erosion of the financial base of the Amherst campus is a result of the regents' budgetary strategies."

In the regents' proposal, the University of Lowell's request is a 37.9 percent increase over 1985, while UMass' request is a 20.6 increase.

Whitmore occupation in fourth day

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

When Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson returns to campus today after a several-day absence, he will be greeted with about 50 students camping out in his "annexed" office and a list of phone messages.

Posted on his office wall yesterday was a sign, "Denny, while you were out, these people called," followed by a long list of local and national media organizations. They were calling in reference to a sit-in that begins its fourth day today, after its third night last night. While progress on their demands has been made, the students say they will continue their presence in Whitmore until all of their concerns have been fully dealt with.

In negotiations with Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey Tuesday, a verbal agreement was reached to retain the Board of Governors and its control over space allocation in the Campus Center and Student Union buildings.

While the chancellor also agreed to ask the board of trustees to listen to student arguments regarding the $177,000 invested in corporations the students say are operating in South Africa, Duffey's response does not ensure that the demand to immediately sell those stocks will be met.

"We're planning to stay here until we have received from the administration what we feel is an adequate, positive response to what we're talking about," Student Government Association co-President Stacey Roth said yesterday in reference to the South African as well as other issues she said have not been entirely resolved.

At the trustees meeting yesterday in Boston, Duffey read the board the list of students' demands and informed them that he had spent several hours on the phone to Washington attempting to find out the status of the companies but was unsuccessful. Trustee and budget and financial affairs committee member Robert McArthur said the trustees had no knowledge of the situation.

In Madson's office yesterday, students sat around studying, playing board games and talking to reporters. Upon learning that the Universal Resource Fee passed at the trustee meeting, thereby defeating one of their demands, sophomore Laura Gottsalk said, "Obviously, we're quite upset. We will continue to see how something like this can be avoided in the future (and) see how fees like this are not set up in such an unfair way."

Congress may give refugee protection

WASHINGTON (AP)—Groups representing churches, Hispanics and civil liberties organizations urged Congress yesterday to pass a bill that would allow refugees from El Salvador to stay in the United States legally, at least for now.

Among those endorsing the bill was the Rev. John M. Fife, a Presbyterian minister from Tuscon, Ariz., who is a member of the nationwide church sanctuary movement that is attempting to provide a haven for Central Americans threatened by violence in their homelands.

Fife was indicted by a federal grand jury in January on charges of smuggling illegal aliens into the United States.

Opposed by the Reagan administration, the bill would give those Salvadoran refugees now in the United States illegally the right to remain until the General Accounting Office completed a study of the situation Salvadoran refugees would face in their homeland or in other Central American nations.

Sponsored by Rep. Joe Moakley, D-Mass., and Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., the bill envisions the study would take about two years to complete.

If the study found it would be unsafe for the refugees to return home, either the president or Congress likely would act to allow them to remain in the United States, Moakley said.

Moakley, who sponsored a similar bill last year, said he was introducing it again because the Reagan administration still has refused to grant any special status to refugees from El Salvador. That status, he said, has been granted refugees from Poland, Ethiopia, Afghanistan and Uganda, allowing them to stay in the United States because of the conditions in their homelands.

"While most Salvadorans in this country may not be able to demonstrate that their names are on 'death lists' in El Salvador or other documentation of individualized persecution, they are nonetheless fearful of being deported into the heat of the Salvadoran battle," Moakley said.

Mass. roadblocks questioned in court

BOSTON (AP)— The constitutionality of Massachusetts' State Police program to catch drunken drivers with roadblocks was challenged for the first time yesterday, with attorneys for three motorists arguing before the state Supreme Court that the practice is unduly intrusive.

The high court in 1983 ruled that a roadblock in Revere was unconstitutional, but that suit was begun by local authorities.

The three motorists, all from western Massachusetts, were stopped during the weekend the department began the statewide program, two months after the Revere decision.

Edward F. Massey of Turners Falls, Howard Anderson Jr. of South Deerfield and John Trumble of Easthampton were all stopped at a state police roadblock set up during the July 4 weekend in 1983 on Route 116 in Sunderland.

Mercy killing tried

PEABODY (AP) - A man who appeared drunk walked into the intensive care unit of a hospital here, laid a red rose on his 52-year-old wife's bed and then tried unsuccessfully to disconnect her life-support system, officials said yesterday.

The man muttered "something about that being cruel," before a nurse chased him from J.S. Thomas Hospital at 1:45 p.m. Tuesday, said Essex County Assistant District Attorney Fred Cronin.

The man, identified as John Keraghan, 52, of Topsfield, was arrested yesterday and charged with attempted murder. He was interviewed by a court-appointed psychiatrist yesterday afternoon and held without bail, Cronin said.

"He wasn't in any condition to assist counsel on the question of bail," said Cronin.

Senate won't pay sit-in's security costs

By SUSAN EATON and DAVID BURGESS
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night upheld a motion to not be held financially responsible for the group of students now occupying the Student Affairs office in the Whitmore administration building.

The motion was entered into the agenda last night because of information from assistant Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Bob Welch that extra costs had been incurred by the sit-in. They include copy machine usage and overtime pay for University of Massachusetts security officers, he said.

Director of Public Safety, Gerald O'Neil said, "Whatever it costs this department for the security, someone has to pay for it and it's not in my budget."

"They (April 1 coalition) are trying to represent a solid, responsible front to the administration with their actions but they aren't doing so by going in there and using everything and expecting someone else to pay for it," Michael Cerrato, Northeast Area senator said.

Greg Fink, co-president of the Orchard Hill Area Government and member of the coalition, spoke in opposition to the motion saying, "The coalition is only carrying out an extension of what we have been doing here. Whether you want to realize it or not, they are doing your work."

The senate upheld another motion formally "acknowledging and applaud(ing) the University Democrats for their action concerning their budget." The RSO group, at the March 27 senate meeting burned their budget to assist the SGA in their fiscal crisis.

After opposition to the motion was aired, Autumn Maki, student senator from JQA said, "I wish people would recognize it when a group is doing something for the community."

Jordan Rosner, chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, said in his report the President's Office and State Student Association of Massachusetts (SSAM) appealed the cuts made in their budgets to the Coordinating Committee, which will be negotiated sometime this week.

Budget Committee cuts require the President's Office, the Treasurer's office and the Speaker's Office to cut their payroll by employing one less assistant per person. Formerly, each officer had been allowed two assistants.

Mass PIRG lobbys to keep fee on tuition bill

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

BOSTON--Six Amherst members of a national advocate group yesterday lobbied at the state house here on pending legislation, including a bill that would have changed the group's funding method.

Five University of Massachusetts students and one Amherst College student met with about 45 other student members of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG), as part of the Statewide MassPIRG Lobby Day.

Early yesterday, members of the group attended a Committee on Education hearing, where a bill that would have made the MassPIRG on all tuition bills "additional" and not "waivable," was tabled. MassPIRG is now funded by UMass students who chose to pay $2 included in their semesterly tuition bill. Students who do no want to fund MassPIRG have the option of subtracting the $2 from their bill.

The bill, introduced yesterday and sponsored by Sen. Edward P. Kirby (R-Whitman), would give students the option of adding the fee on themselves.

"I think there are a lot of students that are paying the fee and not realizing it," Roger Provost, Kirby's legislative aide said after the hearing. The group is collecting more money through this process than it normally could," he said.

An aide to Sen. John W. Olver (D-Amherst) says the bill was an "unnecessary intrusion" into an "established democratic decision-making process."

The students spent yesterday afternoon talking to state senators and representatives about two bills they have been working on all year.

One bill would allow the formation of a Consumer Utility Board, which would "address the fact that citizens are not being fairly represented before the Department of Public Utilities" according to Wendy Swart, MassPIRG's UMass student coordinator. She said if the bill is passed, utility bills will contain an extra enclosure, asking for a donation to qualify membership to the board. Once the board has a $1000 base, it will hire lawyers and professional lobbyists who will work on behalf of the consumer.

The second bill discussed yesterday, the Acid Rain Cap, would require a 30 percent decrease in the amount of sulfur dioxide emissions in Massachusetts. This would be achieved with the mandatory utilization of scrubbers, "mechanisms placed in the smokestacks (of factories) to act as a screen," Swart said.

The Amherst group met with Rep. James Collins (D-Amherst) who supported both bills.

Group to examine concerns of Latin American women

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

In an effort to explore the problems and concerns Latin American women face in the United States, an issues group will hold their first meeting at 7 p.m. tonight at the Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts.

Lourdes Matei, counselor and educator/program director of child services at Gandara Mental Health Center in Springfield, and Mercedes del Valle, a UMass graduate student, will be co-facilitating the eight week program.

Matei said the approach she will use will be to help the women identify what problems they may confront and "how they want to deal with them."

The group will discuss issues aired by participants, but Matei said this would differ if they are students or head of households.

Matei added that she wants to explore what it is like being a Latina in the United States and deal with the issues central to the group. Matei said each experience will be varied depending upon the participant's class and racial background.

Because Latin women carry their family's problems on their shoulders and pay little attention to their own, the group will be helpful in providing a network and in helping them share their experience, Matei said.

Latinas seldom meet to discuss their problems and "the group is a good place to start," Matei said. The group will also help mend broken family ties giving them "the time, the place and the space for support."

Matei said white and Latin women must meet to talk about women's issues. "So many times white women do not understand our experiences and issues, like how important our family is to us," she said.

Award winning prof. kicks off lecture series

By BETHANNE MOSKOV
Collegian Staff

Karl Marx believed labor value to be abstract and absurd but a necessary part of society, an award-winning University of Massachusetts philosophy professor said in a lecture last night.

Dr. Robert Paul Wolff's lecture, titled "The Factory and the Cave: The Inverted World of Capitalism" is part two of three-part series Wolff is giving on the topic "Moneybags Must be so Lucky: Reflections on the Philosophical Significance of the Literary Structure of Marx's Capital."

"Religion, politics, and economy are three areas of mystification that Marx talks about in Capital," Wolff said. "Economy, feels Marx, contains the most amount of mystification. This mystification is a result of abstract labor and commodities."

"Things like coats and boots can be referred to as commodities. However, all commodities are not necessarily coats and boots," he said.

"These commodities are results of human labor, so when a value is placed on a commodity, it is placed on the labor that went into producing it. However, the labor receives less than it deserves, thus causing a surplus. That surplus is capitalism," Wolff said.

Wolff went on to say "This whole idea is a very confusing one, even in simple terms. This is just evidence of rishing Marxian thought on campus."

The lectures are being sponsored by the national honor society, Phi Beta Kappa, which named Dr. Wolff the Romanell-Phi Beta Kappa Professor of Philosophy for 1984-85.

The award, which recognizes contributions to the public understanding of philosophy, is given annually to a faculty member of an institution that has a Phi Beta Kappa chapter.

As part of the award, Professor Wolff receives a $6,000 stipend and will give three lectures.

Dr. Wolff received his A.B, A.M., and Ph.D. from Harvard. He is a member of the American Philosophical Association and is the founder of the University's interdisciplinary major in Social Thought and Political Economy (STPEC).

BOG to hear proposals for filling empty store

By VICKI A. SPAGNOLI
Collegian Staff

Students interested in starting a student-controlled business can present their proposals to the Campus Center Board of Governors at the board's weekly meeting tonight in the Campus Center, BOG chair Jane Donohue said.

Three groups present at last week's meeting, representing the sports co-op "Teamworks," the bicycle co-op, and an ice-cream shop, are on the agenda for tonight's meeting, Donohue said, but any other group with a proposal may bring it to the meeting.

The board will vote again this week on proposals for a student-run business to fill the former Union Records Unlimited space in the student Union after the ice-cream shop proposal was voted down last week. The motion had been recommended by the board's space committee.

Jodi Green, manager of "Teamworks," said the sports co-op wants the space because there is no room for expansion in their present space, located in the Student Union opposite Earthfoods. She said the sport co-op would expand their clothing line and their present athletic equipment inventory to include lacrosse equipment, tennis racquets and athletic shoes. The store also needs a dressing room, Green said.

"We want to have enough diversity in what we sell to serve a large number of students as well as offer the experience of running a small business to our students employees," Green said.

The bike co-op also wants the URU space because their present location, across from the post office in the Student Union, is too small, bike co-op vice-president David Linehan said. The bike co-op presently uses two rooms to sell and repair bikes. "We've utilized the space upstairs to its fullest extent and we need room to expand, he said. More space is needed to repair bikes and to offer more bike repair workshops to students, Linehan said. "We're a cooperative organization," Linehan said, "We stress self-dependency to students. We teach students to repair their bikes."

The ice cream shop proposal voted down last week will be re-submitted at tonight's meeting with revisions, BOG member Bob Cohen, who submitted the proposal said. The new proposal will include an operating plan based on an outline designed by the Economic Development Office and a detailed budget, Cohen said.

The proposed ice cream shop would open in September, according to the proposal. The shop would serve gourmet ice cream, pastries and coffee and would be equipped by an outside ice cream company such as Hood Inc., or Bart's Ice Cream. The shop would also need $4000 loan from the Student Government Association for renovations, Cohen said.

"The ice cream shop will offer students a new service and still benefit the student community as a whole by offering services both to the customers and the student management," Cohen said.

★ sit-in

No further talks took place yesterday, as Duffey and other administrators were in Boston, but Duffey said Tuesday that they would not resume until the sit-in ends.

"We've made significant headway in three days (over issues) that we've been deadlocked in for six months or more," Roth said, adding that despite Duffey's warning, "I hope that negotiations would continue—it's the only way we're going to sit down and resolve our differences."

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

A death in Memphis

Seventeen years ago, Martin Luther King, Jr. was struck down by an assassin's bullet as he stood on the balcony of a Memphis hotel. His murder touched off a wave of urban violence that threatened to engulf the entire country in a full-scale race war.

Luckily, that did not happen. Not just because it would have brought untold death and suffering to this nation but also because it would have left a bloody tinge to memories of this great American.

He always abhorred violence and consistently refused to endorse its use as a political tool. There was no room for the weapons of the oppressors in his arsenal. His strengh came from the sincerity and depth of his convictions and not from the barrel of a gun or the end of a whip.

It was a dedication to peaceful protest and a conciliatory attitude that made him the most effective and highly regarded civil rights leader of his or any other time. He continually sought not to alienate but to win over, not to frighten but to disarm and above all, not to hate but to love. Only through this kind of philosophy could black and white have been brought together to work for the common goal of equality for all.

While struggling to achieve equality for blacks, King also embraced a universal struggle for human rights for all. He opposed the Vietnam War because he believed it to be an unjust invasion of other people's land.

Here at home he fought hard for the struggle for poor people both black and white; a struggle that continues today.

All of us owe him a debt. It is due in a large part to his efforts that we are finally making progress towards achieving his dream of a society where "a man will be judged not by the color of his skin but by the content of his character."

Letters to the Editor

'Flippant insults' are not necessary

For three months student representatives have been standing up for student rights by fighting to maintain the CC/SU Board of Governors. The administration's threat to dissolve the BOG has been one of the most serious concerns to face students this semester.

Yesterday, during the course of the student sit-in at Whitmore, the chancellor finally agreed with student spokespeople that the Board should retain the powers and responsibilities which it has held in the past. This is a major victory for students.

Why did the Collegian in yesterday's front page article about the Whitmore demonstration neglect to report this achievement? We feel that the commitment expressed by Chancellor Joseph Duffey and Vice-Chancellor John L. DeNyse to ensure the Board's existence is the most significant result of the student sit-in thus far. While other demands regarding South African divestment and the Universal Resource Fee remain unsolved, any progress in negotiations is newsworthy.

Associate Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Welch and student representative Chris Sullivan did agree to meet, and that was duly reported. However, the purpose of the meeting was not to "discuss the status of the CC Board of Governors" as described in the Collegian. Instead, the meeting was arranged to formalize in writing the specific agreement which students and the chancellor reached yesterday. After three months of fighting we are pleased that the Board issue is resolved, but we are a little disappointed that the Collegian misunderstood some factual matters in the result of yesterday's negotiations.

Beyond the shoddy news coverage, we are also disturbed by certain innuendos in the Collegian Board of Editor's statement on the Opinion page in the same issue. This editorial mentioned that a student, who was attempting to recruit demonstrators, chastised uninterested passersby by shouting, "What are you all, conservatives?" We are unaware of this action and can only state that the main theme of Tuesday's rally was non-partisan student rights. Michael Cerrato, a Republican Club member, was an active participant in the rally. He himself emphasized the importance of unified non-partisan support.

We find it ironic that the Collegian's Board of Editors, which "cannot condone flippant insults that divide students," focuses on relatively insignificant actions, such as bouncing a rubber ball and takes them out of context, at the same time that it fails to report the straight, breaking news.

While we respect the efforts of the Daily Collegian, we can only wonder why we receive more support and accuracy from outside sources such as the Springfield Union, while our student newspaper continually creates flippant insults of its own.

Sit-in not yet given support of Senate

On March 27, the Undergraduate Student Senate was informed that a "rally" was taking place outside the Student Union to protest the elimination of the Campus Center Board of Governors and the imposition of the Universal Resource Fee. Come yesterday, however, there had been a march on the vice chancellor's office, a three-day sit-in, and a list of 10 demands given to the vice chancellor, the chancellor, and the administration in general.

Calling themselves the April 1st Coalition, these students, among them Rick Patrick, Jim Keller,(the outgoing SGA presidents), Stacy Roth, Dani Burgess (the new presidents), Chris Sullivan (ex-speaker), John Ruddock (new speaker), and various other members of the SGA. Where was the Senate?

Many of them, myself included, were not told that we were sponsoring a sit-in or lists of demands that had not even been mentioned to the Senate, the official voice of the student body. The April 1st Coalition is a group entirely unconnected to the Senate, as they neither asked for, nor received, Senate approval. On two occasions I called the vice chancellor's office to speak with John Ruddock, and the phone was answered, "Student Senate." Who gave this group the authority of the Senate? Not the student body.

A member of the vice chancellor's staff told me that we were going to be charged for all the printing, duplicating, and other services usurped by this group in the office. That's a hell of a lot of money for the Senate to have to shell out for an unauthorized group of people. And why were the issues confused? Suddenly on top of the BOG and URF we see South African divestment, a Board of Governors for the Student Activities Office, exemption from all legal action for those students involved with the whole sit-in business, etc., etc., etc.

These are all important issues for the Senate to address, but individually, clearly, and with the authorization which only the Senate can give. The URF is out of our hands now, but why was a good percentage of our SGA leadership involved with a sit-in at Whitmore when the Trustees were deciding the issue at UMass/Boston? There is a definite problem here when a group of students, especially student leadership, take it upon themselves to become the voice for the student body over and above the authority of the Student Senate. This is an infringement not only of the Senate's prerogatives, but of students' rights.

Rallying for a student cause

Monday I attended the rally on Whitmore protesting the Universal Resource Fee. We were a good-sized crowd, and we made a lot of noise. We swept into the halls of Whitmore and occupied the Student Affairs office. Demands were made to meet with administration officials and Dean Field came forward to talk with us. Eventually, about 25 students spent the night in Whitmore to continue the protest.

Normally, playing games of "holier than thou" is in poor taste and repels support. In yesterday's case, students who did not attend the rally due to time conflict cannot be criticized, as everyone must do as they feel they must.

However, those students who attended the rally are to be commended. They do not accept the role of cattle or sheep who are willing to be led and manipulated by the powers that be. The right to question authority is a right which has not yet been abused on this campus. It is a right which must be used or lost. The protestors sought overdue answers, to be heard and did something about it. Remember, you can't do that in the Soviet Union. We will all learn more about our university's system of bureaucracy after these actions.

Give 'long overdue recognition' to co-op

After many years of hard work, the UMass Bike Co-op has finally earned the right for a bigger space; tonight the Board of Governors is going to meet to decide the fate of the space which was formerly used by the Union Record Shop. They are going to decide whether to assign that space to an ice cream shop or to the Bike Co-op, the former providing a commodity which can already be found abundantly in the area, and the latter providing the student body and the community with services which (at least in that quality) can simply not be found in the entire region; the latter being a choice where we would be providing the campus community a major support center for the cheapest, healthiest, and most accessible means of transportation: bicycles.

The Bike Co-op which has provided these extremely crucial services for so many years, despite its extremely small and limited space, is now forced to compete with a group which doesn't even exist yet but on the paper.

Let us grant the UMass Bike Co-op their long overdue recognition; let us provide them the space because they deserve it, because the student body deserves it.

ARTS

live wire
by Peter Wissoker

It's kind of a slow week if you plan on going out. There are some fun things to do but perhaps the most relevant would be to spend the weekend at Whitmore.

Tonight at the Iron Horse Greg Brown of the Prairie Home Companion will be performing his multi-faceted works, as listeners to last week's show will testify.

Friday night the Bamboo Steamers will be at Sheehan's. I haven't seen them but with a name like that how can you miss. By the way the entire Etron Fou Leloublan tour was cancelled which of course means that they won't be playing at the Iron Horse.

On Friday tickets for Santana go on sale. They will be playing at the FAC on April 30. Tickets are a wopping thirteen biggies. I now remember what I was going to say at the beginning of the column. I dreamt that Black Flag was playing at the Iron Horse. There was a lot of damage, and they were told that they wouldn't be booked there again.

Saturday brings 8th Route Army to Sheehan's. On Sunday Nashville's own Jason and the Scorchers will be playing at Pearl Street; John Hammond Jr. and Luther Guitar Jr. will perform without Black Flag at the Iron Horse. Both shows should be really good (my favorite adjective).

Today's is a short column. The tip this week is to go see tonight's Gospel Extravaganza at the Campus Center. Last years was, sorry if this is sacrilegious, a real rave-up (more hip jargon, for 1965). There's no substitute for the real thing.

Trivia Question: Last week's answer is that in the late fifties Elvis liked to read philosophy. This week's question for a mystery prize: Name four bands that Richard Thompson has played in. Bring your answer down to the Collegian Arts desk.

Porky's Revenge
At the Hampshire Mall Cinema

By DANIEL CALNAN
Collegian Correspondent

There's a trick to watching movies like Porky's Revenge. If you go to it knowing what to expect, and accept it for what it is, (cheap, sexist, with locker room style humor), then there's no way you can be disappointed or upset because you didn't like it. So I went to this, the third installment of the Porky's trilogy, expecting the low grade insulting mentality of it's predesessors. Needless to say, that's exactly what I got.

Yes, the gang from Angel Beach High are at it again. Pee Wee, Meat, Wendy, and all your favorites are finally graduating, even though the actors who portray them look as though they should be preparing their dissertations for their master's degrees. We are taken to the state championship basketball game (I'll spoil it for you, Angel Beach wins), the senior prom, and at last, graduation. The whole time, we are bombarded with silly gags, and plenty of T. and A.

I had hoped to at least get a chuckle out of Porky's Revenge, but it was not meant to be. Out of the three Porky's movies made to date, (please God, let this one be the last), this was the least funniest. There is really not much more to say about it. It was just as I had expected. You know, the worst thing about movies like this, is that I have to see them.

Aristocrats on parade

A rewarding Rehearsal

The Rehearsal
At the Curtain Theater
Through Saturday, April 6

By MARIANE MEUSE
Collegian Staff

The UMass Department of Theater's production of Jean Anouilh's The Rehearsal is an entertaining and humorous look at marriage, infidelity, and the search for love.

The Rehearsal is actually a play within a play. The plot revolves around a French Count and his wife, played respectively by Robert M. Curtiss and Lititia Ord, who are rehearsing a play for an upcoming ball. The Count has given a key role to Lucile (Linda A. Pizzotti), a working-class woman with whom he is in love.

The rehearsal for the play soon becomes a mirror-image of the real lives of the count and those around him as they begin using the rehearsal to play out their real lives.

As the audience soon realizes, both the Count and the Countess practice infidelity and openly acknowledge it. They tell themselves that this infidelity is a reflection of the "freedom" they grant one another. They thus conveniently ignore the lack of love in their marriage as they desperately seek it elsewhere.

Anouilh's play is brilliant in depicting the foolishness of a loveless marriage. The Countess dislikes Lucile because she is working class and will be an embarrassment to the aristocrats. Yet it is only Lucile who is capable of arousing feelings of real love within the Count.

The play is long, running about 2 hours and 45 minutes, but the performers under the direction of Peter Lavenburg manage to keep the audience attentive. Nick Plakias as Hero, a long-time friend of the Count, is a standout among the talented cast. His depiction of a bitter man who seeks solace in alcohol, is heartbreaking and tremendously effective.

Robert M. Curtiss and Lititia Ord as the Count and Countess, are also suberb, as is Linda Pizzotti as Lucile.

The set and costumes also perfectly capture the air of the period and the aristocracy which the Count surrounds himself with.

Commencement 1985

10:00 a.m., Saturday, May 25

All Candidates
There is no Commencement rehearsal for degree candidates. Candidates should assemble by school/college at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium no later than 9 a.m. graduation morning, May 25, 1985. Signs will be posted indicating schools and Commencement Marshals will issue specific instructions and distribute programs. Upon signal, candidates will follow the Commencement Marshals to the assigned areas and be seated.

Candidates will receive diploma covers from the deans of their school or college. Diplomas will be mailed when all processing has been completed. Please be sure the Registrar has your correct permanent address.

Who is Eligible to Participate?
Undergraduate degree candidates who anticipate completing degree requirements by the end of the calendar year 1985. Questions concerning academic status should be directed to the Records Office, 213 Whitmore, 545-0555.

Master degree candidates who have previously submitted the Degree Application Form by April 30, 1985 to the Office of Degree Requirements stating the intention to complete all requirements. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Doctoral degree candidates who have completed all degree requirements by April 30, 1985. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249 Lederle Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Faculty
Faculty and staff should assemble at the SOUTH end of the stadium on the gravel between the Facilities Building and the stadium wall. Faculty will be part of the processional and will be seated immediately in front of the candidates from each school and college.

Parents and Invited Guests/Plan to Arrive Early — Space is Limited
Since the Commencement Exercises are open to the public and guest seating is without reservation, parents and friends should plan to arrive early, to ensure good seating.

Handicapped Seating
Viewing area for the handicapped will be located on both sides of the stadium on the eastern and western walkways. Since seating is limited, it is requested that only one person accompany the handicapped guest.

Invitations
There is no limit to the number of guests who may attend the ceremony and tickets are not required. Each student will receive a packet of six formal invitations.

Caps, Gowns, and Hoods
Undergraduate and Master Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge (on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it) at the Textbook Annex, May 6-May 24, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

On Commencement Day, May 25, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Doctoral Degree Candidates
Doctoral caps, gowns, tassels, hoods and invitations will be available only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, April 29-May 24, Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. through 5 p.m., upon clearance by the Office of Degree Requirements. On Commencement Day, caps, gowns, tassels, and hoods may be obtained after 9 a.m. at the NORTHWEST end of the stadium (on the gravel area).

Doctoral candidates who plan to participate in the Commencement ceremony must have a hood. Each candidate's name will be announced over the stadium sound system and two officers of the University will drape the hood on the candidate's shoulders. Doctoral hoods can be purchased only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, at a cost of $30. (Five College Doctoral Hoods will be available at $42.95.) Doctoral hoods may be rented through the University Store at a cost of $10.

Rentals
Academic apparel for this year's University Commencement may be rented through the University Store. All faculty members are urged to place their orders as soon as possible. THE LAST DAY TO ORDER IS FRIDAY, MAY 17. Payment must be made at the time of order and there will be no refunds if apparel is not used. Academic apparel may also be purchased. For further information about rentals or purchases, please contact Connie Szelewicki at the University Store, 545-2619.

Accommodations
Many area motels are already booked for the evenings of May 24 and 25. A limited number of rooms in University dormitories will be available for relatives and their guests for the nights of May 24 and 25. Please contact the Conference Services Office, 918 Campus Center, (413) 545-3400, as soon as possible to request a form to register for dormitory housing. These forms must be returned with full payment to Conference Services no later than May 3 to guarantee your dormitory room reservation.

Food Services
Coffee, soft drinks, and donuts will be available at rotundas on both sides of the stadium toward the North.

Commencement Ceremony Schedule

9 a.m.	Robing for Commencement Appropriate signs will be displayed. Graduates should line up according to their school or college.
9:30 a.m.	Seating of Graduates
10 a.m.	Procession starts
12 noon	Ceremony ends

Parking
Parking at the stadium is extremely limited. Vehicles will be directed to several parking lots located nearby and shuttle buses will provide transportation to the stadium. Buses will return to the lots immediately following the ceremony.

Traffic Assistance
To aid the traffic flow at Commencement, radio station WTTT AM (1430) will broadcast traffic reports throughout the morning. Please tune in as you approach Amherst for the best route to the ceremony.

General Information
Medical facilities will be located in the Facilities Building at the south end of the stadium.

Public telephones will be located on the west side of the Facilities Building.

Cornell rains down on UMass, 13-9

Lax falls to 1-1, defense stumbles

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

You can bet the concept of team defense will be drilled into the heads of the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team in practice this week after yesterday's 13-9 loss to Cornell on rain-swept Boyden Field in front of 300 hardy fans.

The 15th ranked Big Red consistently beat UMass to loose balls, capitalized on almost every defensive mistake and controlled the tempo in dropping the Gorillas to 1-1 on the season.

"I don't know what it is, generally it's that we aren't pulling together on defense," UMass coach Dick Garber explained.

"The close defensemen are playing fairly well, the midfielders aren't doing what they're supposed to be doing. We just plain gave them a couple of goals we shouldn't of."

UMass, which has given up an uncharacteristic 26 goals in two games, came into the game ranked 14th in the nation and feared for its potent attack. But Cornell cut off the UMass fast break, allowing just 16 shots on goalie Chris Modeski.

"Anytime you come up here and come away with a win, you know it's a good effort," Cornell coach Richie Moran said. "We hustled up and down the field and I thought we did a nice job of stopping them. Our defense was tremendous."

UMass opended the game by taking a 2-0 lead on goals by Tom Carmean and Stephen Moreland, both unassisted. Cornell's Jamie Smith cut it 2-1 at the end of the first period, beating UM goalie Gerry Moreau with 1:14 left in the period.

Cornell outscored UMass 5-2 in the second period, getting two goals from Tony Reece and single tallies from Bill Hughes, Ken Entenmann and Smith. Ed Boardman and Neal Cunningham scored for Umass to make it 6-4 at the half.

The Gorillas came out strong in the third period and cut the lead to one as Tom Lukacovic hooked up with Carmean with only 39 seconds gone. Smith answered with 11:37 to go in the quarter before Carmean fed co-captain Karl Hatton for a goal with 7:17 to go.

Cunningham and junior midfielder Rich Abbott combined to tie the game at seven as Abbott dished to Cunningham and the sophomore drilled a shot past Modeski. The goal came with 5:29 to go in the quarter.

But Smith gave Cornell an 8-7 lead, dumping it past Moreau with 2:59 to go. UMass defensemen Mark Stratton was caught slashing as time expired in the period, giving Cornell a man advantage for the first minute of the final quarter.

Hughes scored with three seconds left in the penalty to make it 9-7. Doug Musco cut the Cornell lead, taking a Carmean pass and converting a little more than a minute later.

Tim Gordon was quick to respond for the Big Red, going in unassisted three minutes later. The Gorillas were on the verge of folding, trailing 10-8.

But all-New England middie Greg Fisk breathed life into UMass, walking in to beat Modeski at the 7:49 mark. The crowd was sparked and the Gorillas, trailing by only a goal, got back into the game emotionally.

But Cornell's Tom Gunderson, just 43 seconds later, scored to begin a streak of three unanswered goals that sealed the door on UMass. Entenmann scored the final two goals as UMass, eager to press Modeski on offense, let up on defense.

Statistically, UMass was outshot 40-31, successfully cleared the ball only 19-of-27 times, and allowed Cornell 19-of-22 clears.

UMass attackman Tom Carmean (15) cuts away from Cornell defenseman Aaron Jones in action yesterday at Boyden Field. Cornell beat UMass, 13-9.

The statisticians gave UMass a 47-41 groundball advantage, but those figures seem questionable considering Cornell's loose ball dominance. On the man advantage UMass had five shots on five chances, converting a single goal. Cornell released eight shots during four advantages, scoring twice.

Moreau made 11 saves, Modeski seven. Seamus McGovern got 14 of the 26 faceoffs for UMass.

"I expected us to score a little more, at least double figures," Garber said. "We had at least five shots from the crease that didn't go in. Those are the shots we have to convert to win. Sure, the weather was crummy, but it was crummy for them too and they had a good offense."

"This game doesn't call for any drastic changes, just an understanding of what team defense is. It isn't enough to talk about it, we have to do it. We have the makings of a solid defensive team, it's just a matter of proving it."

Sixth-ranked women's lax hosts Northeastern

This afternoon at 3 p.m. on NOPE field the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team, ranked sixth in the nation, will tangle with Northeastern.

Coach Pam Hixon's team is 2-0 on the season following a 7-3 win over Yale on Tuesday. Also today at 3, the women's tennis team hosts Connecticut at the NOPE courts.

A loss is tough, losing to Moran is even worse

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

When you're the 13th ranked team in the nation, no loss is ever easy to take. Add cold and rainy weather and an opposing coach who's, putting mildly, not well-liked and it adds up to a forgettable day for the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team.

"I hate that bleeping Richie Moran," one Gorilla said after yesterday's 13-9 loss to Cornell. The Big Red, now 10-2 against UMass since Moran took over 17 years ago, are truly a reflection of their coach: arrogant, combative and hard-nosed. But they win doing it.

Moran, a big white-haired man who yells at his players and the officials throughout the game, inspires either love or hate. His players love him, opponents want to beat him more than the team.

"I'd love to beat Moran," UM coach Dick Garber, who spends the game pacing the sidelines, rarely approaching the antics of Moran.

"His teams are tenacious, they hit you hard and beat you to every ground ball they can, it's terrible having to play them sometime," Garber said, failing to mention that Cornell players also bait the crowd, harass the officials and mock opponents after scoring.

Moran, to his credit, plays the part well. Before and after the game he plays up his opponents and comes up with lines like "it was the bounces that won it for us," after winning by four goals and controlling the tempo.

During the game however, the burly coach yelled at the UMass timekeeper to "keep your head up and sound the horn when we want a time out. You ever do this before?" And Moran encourages his team's verbal exchanges, Ivy league prep-types the team isn't.

Garber and his players blame only themselves for losing. "But if we have to lose," questioned one player, "why does it have to be to him? Anybody but Richie Moran, anybody."

Sports Log

Tony Betros

Just a few thoughts...

After a month of incredible coverage, the NCAA tournament is finally over, and what a finish. The Villanova Wildcats, who lost the last game of the regular season to Pittsburgh by 23 points slipped their way through the tournament and beat the best basketball team since the 1976 Indiana Hoosiers...A lot of trends transpired during the game: Villanova was able to keep Georgetown off the offensive boards, especially in the second half. Perhaps the Hoyas constant pressuring tired them out. The Wildcats didn't really hurt their cause, shooting 79 percent from the floor during the game. I don't think that high a percentage of UMass students knows what B.O.G. stands for.

The best part about the final game had to be the reaction of Rollie Massimino. Here's a guy who definitely isn't afraid to show every single facet of his personality. Rollie would look good in a Ragu commercial or as a Maitre d' in a quaint little place in the North End.

Right when college hoop ends, baseball starts, and all's right with the world. This season should be an exciting one as new clubs are starting to emerge to the head of the pick. Last year, I predicted the Mets to win the World Series and if they had a better series with the Cubs in August, they may have been there. This year, Gooden, Strawberry, Darling are all a year older and more mature. Gary Carter should solidify their lineup and the Mets should overtake the Cubs for the NL East title...The NL West had the Padres win it last year and they are the odds-on-favorite this year. Watch out for Houston. They still have the tough pitching and they moved the fences in at the Astrodome..

The AL East saw the Tigers run away and hide, but that won't happen this year. The Blue Jays look like they've finally turned the corner, bolstering their bullpen and the Yankees will be tough (they played the best baseball in the league after the All-Star break). As for the Red Sox, I'll see them on the golf course...The AL West is as boring as Prince accepting an award, so I'll just say Oakland and be done with it.

A couple of final notes: Sports Illustrated did a great job on the April Fool's story on Sidd Finch, the Mets pitcher who threw 168 miles per hour. Imagine trying to hit that. That would be as probable as a day at UMass without a rally...Well, Wrestlemania is over and the Hulkster and Mr. T have risen to the challenge. Wrestling is now being marketed so watch for "Superfly" Snuka dolls and Iron Sheik beach towels. Don't forget, they laughed at Barbie.

No more need be said.

Whitmore sit-in ends in compromise

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

A four-day occupation of the Whitmore Administration Building ended yesterday afternoon when about 75 student protesters agreed to a compromise reached by student leaders and the administration.

The jubilant students marched en masse from Whitmore at about 4:30 p.m. and congregated at the side of the Student Union. The students arrived crying "We won! We won!" and "What do we want? Sleep!"

The agreement yesterday was the end of the sit-in which began in the office of Student Affairs and stretched over to the hall outside the office of Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey. It was signed by five student leaders, and Vice Chancellors Dennis L. Madson (Student Affairs), John L. DeNyse (Administration and Finance), and Richard D. O'Brien (Provost and Academic Affairs). It stated the following agreements.

- The compromise reiterated the verbal agreement reached Tuesday by the students and Duffey to retain the Campus Center Board of Governors and its space allocation function.
- The administration and the "April 1st Coalition" agreed to establish a joint commission to research and present information to the Board of Trustees on South African divestiture.
- The administration pledged to help petition the state Board of Regents of Higher Education over a possible tuition increase.
- The additional costs of security to monitor the demonstration will be paid for by the administration, and the protesters agreed to pay about $210 for the use of a copying machine in the Student Affairs office.
- No criminal charges will be made based on the occupation of Whitmore, and no disciplinary action will be taken.

As the students dispersed, Director of Public Safety Gerald T. O'Neil said the students were "very good. There hasn't been much disruption."

Food and sleeping bags were strewn about the floor of the outside office of Student Affairs, and protest signs lined the hallway to the Chancellor's Office. A Student Affairs employee said last night that the students cleaned up after themselves.

PROTESTERS DISCUSS — Students sitting in at Whitmore talk over administrative proposals to end the four-day sit-in yesterday.

Despite the student demonstration, the Board of Trustees Wednesday approved the $261 Universal Resource Fee, a trust fund tax designed to pay the debt service on University buildings.

When asked about why students occupied his office rather than Duffey's or DeNyse's, Madson commented, "I don't really know, but I'm sure the extra public space in my office and the fact that I was out-of-town were factors."

The South Africa study commission will consist of five students and five faculty, one of whom will be an administrator. Madson said he was "surprised" when the students asked him to be the faculty representative.

Three members of the faculty accepted Madson's offer to be on the commission, he said. They are visiting lecturer, Bill Strickland, Esther Terry of Afro-American studies, and Sonia Nieto of education. One more faculty position has not been accepted, Madson said.

DeNyse declined to comment last night.

Pyramid scheme not a sturdy investment

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

Sometimes you win, sometimes you lose.

That seems to be the sentiment of some students around campus nearly a week after they took part in a widespread get-rich-quick money scheme that is leaving some rich, others poor and University officials concerned.

"We're concerned that students are being hurt by it," Joseph Zaninni director of housing services, said. "It's also a violation of the law and University rules. The big thing is to get people to realize it's not a foolproof, easy, get-rich-quick scheme."

The scheme, better known as the pyramid, is designed so that one person at the top aims to increase his initial investment by recruiting other investors.

According to sources familiar with the system, the top person, known as the president, recruits two people to the pyramid. They pay the president to enter usually $100 and recruit two people each to join. Those recruits, called managers, each in turn recruit two more people and the pyramid is complete. The president takes the money and the pyramid splits in two. Each vice president becomes a president, and the original president is out, but much richer usually $800. The pyramid collapses and participants lose their investment when not enough people are recruited.

"It (the pyramid) constitutes a lottery, and, therefore, is considered illegal," Lt. Michael Grabiec of the UMass Police said.

Grabiec said he is investigating the case and refused to comment further. He said he was unsure how widespread the pyramids are at UMass.

"I imagine the schemes are going on off campus as well as the dormitories," he said. "How far, I really don't know."

Charles Durant, assistant director of housing services, said he is informing his Southwest residence staff about the pyramids.

"The most important thing is the education. We want people to know they are going to lose a lot of money. Second, it is illegal, and everyone should know that. Third, the police are involved in investigating."

Students involved in the pyramids are not worried about getting in trouble. They just want to win their money.

"A lot of things are illegal," said a dormitory resident who asked her name be withheld. "Kids smoke pot all the time--that's illegal. If you can get away with it, fine. I knew what the consequences were and could've backed out if I wanted to."

"I'm going to get my money," she said.

"I'll be satisfied if I get my $50 back. It was a gamble. I'm so close, yet so far."

The student said that as far as she knows, she is now a vice-president in her pyramid, which means she is one step away from claiming her money. She split her investment with a friend and believes she has at least $300 coming to her. But she does not know who has the money now.

"I keep calling the guy who should have my money, but he says he doesn't."

An off-campus student who recently reached the top of the pyramid winning $700, and also wished not to be identified, said, "It's probably legal somewhere else. I don't think there's anyway they can bag anybody."

The student added that those people who are losing are now trying to get their money back.

"It's totally screwed up," she said. "And it's backfiring."

NAACP chairman dies at age 69

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Kelly Alexander Sr., chairman of the National Association for the Advancement of colored people, who survived the bombing of his home by sheer luck on Nov. 22, 1965 died sitting at home Tuesday in Charlotte, N.C.

The long time activist died at age 69, after suffering stomach pains. The cause of death has not yet been determined.

His election last year was the climax of a 47-year struggle for black civil rights. "My objective is for people to love each other and live happily together. I don't think there's any better Utopia than that," he said in an interview last year.

Alexander joined the NAACP in 1938 in an effort to achieve black civil rights through legal demands. His connection with the organization led to successful attempts by angry whites to get their black employees to boycott his family business.

Triple occupancy proposal rejected

By NANCY A. BUKAR
Collegian Staff

In a special meeting last week, the University of Massachusetts Residential Committee rejected a plan of voluntary triple occupancy, proposed by the Swing Space Task Force of the Student Government Association.

Voluntary triples were proposed to alleviate housing shortages on campus and give students the opportunity to live with two, as opposed to one, roommates. Rooms in Northeast and Central Residential Areas with more square feet than other standard double rooms were suggested for voluntary triple spaces.

The proposal had been worked on by a subcommittee of the residential committee before last week's meeting. Changes gave the plan a different purpose, Stacey Roth, SGA co-president said. The proposal was withdrawn at the meeting, Roth said.

Changes had been made in the plan so that it was presented to the committee "with priority displacement in mind," Roth, a founder of the task force said.

"We went around in circles for two and a half hours after six months of work. What we were trying to come up with was an interim cushion while we worked on the main problems of the housing contract. Both students and staff (on the committee) weren't 100 percent happy with the final draft because it wasn't the original plan," Roth said.

"There were the same types of problems...it wasn't going to be a purely voluntary proposal anymore. It was the best we could do at that time," Roth said.

"There were some staff and student concerns about it. Initially, I felt that we should try the voluntary triples but there were a number of issues discussed and no resolution could be reached," Joseph Zannini, director of Housing Services said.

The task force submitted both short-range and long-range goals to Zannini and the residential committee more than a month ago. Short-range goals also included designated alternative living space (swing space) and sophomore exemption from housing.

Long-range plans include the reconversion of Arnold House in Northeast to a residence hall and a reconversion of empty Greek area houses with a possible move of the groups to Fraternity/Sorority park. Arnold House is currently used as office space and classrooms for the Communication Disorders dept., Public Health dept., and the School of Health Sciences.

Zannini originally stated that a response to the group's proposals would be given to Stacey Roth, by March 15. Roth never received a statement.

"I'm hoping to talk to her soon to discuss some of the other proposals," Zannini said. Roth said she will be meeting with Zannini later this week or the beginning of next week.

Roth said she had hoped for the institution of the short-term goals by the fall. "It would have to be done by mid-March in order to implement it by the fall," she said.

UMass funding seeks help

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

Responding to the State Board of Regents' fiscal year 1986 budget proposal, which gives the University of Lowell a larger increase than UMass, the Faculty Senate yesterday passed several motions designed to improve the University's position in funding.

"This report is what the Regents think of us," Otto Stein, a member of the Faculty Senate Program and Budget Council said, referring to a senate report which states that the Amherst campus' share of the overall higher education budget has declined from 27.8 percent to 27.2 percent.

"In just about every category we receive less money than any other institution, without any explanation or justification," Stein said.

The motions, the report states, seek to "prevent erosion of the campus' fiscal base," by redefining the Regents' budget categories and developing a budgetary scheme that enables the University to represent itself "as the most comprehensive unit within the state system of higher education."

Provost Richard O'Brien said the administration supported the motions and will also work to improve the University's position with the Regents.

"We must compare ourselves with the major universities in the country and tell the Regents what we need. It doesn't make sense to be compared on the state level. We must lay claim to our proper place among top universities," O'Brien said.

In other senate action, the senate reviewed its special report on Yvette Henry and voted to delay action on several proposals designed to aid the University in dealing with a crisis situation.

David Booth, chairman of the Rules Committee, suggested that the original wording might be too vague, and that a rewording of the proposals would, "put more bite into the motions."

The senate will vote on the reworded motions at their next meeting.

The motion to change the name of the Department of Communication Studies to the Department of Communication passed unanimously.

BOG votes for ice cream

By VICKI A. SPAGNOLI
Collegian Staff

A student-run ice cream shop will fill the former Union Records Unlimited space in the Student Union after the Campus Center Board of Governors voted in its favor last night at its weekly meeting in the CC.

The ice cream shop proposal, voted on for the second time, was approved by a 13-7 vote. Last week, it was defeated. The proposed ice cream shop would open in September and serve gourmet ice cream, pastries, and cappuccino, BOG member Bob Cohen, who submitted the proposal, said.

"I'm very excited that the BOG has decided to approve a business that will truly serve the student population," Cohen said.

The ice cream shop will use a $4300 loan from the Student Government Association and a $1000 loan from the Graduate Student Senate to complete renovations and supply the capital to open the shop, Cohen said.

"I hope it works," BOG treasurer Fran Hegeler said. "I have mixed feelings about it (the vote); my position was to support the bike co-op. I think there are simply too many problems overlooked. I think the renovation costs (for the ice cream shop) were underestimated."

Two other student organizations came to the meeting with proposals for the URU space.

Fifteen members of the 25 member bicycle co-op were present at the meeting to support their proposal. The bike co-op, which is a non-profit student service, wanted the URU space because their present space, across from the Post Office in the SU is too small, bike co-op president Michelle Desaullniers said.

"I'm very disappointed with their decision," Desaullniers said. "I feel like they missed a lot of the points that we were trying to make. They were talking about money and profit and that's not the point we were trying to make. Our point is to serve the common student who doesn't have money for an expensive service."

The sports co-op "Teamworks" withdrew its proposal because they felt the URU space was too large for their inventory, co-manager Stephen Zito said.

Dispute raised on drinking age

By JEFF BAKER
Collegian Correspondent

Eighteen is the ideal drinking age for the University of Massachusetts campus and raising the legal age from 20 to 21 will do little to reduce drunk driving, according to Carlene Riccelli, coordinator of the Alcohol Education Committee at UMass.

Riccelli and Attorney Jill Franks of legal services addressed a group of 20 students and resident assistants on the laws and liabilities of alcohol use earlier this week in the Campus Center.

"The combination of the inexperienced driver and drinker is a major factor in many drunk driving accidents," Riccelli said. Raising the drinking age from 20 to 21 is inconsequential, he said. If you want to do something (to reduce drunk driving) the age should be raised to 30."

"Alcohol affects a person's judgment first. Someone may not feel like they are drunk but if their blood alcohol level is above 0.10 they are legally drunk in this state," Riccelli said.

If taken in by police for drunk driving, Franks advises taking the Breathalyzer test. "You must be given the opportunity to take a Breathalyzer," she said. "the police have to wait 20 minutes to administer the Breathalyzer so that the alcohol in your mouth can dissipate. The Breathalyzer is very accurate."

Riccelli believes "the major problem is that there is too much concentration on the drinking age controversy. There should be more concentration on educating people towards the effect alcohol has on driving and judgment, as well as focused on the drinking age.

"Today, people are thinking more about getting into a car drunk. Teen agers and problem drinkers however are less likely to think about getting into a car drunk. Those are the people that have to be reached," she said.

Activist says U.S. plans first strike strategy

By MICHELLE SEGALL
Collegian Staff

The United States has been preparing a policy to strike first at the Soviet Union since the Carter Administration and President Reagan's Star Wars policy is the final phase of that policy, a journalist/activist said yesterday.

C. Clark Kissinger, who covered the State Department and military affairs for the Revolutionary Worker publication, spoke at the Campus Center in a colloquium sponsored by the STPEC, Social Thought and Political Economy department.

"Carter and Mondale created a series of well thought out steps to prepare us for nuclear confrontation," Kissinger said. These included evacuation plans for national leaders.

The first strike policy is known as decapitation which would, "Paralyze the body (of the Soviet Union) by cutting off the head," he said.

The American nuclear warheads are strategically targeted at soviet command, control, communications and intelligence facilities, according to Kissinger.

"In the type of war we're talking about, the majority of destruction would take place between 45 minutes and two hours," the journalist said.

President Reagan's Star Wars policy is the final phase of our first strike strategy, Kissinger said. "Star Wars has become a codeword for first strike and has never been intended to be a total defense, no matter how much its defenders claim otherwise."

In military terms, the first strike strategy is the most viable, Kissinger said, because there is less risk. "When the choice is a desperate gamble on war or losing everything . we choose the gamble."

U.S. leaders are willing to accept major losses for the sake of winning a nuclear war, he said. Kissinger claims in his article "Compulsion for Mass Murder," 140 million would die in a general nuclear exchange contrary to the estimate of 20 million dead if the U.S. successfully struck first.

To counteract the threat of nuclear war, Kissinger said, "We need to puncture the stifling atmosphere that exists today. We knew it (nuclear war) was possible. Now we must face the fact it's probable." Kissinger said a nuclear war will probably break out in two to four years.

"The forces that oppose war have not risen to the occasion in this country," he said. "We are living, essentially, in a pre-war period."

Kissinger also organized the first National March on Washington to end the war in Vietnam in 1965.

Study Medicine in ISRAEL

Touro College will prepare you to earn an M.D. in Israel from one of the world's great universities – Technion-Israel Institute of Technology

Touro College, through its Center for Biomedical Education, and the Technion Faculty of Medicine, offer an intensive program leading to the M.D. degree. If you are a qualified student who has completed the traditional pre-med requirements, you may receive a second baccalaureate degree from Touro, and an M.D. from the Technion, after a total of four years plus one year of advanced clinical rotations in Israel.

Initially, you'll spend 18 months at the beautiful Huntington, Long Island, New York campus of Touro College. Courses include advanced sciences and intensive study of Hebrew.

Following successful completion of the Touro phase, you become eligible for advanced standing at the Technion Faculty of Medicine in Israel, where you will satisfy the 32 months of study at medical school required for licensure in the United States. You must successfully complete a bridging program, to be accepted for clinical studies, then submit a thesis and take advanced rotations before receiving the M.D. degree.

Applications are now being accepted for the third entering class. For applications and information call or write:

A success at Whitmore

Sometimes, confrontation is necessary. For the purpose of blunting the University administration's attacks on student rights, it was — and it worked.

This week's three-night occupation of an office in the Whitmore Administration Building by dozens of students came about after some of those students had spent months trying to make administrators understand that we deserve control over where our money goes and a say in how much we pay.

The agreement signed yesterday afternoon by leaders of the group calling itself the April 1st Coalition and by the University's provost and two vice chancellors puts to rest the galling proposal by one of those vice chancellors, John L. DeNyse, to dissolve the Campus Center Board of Governors. It also promises students stronger input into the Student Activities Office, and by securing a University commitment to raise teaching assistant stipends it may ease the impact of the Universal Resource Fee on graduate students.

Productive negotiations may also finally take place concerning UMass' investments in companies that are thought to do business with racist-ruled South Africa, now that students will discuss the issue with President David C. Knapp rather than continue futile attempts to engage the University's secretive treasurer, Robert H. Brand.

Bravo for those who, when frustration came to a head over administrators' apparent intransigence, effectively demonstrated their commitment to keeping student empowerment an integral element of this institution.

Random notes —

What really is the extent of your faith?

Here it is: another fine holiday brought to you by...Hallmark. Easter has become a pagan rite of spring, with bunnies and colored eggs and pretty people in pretty clothes going into pretty churches trying to look pious. It seems a neurotic way to remember the Son of God being hanged in a grisly fashion and rising from the dead hours later.

I can understand why so many people say that faith doesn't deal in reality. It's understandable because so many of the "faithful" confuse faith with ignorance. Pop quiz: what is the only reason the New Testament gives for going to heaven? Answer is later in the column. Experience shows that most of the "faithful" on campus will fail this quiz, even after several guesses.

When ignorant faith meets reality, a person can do one of three things: become a hermit, get more neurotic or compromise. Compromise seems to be the most popular of the choices. People in many churches have readily embraced a number of practices called abominations in the Bible: legalized prostitution, state-run gambling (lotteries), no-fault divorce, abortion, the occult, 50 percent tax rates, even drugs. It proves a statement made by Bill Gothard: if you don't believe the Bible, your morals will almost always determine your theology.

A number of people recognize the weakness of ignorant faith and choose disillusionment. America is geared up for disillusionment in a big way with Santa Claus, the Tooth Fairy, and the Easter Bunny. After a good, hard look at the powerless, uninspired lives of many religious leaders, disillusioned kids grow into disillusioned adults. Frankly, I would probably do the same in their shoes.

However, Christianity doesn't owe its existence to Easter bunnies or rituals or people brainwashed into habitual obeisance. In fact, all of the good teachings of the church are powerless by themselves: living a good life, prayer, going to church, taking communion, or baptism all fail the quiz. The only power the church can rightfully offer believers is that (pop quiz answer) Jesus Christ paid the only acceptable penalty for sins with his death, and that he was resurrected as proof of God's power over sin and death.

One meaning of this is that by themselves, no one is worthy in God's sight, that each is totally wrong-headed and deceived. That's a pretty offensive statement. Well-meaning church-goers tend to water it down or candy-coat it. What they fail to realize is that New Testament theology is basically worthless if Jesus didn't die miserably on a cross, because old habits and attitudes have to die just as completely. The reason people are "born again" is that when they become Christians, they have to learn to think in totally different ways and learn different attitudes and priorities. They can't do that unless they reject the old ways and start from scratch. This is supposed to build a relationship, not a religion, with the Creator. My personal experience is that nothing else even comes close to turning a rotten life around.

It's kind of hard to package a relationship with God, although a lot of churches have tried; witness the number of rituals performed for bored congregations. And Sunday, if and when you put on your duds and eat your jellybeans, and go to the service at the building of your choice, ask yourself what informs your faith.

A bunny's tale of death

John Yonce

This could be called an Easter bunny story. It's about cute, fun, fluffy bunnies. But this is one story without a happy ending. This is a story about dead bunnies.

These bunnies are domesticated bunnies, raised for human consumption. In a sense, these bunnies are lucky bunnies, because before they die, they get to go along on Army ROTC winter survival exercises.

Army ROTC offers a number of "Field Training Exercises" during the year, open to UMass students. Students can sign up for two of these exercises, and receive a graded credit for the semester. One or two students who went on these exercises said it was a guaranteed A. Major David G. Sim of ROTC said this was not true and that some students have flunked.

Back to those silly rabbits. The winter survival exercise, conducted in Sunderland, trains ROTC members and interested students how to survive off the land until they can "make it back to civilization." Skills learned include shelter construction, fire building and you guessed it, trapping and preparation of wild animals for food. The group brings along about five or six rabbits, according to one person who went on the exercise, and demonstrates how to kill them by crushing the spine. Unfortunately, sometimes bunnies don't cooperate and refuse to die on the first attempt. Sometimes, one person said, other methods beside breaking the rabbit's neck must be used, like breaking its head.

Lynn Peebles, of the Springfield Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and the SPCA investigated the ROTC exercises after "we had received some complaints."

"Not that we agree with it, but everything they did is completely legal," Peebles said. As long as the rabbits are killed painlessly, there's nothing the SPCA can do, she said.

Sim says that the killing of the rabbits doesn't usually upset anyone, and if it does they may be excused from participating in that part of the exercise.

"I don't think anybody was upset this time," he said. Asked if this meant people had been upset in the past, he said no.

"They know what's going on before they go out there," Sim said.

One student said he didn't know what was going to happen, and said the incident was "really disgusting." The student did not wish to be identified because he has yet to receive a grade for the exercise.

"They were domesticated rabbits and really nice things," he said. "There were a lot of people upset by it," he said.

"Their opinion is that it has to be done, I guess they feel you need the experience of killing, skinning and cooking the rabbit. It's like saying you should go out and kill people to get the experience of killing them."

"If we were really out there and had to do it to survive, it would be one thing. But we weren't."

Now, dead bunnies may not seem all that important to some people in light of fiscal crises and other headline issues, but it may be something to think about while watching the Peter Cottontail TV special this weekend.

Need to deal with 'facts'

Rashid Sheedfor, in a column titled "Israeli Savagery with No Strings," used inaccurate and misleading information to condemn Israeli policy and actions in Southern Lebanon.

If Sheedfor had truly been concerned with the abuse of "basic humanitarian principles," such vital issues as poverty and starvation in Africa or the continual threat of global nuclear war might have been addressed. Instead, Sheedfor chose to use the opinion page of the Collegian as a vehicle to promote propaganda, expressing a personal biased opinion toward Israel as if it were a fact. This is unacceptable.

In order to truly understand the situation in Lebanon, we must deal with the facts. In the column, Sheedfor condemned Israel for preventing reporters from entering certain areas under Israeli occupation and for the death of two CBS newsmen. That these two men were killed is, without a doubt, a terrible tragedy. But we must look at the facts.

The war in Lebanon has deteriorated into a situation involving constant guerrila warfare, the most dangerous and unpredictable type of warfare. Over 200 U.S. marines were killed when a terrorist rammed a truck full of explosives into the American embassy, and many Israeli soldiers have died because of surprise terrorist attacks. All of these tragic events have irrevocably proven that no area in Lebanon, no matter how well guarded, is safe from terrorist attacks.

With such an environment prevailing, the Israelis should be commended for their efforts to keep reporters out of these unsafe areas, not condemned as Sheedfor would like. Unfortunately, despite attempts to restrain them, two CBS reporters did enter an extremely dangerous area. As a result, when mistaken for terrorists, they were killed. We are all very sorry this happened. The Israelis are sorry it happened. But I have to wonder. Is Rashid Sheedfor sorry?

Police Academy: Their First Assignment
Directed by Jerry Paris
Starring Steve Guttenberg & Bubba Smith
At the Mt. Farm Cinemas

By JASON TALERMAN
Collegian Staff

It is certainly possible to give my entire review of Police Academy II, starring Steve Guttenberg, in one sentence. However, the sadist that gave me this movie to review probably expects a bit more than one sentence. Said he: "Great Jason, I'll call for the passes...We've even got a photo to run with the review," and then he scurried away, giggling. He was probably still laughing as I was waiting in the rain, for the bus, after the movie.

It escapes me why a producer would spend millions of dollars on a film when he could have just as easily pieced together clips from the Love Boat, at the minimal cost of renting a couple of VCRs, and arrived at the same results; turning the same generous profit. The sole unifying link between the myriads of Love Boatsan subplots in Police Academy II was supposed to be Steve Guttenberg. Steve who?

The way I figure it is that the producers tried to deal for Bill Murray but had no such luck; they gave Chevy Chase a ring but his price was too high; they dropped Michael Keaton a line who was also onto bigger and better things; they finally reached Tom Hanks' secretary who said that he was busy in the making of Splash II. "Why worry," said the producers, "This is Hollywood." Faced with no lead character they simply invented Steve Guttenberg. He can't act, can't tell jokes, and can't hold a cast together but he almost looks good doing it. Yet he and his 'Dukes of Hazard meet Three's Company' cast, led by Bubba Smith (who disappointingly didn't throw one punch), clean up the city, humiliate corrupt police officials, and make thousands of rednecks all over the country laugh hysterically. It's a mystery to me.

Police Academy: Part II plays at the Mt. Farm Cinemas

It's hard to believe that I chose this movie to review out of the three that were presented to me. If I had chosen Porky's Revenge at least I would have seen some 'good' low taste nudity, and geez, I heard that Holly Hobbie makes a scintillating cameo in The Care Bears...

Program a success

By KIMBERLY BURGE
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts program for first generation and low income high school students has seen 80 to 90 percent of its participants go on to post-secondary schools, according to Bryant Lewis, assistant director of Upward Bound.

Upward Bound emphasizes the development of skills, self-confidence and a positive attitude toward life and education to foster an interest in the high school students to attend college.

The program targets students from the Springfield, Amherst, Holyoke, Pittsfield, North Adams areas of Western Massachusetts.

Upward Bound has two phases according to Lewis, a summer program and a follow up. "The summer phase is the kick off where students develop the skills and the motivation necessary to enter college. The follow up phase consists of community outreach services such as counseling, workshops, and help in course selection," Lewis said.

Potential students are recruited by Upward Bound students, guidance counselors, parents, and public service announcements.

Students are screened from their applications, school transcript, and letters of recommendations from their teachers and anyone else who is familiar with the student's academic record.

Once students are accepted into the program, they are brought to the University to live on campus for six weeks. They are required to take three courses, two of which emphasize the development of effective reading, writing, and math skills. The third course is chosen by the student from a variety of electives.

"Students can either take classes to get ahead in their course work or make up credit that they have lost during the previous year," Lewis said.

As part of the Upward Bound program, Bridge students (who are seniors bridging the gap between high school and college), "have the opportunity to take two three credit courses, receive credit, and be able to transfer those credits to any two or four year college," he said.

Mark N. Matthews, principal of Taconic High School said he "personally consider(s) the Upward Bound program one of the more practical and functional agencies in the community," he added, "It serves not only as an educational component, but more importantly, a source of identification and pride for the people who utilize its resources."

Upward Bound in Amherst 1984 poses for a group shot in Southwest recently.

Lewis says, "Upward Bound is different from the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Blacks and Other Minorities and the Bilingual Collegiate Program summer program because we target high school students and serve as a feeder program for CCEBMS and BCP.

Lewis said he "would like to see the program become institutionalized. I would like the university to support the program and provide more services such as free housing," said Lewis.

He also wishes the program could reach more students. "Presently, we serve about seventy students but a greater population needs to be reached."

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Supporters of the Federation of South African Trade Unions and United Democratic Front carry union leader Moses Mayekiso on their shoulders during a march in Johannesburg, Wednesday. The unionists, singing songs of freedom, were celebrating the provisional withdrawal of subversion charges against Mayekiso by a Johannesburg magistrate.

★ Alexander

He dedicated a large portion of his life to end the evil of segregation. During the early 1960s, he fought to intergrate restaurants and hotels in Charlotte, N.C.

He was also behind the Swann vs. Charlotte-Meckelenburg Board of Education, a 1969 landmark U.S. Supreme Court decision opening the way for busing to intergrate schools.

Alexander was also instrumental in other lawsuits to open opportunities for blacks in long-distance trucking.

Alexander is described by Julius Chambers, director-counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund as "a father in the movement." Chamber added, "Kelly was never that big on open demonstrations. He preferred sitting down and getting people to reason. If he engaged in any loud protest at all, it was only after efforts to sit down and negotiate had failed."

Correction

Due to an editing error in Tuesday's Black Affairs section, Chong Yu, co-coordinator of the Third World Women's Program at the EveryWoman's Center was incorrectly cited as being an immigrant from North Korea when in fact she is a native of South Korea.

Due to the error, she is concerned about being framed as a communist. In South Korea, a human rights activist is often framed as communist or an agent from North Korea. Often time they are arrested, tortured or jailed at maximum of 15 years up to death row. Their family and friends are also affected by their activist work.

"One of the most exciting concert films ever. David Byrne is a star of near maniacal intensity. The Talking Heads get down and burn." —David Ansen, Newsweek

Gazelles punish Northeastern, 22-2

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

It has been a tough season for Northeastern University's women's lacrosse team. And they have only played four games. They have not won games and in that fourth game yesterday the Huskies were steamrollered 22-2 by the University of Massachusetts, led by senior attacker Pam Moryl's nine goals.

"This is our first year as coaches and we are just trying to save the program," NU coach Joan Broderick said. "When we took it over we were in jeopardy of losing what program we do have. We've literally been dragging people out of the dorms to play for us. Today we were missing a couple of our better players because they are field hockey players who didn't know they were going to be playing lacrosse and had made other plans."

The UMass offense devastated NU and Huskie goalie Patti McCarty. The Gazelles started the game by simply scoring at will then proceeded to use the game as a chance to work on specific facets of their attack. The UMass defense received little pressure all day as Gazelle midfielders continually prevented Huskie forwards from bringing the ball past the mid-field mark.

"A game like this gives the inexperienced players a chance to play for a long time and that does not happen very often," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "We also had a chance to work on game situations that we will use against the stronger teams we will be playing later on in the season. There's nothing like game experience."

UMass jumped out to a seven goal lead in the first seven minutes of the contest with goals by Moryl, Bunny Forbes, Ginny Armstrong (two in succession), two more from Moryl, and another from Armstrong.

In those seven minutes NU only managed to come within scoring range once. Through out the remainder of the half UMass got three more goals from Moryl, three from Liz Schuler, and one from Becky Bekampis.

Tina Dunphy scored for NU on a penalty shot with one minute to go in the half. In the second half Moryl continued demonstrating the abilities that have made her an All-American and one of UMass' most prolific scorers as she tallied three more goals. Bekampis scored two more while Mary Scott put in her first two. Schuler added another.

Again, it was tenacious Dunphy scoring for NU. She put in the Huskie's second goal on a strong third effort with nine seconds left in the game. Dunphy's efforts epitomized an NU team that, although badly beaten, refused to give up.

"It was a tough game for us," said Broderick. "But the second half did not equal the first- we did somewhat better. We kept hustling to the best of our ability. We're fighters, we'll be back. Remember John Thompson was 3-23 at Georgetown when he first took over that program and look where he is today," Borderick said.

"You always have to come up with brightness somewhere," Broderick added.

UM lax and baseball face key weekend games

Softball at Rutgers today for two

By PETER ABRAHAM

The last thing the coach of a lacrosse team that has struggled on defense needs to find out is that his goaltender has a separated shoulder.

But that's the dilemma University of Massachusetts coach Dick Garber will face as his Gorillas host Rutgers Saturday at 1 p.m. with Gerry Moreau.

Moreau took a hit in Wednesday's 13-9 loss to Cornell and according to Garber, could miss up to two weeks. Freshmen Charlie Moores and Paul McCarty are competing to replace Moreau. Garber said he may split the game between the two frosh.

In other UMass action, the baseball team (6-7 and 3-1 since their Florida trip) is in Philadelphia for three games with St. Joseph's University. The softball team (8-9-1) is at Rutgers for a Friday doubleheader.

The men's and women's track teams open their season with the men hosting Dartmouth on Saturday at noon and the women at the Rhode Island invitationals.

Garber and the Gorillas (1-1) have expressed concern with the overall team defense, which has allowed 26 goals in two games.

"It's a problem, sure," the coach said. "I think we can overcome it. Rutgers is a tough team, they're very aggressive and strong, so it will be a challenge for us."

Sophomore attackman Tom Carmean leads the team with four goals and assists. Senior Tom Lukacovic also has four goals.

The baseball team has looked impressive since returning from an error-filled trip to Florida. Righthander Jim Knopf (2-1, 1.65 earned run average) will go in the Friday game for UMass against the Hawks. Freshmen Steve Allen and Matt Sheran are penciled in for the Saturday doubleheader. The three Atlantic 10 Conference games are important for the Minutemen, who at 2-1 in the league, can take over first place with two wins.

"I'd like to take the first one and then give the doubleheader a shot," coach Dick Bergquist said. "St. Joe's is supposed to be tough and I'm hoping we'll hit the ball well and get good enough pitching to win."

St. Joe's is 8-11 on the season and 1-2 in the conference. Ed Barryman at .342 is their best hitter. Jeff Cimini leads UMass at the plate at .356 with 10 runs batted in and a homer. Angelo Salustri is at .340 with two homers and 12 RBIs. Todd Comeau is hitting .341 with 11 RBIs.

The UMass softball team, 5-1 since coming back from their South Carolina trip, face Rutgers in an important Atlantic 10 doubleheader today at 2 p.m. in Piscataway, N.J.

"Rutgers always will be tough and always has been," coach Elaine Sortino said. "Coming off a two-game sweep (of Providence) we are going into the game with a positive frame of mind."

Shortstop Paige Kopcza will be out for at least another week with a fractured arm. Freshman Alisa Fila ("great job vs. Providence," Sortino said) is filling in the pivot.

UMass attackman Bubba Sandford (4) and the lacrosse team host Rutgers Saturday at 1 p.m.

UMass, 8-9-1, 1-0 in the conference, is led on the mound by Lynn Stockley (4-4, 0.37 ERA, 39 K's and four shutouts) and freshman Lisa Rever (3-1-1, 0.69). Junior Cathy Reed is struggling at 1-4, 2.87. Sortino did not announce the starters for today's games.

Golf team opens with victory

The University of Massachusetts golf team opened its season by beating American International, Springfield and the Coast Guard in matches held at the Oak Ridge Country Club on Monday.

Tim Smith led UMass with a 73 on the par 70 course as Bill Conley also medaled with a 74.

"It was a good opening for us," UMass coach Jack Leaman said. "We had four golfers in the 70's, which is pretty impressive considering that only two other people from the other teams accomplished that."

Alan Vorce was next for the Minutemen, now 3-0 as the match gives them victories over all three schools, with a 76. Charles Ross carded a 78 with Joe Petrin coming in with a 82.

Tyler Shearer had an 83 as UMass totaled a 380 team score.

The Coast Guard was second with a 405, Springfield took third with 432 and American International was last, falling to 0-6 with a 434 outing, putting two golfers in the 70's, but putting the remaining three scorers in the 90's.

"Tim (Smith) and Bill (Conley) had good days for us, they're pretty consistent," Leaman said.

The Minutemen's next match will be Saturday at the Yale Invitationals in New Haven before facing Connecticut and Springfield at Storrs next Wednesday.

Lesbian, Gay Awareness week underway today

Survey reveals 'astounding' frequency of homophobic acts

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

Editors note: This is the first in a five part series examining gay, lesbian and bisexual students at UMass. Today's story focuses on homophobia and heterosexism.

"When incidents of violence and homophobia occur, it doesn't hurt the victim, it sends a clear message to the whole of the community of what's acceptable or unacceptable behavior, what are the attitudes we stand behind and what aren't, and it creates a social climate that really impinges on everybody's freedom." (Lesbian woman student)

"One of the greatest sadnesses in my life is to see other people where I was only two recently, and knowing what they have to go through to get to the other side of it, because of all that homophobia and hatred out there that takes a continuous daily toll." (Gay male student)

These comments are taken from a "speak out" recorded in November 1984 when members of the UMass gay, Lesbian, bisexual and heterosexual allied community gathered to document their experiences after a number of homophobic incidents on campus last semester.

As a result of these incidents, which included a "heterosexuals fight back" march and plans to hang a homosexual student in effigy, gay, lesbian and bisexual students met with Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Dennis Madson, to demand the administration's support and action.

In response, Madson appointed human relations planner and advocate, Felice Yeskel, to collect data which will include the "speak out," concerning homosexual students' needs, experiences and concerns. Yeskel, commenting on the results of a pilot survey she conducted early Award-winning films and prominent speakers will be featured in the second-annual Gay Awareness Week, beginning tonight in the Campus Center with a lecture given by Brian McNaught.

McNaught, former liaison to Boston's gay community in the administration of Mayor Kevin White and national lecturer, will address "what every heterosexual would like to know about gay and lesbian concerns," according to Vicky Pillard, Lesbian and Gay Awareness Trainer for Residential Education East, and director of Gay Awareness Week.

"This week is not only for lesbians and gays," Pillard said, "we are reaching out to educate the heterosexual community."

On April 9, author and gay activist Barbara Smith will examine the oppression of black gay men and lesbians, in addition to the concerns of blacks and women.

"One of the focal points of this year's Awareness Week is to look at the connections between various oppressions," Pillard said.

The Academy-Award winner for Best Documentary of 1985, The Times of Harvey Milk, a film about the first openly-gay elected city supervisor, will be shown on April 12 and 14. Milk was assassinated in 1977 with San Francisco Mayor George Moscone in what Pillard said was partly "an anti-gay gesture".

"It's an excellent, excellent film," John Jablonski, President of the Lesbian, Bi-Sexual and Gay Alliance said, "it shows that change can happen and you can make it happen."

This year's Gay Awareness Week, with a budget double that of 1984, will also offer panel discussions, including the April 9 forum, "Sexuality, Gender and Culture", featuring Amherst College administrator Catherine Bateson.

"I'm fairly confident this week will be a success," Pillard said, "the size of this year's event reflects on the accomplishments of last year."

Ex-Collegian reporter may win Pulitzer

By LORI KIRKLAND
Collegian Correspondent

Journalistic studies graduate Mark Vogler has not mellowed since his "muckraking" days at the University of Massachusetts when he was responsible for uncovering one University scandal after another. Vogler's investigative prowess may win him a Pulitzer Prize this spring.

Since leaving the University in 1974, Vogler has worked for 13 newspapers nationwide, most recently The News Chief in Winter Haven, Florida, where he uncovered problems in the Florida public school system which has resulted in his nomination for a Pulitzer Prize.

"I was doing a background check on schoolteachers and discovered dozens of cases where convicted felons, child molesters, sex offenders, and drug pushers were hired to teach in the system," Vogler said. His investigation and the following stories in The News Chief resulted in a bill being passed in Florida that requires teaching applicants to be fingerprinted before they are employed.

The Pulitzer Prize is given every year for outstanding work in journalism and the arts. There are 11 journalism categories. The prizes are awarded by the trustees of Columbia University.

While at UMass, Voiger said he "majored in the Collegian" and uncovered a story of theft in the dining commons. "In the dorm I heard about little old ladies who worked in the D.C. were walking out every night with plastic bags of food. The University was blaming the rip-offs on the students and they were going to raise the Town to seek student votes for local seats

By JOYCE REILLY
Collegian Correspondent

The town of Amherst will elect 80 of its 240 Town Meeting members Tuesday, April 9 and many are seeing the need for student involvement in the election.

Paul Wingel, a sophomore political science major, said that students need empowerment in Amherst. "The town gains from us economically and culturally and we are not given the equivalent amount of power politically in town affairs.

Wingel said of the importance of student involvement in Amherst's government, "Students live in this town nine months of the year and they depend on the resources of this town more than those of their hometown."

In 1954, the town of Amherst adopted the town management form of government. There are 30 members in each precinct and each year the town elects one third of those seats.

According to Estelle Matusko, Amherst town manager, this form of government tends to run more effecienty than open meetings. "It limits confusion and makes voting more manageable," she said.

Amherst is large enough to run under the city council system, Matusko said , "yet the town manager system offers the last vestiges of democracy."

Anyone registered to vote in the town of Amherst is eligible to run for Town Meeting.

Amherst residents may vote at the following locations: precinct one - North Amherst Congregational Church; precinct two - North Amherst Fire Station; precinct three - the Lutheran Church; precinct four and five Bangs Center; precinct six - Fort River School ; precinct seven - Crocker Farm School; precinct eight - Munson Library.

Gorbachev orders a deployment halt

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet Leader Mikhail Gorbachev said he wants to meet with President Reagan and has ordered a halt until November in Soviet deployment of medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe, the official news agency Tass reported yesterday.

Gorbachev said the Soviet Union's decision on further missile deployment after that time "depends on whether the United States follows our example: Will it stop or not the deployment of its intermediate-range missiles in Europe."

Tass quoted the new Soviet leader as making the statements in an interview with the Communist Party newspaper Pravda. It did not say when the interview was conducted, or indicate a publication date.

In Santa Barbara, Calif., where Reagan is vacationing, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said, "If they want a freeze, fine. It's not enough."

Speakes said the Soviet Union already has a 10-1 missile advantage in Europe and the Gorbachev plan would not affect scheduled deployment of American missiles. "Stability requires that a balanced be established at the least possible level," he said.

He said Gorbachev's statement did not go beyond what he had conveyed privately to Reagan and that negotiations will get under way at some point for the first top-level superpower talks in six years.

Vice President George Bush carried a letter from Reagan to Gorbachev when he attended the March 13 funeral in Moscow of President Konstantin U. Chernenko. The White House disclosed the letter invited the new Soviet leader to the United States. Reagan has indicated he would be willing to meet Gorbachev at the opening of the U.N. General Assembly in September.

Airplane crash survivor vows to use ferry more

NANTUCKET, Mass. (AP)- One of seven passangers who hitched a ride away from the wreckage of a fiery plane crash said yesterday he will take the ferry, rather than fly, the next time he travels off-island.

"It was not particularly the way I like to start my Saturday night," Karl Readel, 25, said about his ordeal aboard a Piper Navajo twin-engine plane.

The craft crashed in fog Saturday night, sheared off tree-tops and came to rest, burning about 500 feet from Runway 24 of Nantucket Memorial Airport about 6:15 p.m. The cause was under investigation.

Readel, six other passengers, and the pilot walked away from the burning plane and hitched a ride in a pickup truck to Nantucket Cottage Hospital.

Three people remained hospitalized yesterday in stable condition, according to hospital administrator Mark Ellsworth. They were Donna Mayo, 15, and Isaac and June Harter, 76 and 74, respectively, all of Nantucket. Ellsworth and state police said they suffered cuts, burns and bruises.

The Will's Air Flight 938, en route to Nantucket from Boston after a stop in Hyannis, met "minor turbulence and fog" at 2,000 feet and its fuel tanks caught fire after the crash, according to a state police report. "It really got so rough I thought we'd go back to Hyannis," Readel, reached at his home Sunday, said of his rough ride.

SSAM votes set 'mandate'

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students who voted 6 to 1 in recent referenda to approve the State Student Association's membership as an official representative of the student body and Student Government Association, sent a clear message that students want their interests pursued, according to SSAM chairman Barry Wray.

Wray, a UMass junior engineering major, said the student vote "is a strong mandate from the students for groups such as ourselves to safeguard their interests in the state." He added that the Board of Trustees has to approve by June the referendum calling for a $1 increase in the Student Activities Fee that will go towards the operation of SSAM.

SSAM is a non-profit student advocacy organization comprised of student government associations from the State's public institutions. SSAM's primary purpose is to advocate for high quality, low cost higher education and to ensure student participation in the process.

Wray said the passage of the referendum will enable the association to "assure that there is student input into student concerns between the different state offices," like the governor's office, the Board of Trustees, and the State Legislature.

Wray said he thinks students want groups such as SSAM to protect their interests on the state level. He added, "We need to have open rhetoric on this. We don't need education to be political," because last year, "people suffered in one way or another."

Michael Ferrigno, executive director of SSAM in Boston, said the student approval "indicates that SSAM has broad grassroots support." He added, "students have an idea of what we're all about and that we are worth it."

Cyclists may have own path to follow

By STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

Warm weather and bicycles may soon enable Amherst area residents to safely and comfortably avoid the congestion on Route 9 when traveling to Northampton.

A step towards planned construction of a bicycle path, running through Amherst, Hadley and Northampton, occurred with the purchase by the state of a 9.6 mile strip of land running parallel to Route 9, according to Daniel O'Brien, the trails planner for the state Department of Environmental Management.

The department, which bought the land from the Boston and Maine Railroad Company for $400,000, is organizing a local advisory board to plan for construction of the path "hopefully beginning by the end of the year", Carroll Holmes, the department's regional supervisor said.

The two-lane path, which will be paved and connected to existing town-operated bicycle paths in Amherst and Northampton, may cross the Connecticut River at a 1,500 foot steel railroad bridge, Holmes said.

It's an old design bridge, and it would be kind of a shame if we couldn't use it," he said.

If the railroad bridge, which was last used by the Boston and Maine Railroad about 2 years ago, is determined unsafe, the path will cross over the Calvin Coolidge Memorial Bridge, Holmes said.

When the advisory board completes a design, construction of the path will begin under the Northampton Department of Public Works office at an estimated cost of $90,000 a mile, O'Brien said.

"We are hoping we can get cooperation from Hadley, Amherst and Northampton to expedite the project," he said.

The advisory board, which consists of representatives from the Pioneer Valley Planning Commission and the towns of Amherst, Hadley, Belchertown and Northampton, will also plan for the construction of the "five-college bike trail", what the department unoffically calls a proposal to connect campuses of the five-college system.

According to Holmes' estimation, the Amherst-Northampton trail, would probably end one quarter of a mile from the intersection of University Drive and Route 9. But he said there was a possibility that the trail may be connected to the UMass campus at University Drive.

The state purchased the Boston and Maine Railroad property with money from a $2 million fund for land purchase and design of trails, O'Brien said.

Campus Center room flooded

Water flooded a 10th floor Campus Center room after a firehose on the 11th floor was turned on Thursday night, University of Massachusetts police said.

Police said the hose was turned on in the east stairwell and one quarter of an inch of water filled the 10th floor room.

In other police news: A Domino's pizza deliverer was arrested Thursday night while on his way to deliver pizzas to students waiting at the Fine Arts Center to buy concert tickets.

The 19-year-old man was arrested on a motor vehicle warrant from the state police after campus police stopped him for running a stop sign.

A 19-year-old Brown House resident was placed in protective custody after police found him passed out in a car Thursday night. Police said the man had been playing drinking games with his friends and that he was not sure how much he had drunk. Also, a 20-year-old man was placed in protective custody after he started a fight on the second floor of Greenough House. Police said the man would not listen to anyone and had to be restrained.

last month, said the figures on homophobic acts and harassment are "astounding" and that "the problem was more severe than anyone had guessed."

A 1983 report of the Committee on Issues of Sexual Orientation, comprised of members of the Office of Human Relations, staff and students, cited examples of difficulties faced by gays and lesbians on the campus:

- In the residence halls gay and lesbian students are subjected to verbal abuse and defacement of their doors, walls and property.
- Students at gay and lesbian events regularly contend with abuse from other students.
- Posters advertising lesbian and gay events are immediately torn down when posted on campus.
- In some professor's classrooms, gay and lesbian students are subjected to derogatory remarks unrelated to course content.

Yeskel said homophobia is "the fear and hatred of homosexuals and homosexuality because of those feelings in ourselves or for other people who might have them," compounded by fear and hatred "for people who act outside stereotypical sexual norms."

She said if a woman is "too aggressive, too confident and too independant" she is subject to abuse, "not because she is a lesbian, but because her behaviour is seen as inappropriate for a woman."

Sue Mahoney, a lesbian student, agreed that homophobia arises because some people are unable to cope with behaviour that "challenges their whole heterosexual existence."

She recalled walking across campus and being the victim of abusive remarks because she was holding her lover's hands. "We let go even though we knew we were right," she said, adding "although you get really angry, it does have an impact on changing your behaviour.

"I was walking near campus holding a purple balloon and this man passed and said 'fucking queer' like he was really angry," recalled a lesbian student who requested to remain unnamed.

"It made me feel frightened to death, vulnerable and scared," she said, adding that he probably acted that way because her behaviour was "a threat to the stereotypes and myths so ingrained in us."

Yeskel said homophobia is the force that lies behind "heterosexism" which she defines as "a systematic set of attitudes beliefs and behaviours that give privilege to heterosexuality as the best or only form of sexual orientation."

She suggested that as heterosexism is backed by the social, political and cultural institutions in our society, this "results in unequal treatment, discrimination and harassment for gays, lesbians and bisexuals and superior treatment for heterosexuals."

Yeskel commented that although homophobia and heterosexism are similar to other forms of oppression such as racism and sexism they remain more legitimate and acceptable and even "like a sport in certain quarters."

Robert Janssen, a bisexual male student, remarking on such acts, said "it's upsetting and frightening that people can feel so angry at something that is so natural to me. They don't know me but they want to kill me."

Janssen said that homophobic acts arise when people are "fighting their own insecurity with their sexuality." He cited as an example an incident that occured when he smiled at a man on a bus and the man called him a "faggot." "It was so obvious he had an interest he had to say something against it," he said.

"I think we live in a sexually ignorant society in which healthy discussion of sexuality is discouraged," said Brian McNaught, in a telephone interview. McNaught, former Liason for Gay and Lesbian concerns in Mayor of Boston Kevin White's administration, will speak tonight in Campus Center room 165 as part of Gay and Lesbian Awareness week.

Tomorrow's story will focus on how adequately gay, lesbian and bisexual students see the university meeting their needs.

board fee, so we got a photo of these ladies with the bags and put it on the front page," he said.

"The UMass cops did an investigation and made a statement that there was no evidence of any kind of ripoff," he said.

Vogler said that there was a potential law suit and some of the workers lost their jobs as a result of the front page photograph.

"I was doing a background check on schoolteachers and discovered dozens of cases where convicted felons, child molesters, sex offenders, and drug pushers were hired to teach in the system."

"Finally, we caught a UMass cop who had just gotten out of work with food. He was eventually kicked off the force for stealing steaks," he said.

Vogler said the UMass administration thought of him as a trouble maker but journalism professor Dario Politella called him "the greatest muckraker the Collegian or the University has ever produced. He eats, lives, and sleeps journalism," he said.

"He didn't want to be an editor, he only wanted to be a terrific investigative reporter," Politella said.

Letters to the Editor

In their own world

I have two points to comment on from Loren Spivack's column Wednesday. First, there is a massive peace movement in Russia, which is made up of people who are as scared of nuclear war as are their counterparts in the United States. They are probably no more harrassed, infiltrated, or threatened by the KGB, than are American peace movements by the combined efforts of the FBI, the CIA, and the NSA. Freedom of speech goes only so far as it is "good for national security" in either country.

Second. Spivack states that "Every sane, thinking person left or right understand(s) that nuclear war would be unwinnable and unsurvivable and must never be fought." I would suggest that Spivack listen to the words of fellow Republicans (not to mention any names) who believe that a "limited nuclear war in Europe" would be both survivable and winnable.

The problem lies not in the fears of the people, be they Russians or Americans, but in blind trust in the politicians of both "sides" who have lost all touch with that world they claim to be so fond of.

Of beer and politics

I read in the April 5 Collegian that the Campus Center Board of Governors recently voted to ban Coors beer in the Blue Wall primarily because of the Coors family's political views. I think that the BOG should reconsider and should allow the patrons of the Blue Wall the chance to decide for themselves which beers they prefer, whether their choices be due to palate or politics.

Furthermore, should the BOG stand by their vote, then I think that it is only logical that it also ban from the Blue Wall, the TOC, and the Hatch Bar Stolichnaya vodka, a product of the Soviet Union which is a firm with a far more reprehensible political record. Actually, I prefer that both products stay (though I drink neither) and that politics stay out of this.

One thing for sure...

Michael Cerrato, former candidate for the SGA Presidency, has some very interesting views concerning the Whitmore sit-in (Collegian, Wednesday). He doesn't think that sit-ins should happen without the Undergraduate Senate's approval. He doesn't think that present and former SGA Officers should take part. He thinks that three days of xeroxing costs a hell of a lot of money. He thinks that he knows what the SGA leadership should be doing about the crisis better than they do. He thinks that the whole action is a violation of the Senate's perogatives and of student rights.

I don't know where he came up with all these ideas, but one thing is for sure: I'm glad that I voted for Roth/Burgess.

Nazis a bad example

I'm writing this in response to the column "Turn Enemies into Friends" by Deborah Kutenplon.

I understand Kutenplon's wish for nonviolence and I do agree that her methods may be appropriate for certain situations. However, to suggest that desegregation of the city was due entirely to the words of love of one white student is just too simplistic.

The example of the Nazi occupation was also a poor choice. What the Nazi soldiers represented was a time when "humanness" failed. It was a time when citizens should have stood up and condemned what the Nazis were doing. That they instead chose to show their sense of humanity by inviting the soldiers home for dinner is sad and greatly disappointing.

As much as I believe in non-violence, I do not think either of the examples show a sense of fairness or good judgement on Kutenplon's part.

The UMass 'dictatorship'

Peter Dow

Once again, this University has become the hotspot of debate. Wednesday there was a rally against the University Resource Fee, combined with a rally for South African divestment, and the Board of Governors' recommendation for a ban on Coors beer.

I will begin by commending those members of the student body who have fought Whitmore on the URF proposal to raise student fees. The administration's tactics are an obvious violation of student rights and coincide with their attempts to dissolve the BOG. But I find it especially disturbing that such activists have linked opposition to the URF with support for South African divestment. It is insulting to our claims to an "open-minded university" when we use the amateurish tactic of implying that everyone who does not support divestment in South Africa supports the URF.

But, alas, such a tactic is typical of the radical left on the fourth floor of our Student Union.

These two issues are not connected and should not have been associated yesterday. Many rational people sincerely oppose the racist South African policy of apartheid, yet do not support U.S. corporation divestment. When the illustrious Senator Edward Kennedy visited South Africa earlier this year, he was greeted in a very hostile manner (no doubt he was surprised). Soweto's mayor, Edward Kunene, and deputy Mayor Lucas Shabanga took violent exception to Kennedy's notion of divestment; they also disapproved of Bishop Desmond Tutu's similar utterances. "If the U.S. firms go, what will the substitute be?" Kunene asked. "It is our people who will suffer." Then Shabanga said, "We want to educate our children, we want bread; the Americans should invest." But, like many people in the U.S. and at UMass, Kennedy ignored the pleas of those who see the overwhelming advantages of U.S. companies in the providing of jobs, raising the black standard of living, and promoting of economic prosperity. Kennedy also ignored Zulu Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, when Buthelezi described divestment as "madness" in terms of the welfare of the majority black population. But such selective morality and ignorance has become a trademark of the leftists in this country and at UMass, and we've come to expect it.

However, the real outrage of the week stems from the BOG recommendation of prohibiting Coors beer. I am outraged and appalled at those who claim to be "liberal" and at the same time wish to impose their morality and political ideology on the rest of us. It is a disgrace that the UMass "liberals" practice such blatant hypocrisy; by seeking to promote their ideology, they are opposed to political diversity on this campus and are contradicting their own ideals. They claim that Coors supports the John Birch Society and the Heritage Foundation. Oh no. To be consistent, may I suggest to the BOG that they forbid WMLASC, RSU and SCERA from using meeting rooms in the Campus Center, since they promote ideologies and policies which I oppose? (This proposal is, of course, not serious, since I respect the liberal ideals which the BOG is obviously opposed to).

The BOG is, ironically, beginning to resemble the administration; they are seeking to impose their will on the student body, as both fringe on our student rights. Maybe the administration has the right idea in attempting to eliminate the BOG; and, unless the BOG reverses itself on this Coors issue, I hope all of us will urge BOG dissolution as simple protection of our student rights.

There is no doubt that hypocrisy runs rampant at UMass; the cheap and insulting tactics utilized by the leftists (I have ceased calling them liberals) in linking divestment and the URF is typical, along with this BOG-Coors fiasco. Perhaps it is time for real students who respect freedom and liberal ideals to unite and defend ourselves from the fourth floor dictatorship.

Random Notes

Sometimes you have to push doors open

I walked into Whitmore Wednesday afternoon to check out the sit-in. What was originally going to be a one hour visit turned into an all-night affair. I was drawn in by the conviction and dedication that I saw from students. When all of the camera people and administrators were snuggled into their warm beds, students were sitting on the hard floors of the office, and sleeping in the hallways of Whitmore, talking and deciding to take their future into their own hands.

It started with a rally. Two hundred or more students showed up in front of the Student Union Building to protest the proposed Universal Resource Fee, investment in South Africa, and eroding student rights. It ended in victory. They marched to Whitmore where they spontaneously decided to occupy the building, but only after being denied communication with the administration.

The occupation continued into the late afternoon and early evening when the students decided that they would stay in the Office of Student Affairs until their demands were met. They were not afraid of being arrested. Twenty-seven people slept on the bare floors and hallways of Whitmore on that first night.

Solidarity set in and tension among the administrators began to build. They thought students would eventually tire out and whither away. Instead, they grew in numbers and in frustration.

There were no followers and no leaders. Every decision, every move, was voted and agreed on, by all who were there.

The students spent from 6 p.m. Wednesday evening, until 4 a.m. Thursday morning discussing strategy, and educating themselves on the issues. They pooled all of their resources and created an atmosphere of all for one and one for all. They were determined to become an "open sore to the administration".

We are attending school at a time when administrators seem to regard student needs with little respect.

When students come to the administration with problems they see happening within our university, it is our right, and their obligation to open their doors to us. Rather than as one secretary told me "I have instructions not to let anybody in"

Students accomplished much more on Thursday than the settlement of their demands. They showed us all that working together, as equals, is possible. To all of you, who felt it was too "radical" to come and sit-in, I'm sorry for you. You missed something very unique, and very 80's.

Some new British waves

KATRINA AND THE WAVES
Katrina and the Waves
Capitol Records
By JON STRYMISH
Collegian Staff

Katrina Leskanich is a screamer. She leads the band Katrina and the Waves which come from Liverpool. They sound as if they will be the next British band to be the next "big thing" in America.

Their self-titled debut album has hit the stores this week, and brings to mind many similarities with other Liver-pudlian screamers of the past. The sound is very poppy and the lyrics have all the emotional depth of the early Beatles.

The first single "Walking on Sunshine" is already receiving heavy airplay on Top Forty stations. "Walking on Sunshine" is a song you can expect to hear at all the parties and all the discos in the next few months. With its incessant backbeat and tasteful lead guitar, I'd expect popularity, (mixed with hatred when you're in a bad mood and forced to listen to it.)

A quartet, Katrina and the Waves play the compositions of lead guitarist Kimberly Rew, which have names like "Cry for Me", "The Sun Won't Shine" and "The Game of Love", all of which have all instruments except horns and drums mixed into the background.

The only exception to this is "Mexico", written by Bassist Vince de la Cruz. It offers a guitar playing a very strong bassline. He turns it into a very good guitar rave-up reminiscent of the Kinks. It is also the song in which Leskanich shows off her strongest singing, yelling louder than ever, with as much expression as Chrissie Hynde, whom she sounds a little like.

The two exceptionally good songs on the record are "Going Down to Liverpool" and "Machine Gun Smith." In "Liverpool", a song which my roommate says is a Bangles cover but the record gives Rew credit for having written, Leskanich sings, "I'm going down to Liverpool, where life is free, to do nothing." "Machine Gun Smith" keeps reminding me of "Hey Bulldog" when I hear it.

The drummer is Alex Cooper. He's too important to the record to be left out. All four members of the band play instruments. Leskanich playing rhythm guitar, the others all sing backup vocals. Together, they infuse top forty pop with the hardest rock and most slickly disco sound its had in the last 20 years.

As a Marine Officer, you could be in charge of a Mach 2 + F-18A, a vertical take-off Harrier or one of our other jets or helicopters. And you could do it by the time you're 25. CONFIDENTIAL LIFESTYLES SURVEY

Dear Student,

This questionnaire is intended for any student who has any questions about his/her sexual orientation, and also for any lesbian, bisexual and gay students. We want to know about your experience at UMass, about your needs and concerns. We are collecting this information to be used as part of a report to the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs. This report will describe the current quality of life for lesbian , bisexual and gay students. The report will make a series of recommendations aimed at improving the campus services and programs for you.

Your questionnaire will only be seen by members of the research team, and your responses will be kept confidential. This is an opportunity to have your opinion count; please take 15 minutes and fill this questionnaire out. Please return this survey to 99 Berkshire House by Friday, April 12. If you have any questions about this survey please contact me at 545-0230.

Sincerely,

Felice Yeskel Human Relations Planner/Advocate

UM baseball breaks out the broom

Sweep three from St. Joseph's

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team completed its revenge on the Atlantic 10's Philadelphia teams, sweeping St. Joseph's three games this weekend to run its record to 9-7 on the season.

UMass, which in the six games against Temple and St. Joe's last season went 1-5, turned that record around, going 5-1 against the Philly squads to stake a claim to first place in the conference.

The Minutemen are now 6-1 since returning from Florida and have won five straight.

"We control what happens in the league now," UM manager Dick Bergquist said yesterday. "The pitching was tough for us, we hit the ball very well and the defense was solid. We really put together a good series."

The Minutemen won the game Friday 5-3, snapping a 3-3 tie with two runs in the ninth.

Secondbaseman Darrin O'Connor reached on an error to start the ninth, was sacrificed to second by Bruce Kingman and came around to score on Matt Sheran's single to right.

Designated hitter Todd Comeau singled Sheran to third and Jeff Cimini added an insurance run with a sacrifice fly.

Starter Jim Knopf worked seven scoreless innings before experiencing arm stiffness and giving way to Jon Martin, who was hit hard by the Hawks for three runs in the seventh. Fireballing Jeff Jensen came in to close the door and pick up his first win of the season and his career.

On Saturday, UMass swept a pair, winning the opener 10-3 and the second game 9-7.

UMass scored five in the top of the second inning in the first game. Steve Allen, with a three run homer to center that scored Cimini and Angelo Salustri after Walks, and Tony Szklany, with a run-spring single that plated O'Connor after a walk and wild pitch, had the big hits.

Comeau ripped a two-run shot in the fourth that scored O'Connor after an infield single. Sheran, with relief help from junior Bobby Kostro, picked up the win, his second of the season. The freshman has allowed only three runs in 19 innings pitched this season.

In the second game, it took a six run second inning and strong relied form sophomore Steve Allard to give UMass the sweep. The Minutemen started the big inning as Kingman reached on an error, Sheran executed a bunt single before a balk set up Comeau's two run single.

Comeau stole second before coming in on Cimini's single. Salustri cleared the bases with a two-run shot to center that Doug Wright followed up with a solo blast.

Salustri, in the next inning, ripped another dinger, his fourth of the season.

Allen started, ran into trouble in the fourth, loading the bases. Allard came in and retired the side allowing one run. The lefthander then finished up with three good innings, allowing one run while striking out three. It was his first collegiate victory.

UMass faces Holy Cross in Worcester today at 3 p.m. Freshman Brett Valentini (0-0) will get the start.

Lacrosse stumbles for a second time

Rutgers runs by UM, Gorillas slump to 2-1

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

There is no cause for alarm regarding the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team. A little concern maybe, but the Gorillas have 11 games to play and can still put together a season close to what is expected of them.

UMass, standing around of offense and letting up the open shot on defense, lost to Rutgers 12-9 on Saturday in front of 750 fans at Boyden Field.

The loss, UMass' second straight, drops the team to 1-2 and in all probability out of the national rankings. Its top spot in the New England polls is also in danger after what coach Dick Garber termed a "frustrating loss."

"I don't understand what the heck is happening with this team," Garber said. "I didn't see a single player cut to the cage on offense and defensively we just gave them three or four goals we shouldn't have. There is a lot of games left to play so I can't say we're in real trouble, but we have to turn around and play the way I know and kids know we're capable of playing."

UMass scored the games opening goal but saw it taken away by the officials due to an inadvertant whistle. The Scarlet Knights took advantage, grabbing the lead and the momentum with 6:29 left in the quarter as John Hutton took Andy Briggs' pass and made it 1-0.

UMass, starting freshman goalie Paul McCarty in place of the injured (separated shoulder) Gerry Moreau, was terrible on offense in the quarter, missing passes on the set offense and passing up the fast break. The Knights built a 3-0 lead as Brad Roos and Gregg Freid scored with Freid netting a blast from 15-yards out with only 22 seconds to go in the quarter.

UMass tied the game as Matt O'Reilly netted his first of the season at 2:47. Tom Carmean followed it up three minutes later before Mike Fiorini took Carmean's pass with 5:59 left to put UMass back in the game.

But Rutgers, patient on offense and controlling the tempo, netted two goals in the final 2:32 of the half as Ed Trabulsy and Brian Krost scored.

The two goals were the first of a six-goal streak by the Knights as Roos, Krost, Dave Disciorio and Krost again scored in the first 11 minutes of the second half to send UMass reeling 9-3.

UMass midfielder Greg Fisk goes airborne in Saturday's 12-9 loss to Rutgers at Boyden. The junior had two goals in the game.

Karl Hatton finally answered for UMass with 2:55 to go in the half. Kenny Freeman followed it up just 38 seconds later, going one-on-one to make it 9-5.

Greg Fisk started the fourth period with a goal at the 2:31 before Roos made it 10-6 with 9:46 to go. Carmean (assisted by Hatton) and Fisk scored quickly and UMass trailed 10-8 with 7:49 to go.

But Freid set up for a blast from the perimeter just 27 seconds later to kill the UMass rally. Freshman Pat Cain scored with 5:03 to go but UMass didn't make another serious run. Brad Fish closed the door with a goal with 1:40 to go.

UMass trailed 36-31 in shots. McCarty made nine saves in a solid effort for his first game.

Softball drops a pair: Defensive lapses cost UM at Rutgers

PISCATAWAY, N.J. — In Friday's Atlantic 10 doubleheader with Rutgers, the University of Massachusetts softball team got good pitching from Lynn Stockley (eight strike-outs, one earned run) and Lisa Rever (seven strikes-outs).

The Minutewomen also hit well, pounding out 15 hits, nine in the opener.

What UMass didn't do was play defense and it cost the Minutewomen as Rutgers swept two, winning the opener 6-5 in 10 innings and the Nightcap 2-1 in eight innings.

UMass blew 3-0 and 5-3 leads, gave up five unearned runs and made six errors in the opener as Stockley took the loss. The Minutewomen drop to 8-11-1 and 1-2 in the A-10.

UMass left 19 runners stranded on the bases, 10 in the opener. The Minutewomen left six runners stranded in scoring position in each game.

UMass took a 5-3 lead in the top of the ninth on a wild pitch and a Carol Frattaroli RBI triple, but Rutgers tied it up again. In the bottom of the 10th, two passed balls, one that hit Talbott in the hand, gave Rutgers' the win.

In the second game, ten UMass players struck out, four looking, and a 1-1 tie went into extra innings. Again Rutgers, 13-6-1 prevailed as Tracy Buono's RBI single landed inches away from a diving Sally Maher's glove.

Black Greeks: A Look At Their Effect On Our Community

by Segun Eubanks and Rod Clare
Nummo Staff

Editor's Note: Over the past couple of years traditionally Black fraternities and sororities have grown tremendously in our community. Three years ago there were no Black frats or sororities on campus. Today there are at least four fraternities and one sorority either established or in the process of being established.

These new organizations are effecting our community in many different ways. Some people say that they are the best thing that could happen in our community because of the strive toward academic achievement, while others believe the represent divisiveness and elitism.

NUMMO NEWS interviewed four brothers (brothers in the community sense, not neccessarily fraternity sense) who are either members of a fraternity, pledging a fraternity or attempting to initiate a new chapter, to find what their views are on the effect of frats in the Black community.

This is part one of a four part series on fraternities and sororities. In the near future NUMMO will interview sisters involved in sororities, members of the community who are opposed to Black Greek organizations and Black students and administrators who will attempt to analyze the over-all effect that the organizations are having on our community.

The following four men met with reporters from NUMMO NEWS to give their views on Black Fraternities:

Crescent (pledgee) of Phi Beta Sigma, Charles Anthony Sheffield.
Crescent (pledgee) of Phi Beta Sigma, A. Anthony Gee.
Potential pledgee of Omega Psi Phi, D. Anderson Hooker.
Brother of Iota Phi Theta, Richard Steward.

NUMMO: Why are you, personally, interested in fraternities?

Sheffield: Personally I ws not interested in fraternities, but when I met a very positive person, Roscoe Robinson, who was doing things to lay ground for his fraternity (Phi Beta Sigma), I saw his dedication. And also I had gone to Boston and had met members of his fraternity who are all professional people and they are striving for excellence. I realized that this thing could be positive and I realized also that the brotherhood that they were pronouncing was truly there and it could help this starving community.

Gee: I would just like to say that it's tough trying to make it to the top and I don't think that anybody can di it alone. You need other positive people behind you, with you, in order to geop you reach your goal as a person, as an individual, as anyone. Everybody should set a goal for themselves, everybody should pursue excellence, everybody should set them-pursue excellence, everybody should strive for the best. I believe fraternities can make this goal a little easier, can provide a vehicle for this.

Hooker: I, personally, have been studying networking as a means of uplifting the community and ways of providing services, as far as health services are concerned, as far as social services are concerned, providing social support networks. And just looking at the entire networking concept you see that fraternities and sororities are that networking concept in action and it wouldn't make sense to not be involved in some sense in that networking process.

Steward: The reason I got involved in a fraternity is because I wanted to feel some unity on campus. I'm from an all white community and before college I was not exposed to Black awareness, Black togetherness. I felt that by joining a fraternity it would help me in a further understanding of the Black community, our work and just to be part of the community as one where I could interact and understand the goals of the Black people on the campus.

NUMMO: How are you (Black Fraternities) affecting the community? Positively and negatively.

Steward: I feel that there is a positive effect of Black fraternities on campus because it brings us together. We are all going for a certain goal, the same goal, to be unified. And now with different fraternities on campus, Sigma's, Q's (Omega's) and other people already on campus, we have to work together a lot better so we can get that goal accomplished. If you want to hold a function to get people aware of what's going on, financial aid for example, or if it's just a question concerning Black History Month or whatever it might be. With a stronger group we can accomplish the task alot easier than just by ourselves.

Hooker: I realize that ther is both a positive and a negative infuence of fraternities on campus. The positive aspects are that you see organizationally, people striving for excellence and striving to find ways to impact their community. It's an attractive force for those who might want to come to the University. They see positive images and people who are here who haven't quite developed an image for themselves can also develop positive role models, not only in the administration, but also within the student body. On the negative side, and this isn't necessarily something that has to be but at present it has been, is that people from outside usually recognize fraternities as cliques. And to a certain extent they are cliques in that they separate people who have achieved a certain level of scholarship, a certain ability to relate to themselves and others, a certain way of carrying themselves. The more positive people have found a way to strive further so others look at that as something that is separate of cliquish and it doesn't necessarily have to be that way, but it does seem to have had some kind of a schizematic effect, or providing some kind of schizm on campus.

Gee: I just want to touch on what he (Hooker) said about the clique. I Believe that this is a very negative aspect of a fraternity. I believe no fraternity should do that or should exemplify anything like that. I believe that if you make it to your goal you should turn around and lift somebody else up to their goal. You just can't turn around and say, "I reached my goal and nowyou reach yours the best way yu can." I believe that the fraternities should act as a vehicle to help other people gain what they have already learned. That's the way I believe a fraternity should act, I believe that's the way all fraternities will act at some time and date.

Frats

Sheffield: The best way that I can answer this question is to say that the negative aspects of course are the cliques or the thing of bringing disunity. But the positive things are that we get a group of people together who are trying to do something for the community. It's just like when you get that much more, so instead of just having one person say, "well I want to paint the New Africa House," you have a whole group of people saying, "Well let's do it," and it gets done.

NUMMO: There are some common criticisms about Black fraternities in general. For example: when frats do step shows they talk about each other very badly. Or when a person is on linethey can only speak to their "Big Brother". Or questions such as, why not use Egyptian symbolism as opposed to Greek? Many people percieve these as disunity and separatism. How do you respond to this type of criticism?

Steward: I feel that as someones who's looking in it from the outside, if you are a true friend you would understand that while your friend is pledging he is doing something that he feels is important and he has to abide by certain rules and regulations of the fraternity he is pledging to. And if you are a true friend you understand that his not talking to you is just a matter of what he has to do to accomplish his task and achieve what he wants to achieve. And once he becomes a brother you will still be friends, maybe even closer friends because of that.

Gee: To mention what you (NUMMO) spoke about, you going to a step show and seeing different fraternities talk about other fraternities. I believe that should be minimized because of one simple fact: I'm not going to say that I really care about what people on the outside looking in think and I'm not going to say that I don't care because it's important to a certain extent because you want other people to become involved in your organization. You want your organization to grow and to expand. However, I believe that fraternities should perform steps together because I believe that it is a very important part of fraternity life as far as it's concerned right now. I believe we need that type of unity. You know, maybe a show together or maybe holding hands, some type of thing like that to show that all fraternities are unified, not separated.

Sheffield: Perhaps I can address the issue of why we use Greek letters instead of Egyptian letters. In effect, as far as I see it, these fraternities are already established and have been established a good 70 years, most of them. And they have florished and turned out very prominent people and are doing things now that just can't be started up again. So to say that we should go back to our African past, that's good, but we could do that right now by using Greek letters. That doesn't mean you have to separate yourselves from whites, or you have to separate yourself from historically what is recognized is white because they might have gotten their letters from Egyptians.

Hooker: Just to embellish on that point, it is without question that it's not a matter of they "could" have possibly got there letters from Egypt, they did. Civilization began in Egypt. Anything that has happened since then has been a result of African input and African development and therefore anything we use from the beginnig of time is a descendant of something that happened in Africa. So it doesn't matter where we choose to use it, it was initially African.

Two other points. One particularly about the idea of fraternities talking about each other, disrespecting each other and so on and so forth. You'll notice that they all do it with a certain amount of putting them down, but it's also a certain amount of respect involved in that because they can get together and laugh bout it, talk about it. It's just like if your best partner plays on a rival basketball team. All during the game you're going to talk about him, you're going to dog him out as best you can, but when thing come down to it you both have the same perspective on where you're trying to go, we are all trying to get to the top. On the idea of social probation, when you can't speak to people, you're developing leadership capabilities. What you need to do is to be able to recognize what you are really missing. If you can't speak to people, rap to people, share your knowledge for six to eight weeks or however long it takes, then when you're done and you gain some more wisdom then it's all that much more important to you to turn around and share it. I think it's really instilling in you and reminding you that you do have a purpose which is to go back to your community and take everything you've gained in this process back.

NUMMO: In spite of the criticisms, fraternities and sororities have become very popular amongst the student body. To what would you attribute this popularity?

Gee: I think that people are starting to realize the fraternities and sororities potential. I believe minority individuals are starting to realize that they do have a chance to make it in the world, that they have a good chance. And I believe they see fraternities as the way to go in order to pursue their goals.

Hooker: For a period of time, recently, recent administrations have encouraged individualism and Blacks have bought into this idea that "I" have to make it on my own and so on and so forth. Several recent historical occurances, this constant Reagan administration attack on the Black communities, the rise in the number of people who are participating in Neo-Nazi organizations, the number of people who are participating in the Klu Klux Klan; those types of training activities suggest to Blacks, regardless of whether they are political or not, that there is a certain amount of subliminal suggestion that, "I need to be involved in something that is going to be unifying in some way. I have to be involved in unifying in some way. I have to always be sure that I have a network." That support network is constantly demonstrated, even on this campus. That support network is constantly demonstrated even on this campus where there are so many things that are happening where Blacks see themselves slipping backwards as far a attainments that have been made over a period of years. The budget proposals where they won't fund and Third World organizations and bizarre activities like that suggest that there is a need to have some unified activity going on. Fraternities and sororities are right now one of the most visible unifying forces on this campus as well as across the country.

Steward: I feel that the initial reason that some minorities decide to join fraternities is because they want a sense of belonging. That is not always the best reason to do it but once they start pledging, their reasons will change into more positive ones such as being part of a positive group on campus. And also, since we are only one percent of the population on the campus we're much stronger as a gruop than as individuals. And they realize that within a group they can make more changes for the betterment of the community as far as minorities go. They can implement more benefits, they can probably start a new center, a minority center likethe Malcolm X Center, they can improve the Center, they can help hold on to the Center because right now people are trying to the the Center away from us, which is wrong. But as a group, we have a stronger voice in getting our point across.

NUMMO: What type of activities are the fraternities currently involved in and what future plans do they have as far as expanding and improving the fraternities and the community as a whole?

Gee: Phi Beta Sigma Fraternity Inc. was just involved in the painting of the New Africa House which is the minority headquarters on this campus. And we want to show the community that we are about positive change and we are doing things. Just today we completed a project with Iota Phi Theta Fraternity Inc. which was a tour for inner city kids. We showed them around, talked to them and told them all the possibilities of all the positive things. We want to be involved in all the Greek fraternities and we want to bring about positive change in the community. We do not want to do this single-handedly, we want to be unified, we want to bring everybody together as one.

Steward: The brothers of Iota Phi Theta Inc. were involved in a Walk-a-thon to raise money for the ABC House, which is A Better Chance Program for inner-city kids who come to Amherst to attend high school and have a better chance of going to college and improving their education. We had a forum last semester so we could bring people in from the outside to better understand why there are Black fraternities, how we operate. We developed a workshop on sexism and contraception recently, and right now we're planning a Greek Step Show where we invite all the Black fraternities in the area and in the Boston area to come down to participate, and show what they can do and to show some Black involvement for the campus.

Hooker: The Omega Psi Phi Fraternity Inc. has not yet been chartered or begun actively participating on this campus as the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity Inc. However, there are numerous individuals interested in the organization who are serving in leadership roles throughout the University community on a regional, local and national scale. The Omega Psi Phi Fraternity Inc. has a large scholarship fund because one of their cardinal principals is scholarship related: to encourage, draw and uplift minority youth. And there are many other projects that they will be involved in in the next who knows how many years, weeks months. Feeding the community through food banks, helping to raise money for several organizations and doing scholarship drives. Doing tutorials for university students and high school students. Those are all the types of activities that we'll be involved in. One point that I want to make though and make really clear, is that these activities don't only effect the minority community on this campus, but by demonstrating to other communities the strengh of the minority community and the self-esteem and the togetherness on the Black community on this campus, other factions, particularly the majority, have to look at us in a more positive light. Although that positive light tends to cause some backlash at first because they don't like to see us in a positive light, they do in fact have to reflect on us in a positive light. So I think that making the diversity more clear, more open on this campus is going to help not only the minority community but the community as a whole.

The Whitmore Sit-In Two Perspectives

Editor's Note: Last week a group of about 50 students took over the Vice-Chancellor's Office in Whitmore. For four days they stayed in the office to demand and negotiate with the administration for student rights. Among their demands where: Continuation of the student run Board of Govenors, modification of the $261 Universal Resource Fee and a divestment of all remaining ivestments the University holds that are South African related.

During the take over very few Black and Third World students chose to participate. In talking with various Third World students on campus, NUMMO found that there were two basic trains of thought as to why this was. One, that Third World students missed out on an opportunity to become involved in campus concerns and the other that Third World students should not have been present anyway. The following are further explanations of the two opposing views:

It Is Not Our Battle

Essentially the sit-in that took place last week in Whitmore was not our battle. While it is good to see progressive white students battling the Administration, it was not our responsibility, nor should it have been, to rush out and join them.

First of all, many of the same students that participated in the sit-in have battled to cut the funds and resources of our organizations. The same ones whose racist attitudes we have had to deal with on the senate floor, in budget hearing and in campus activities, from both the so-called "liberal" factions and the "conservative" factions, are the ones now condemning us for not participating in their sit-in.

All too often "liberals" are ready to build coalitions when it is convenient for them to do so. Last year when we called for a "Rainbow Coalition" in support of Jesse Jackson, these same "liberals" were no where to be found. Yet as soon as Mondale won the nomination they came running, "Join our Coalition" they shouted.

Moreover, the Third World community was not even asked for their input in the planning and implementation of the takeover. They would have us risk our academic standing to sleep in the Vice-Chancellor's office, yet they will not ask for our leadership, our ideas, our agenda. Sure we suffer, as does everyone, from raised fees and lack of student control. But the concerns of the Third World community go far beyong that. kWe are in a battle for increased financial aid, for more Black professors to teach us, for the re-implementation of Pre-Calculus courses and even more basic for the preservation of our own civil and human rights.

Yes, the Black community is very concerned about the situation in South Africa, as we must be for their situation brings back very disturbing memories of our recent past right here in America. But to ask us to fight for divestment is like asking us to put a band-aid on a gun shot wound. Call for an all-out boycott of all companies investing in South Africa, call for the University to publically codemn the racist South African regime, call for armed struggle to rid the monkey of oppression from the backs of our brothers and sisters in South Africa, and then we will respond.

We do not expect white students to understand the desires and feelings of the Black community, for you never will until you've suffered the oppression and genocide our people have experienced throughout the history of European expansionism. Yes, some bitterness still remains, and as long as racism and oppression are alive in this world, in this country, on this campus, we will be bitter. And we will continue to challenge you to re-evaluate your actions, for racism is a subtle disease that even the oppressor can not always detect.

So do not fault us for not running to join you in condemning the Administration for their actions concerning the Yvette Henry case. That was over a year ago. When Black students and administrators placed their jobs and academics on the line to get Yvette Henry out of jail and back into school, most of you assumed her guilty and did not bother to look beyond the headlines in the local newspapers.

Lastly, we as a Black community have served as a catalyst for many of today's movements. As has been the case historically, change has always come from the bottom up. So if "liberal" white students here on campus or anywhere across the country are truly ready to struggle for change, they must actively pursue the input and leadership of those who most vitally understand the concept and the need for change.

Where Were You ?

Where were you? I'm talking to ALL the students of color, and that includes all Black, Latin, Asian, Native American, everyone that is not white. Just in case you haven't heard by now there was a sit-in held in Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, Dennis Madson's office for four days. The students that were there wanted to get the point across that another fee raise,no student control over areas where our money primarily finances and investment in South Africa was not settling well with them. Here's a good question for you to ask your conscious, how come you are letting white people do your work when it comes to looking out for the Universities present investments in South Africa? Your so quick to say South Africa is ours yet not many of you have done a thing to ensure this University divests. O.K., your always saying we're excluded from many things on this campus, those white people never seek us out when they're planning something., or I didn't hear about it. Well can't use those excuses now can you? The rally was well publicized, if you had attended the Third World Caucus meeting the week before,you also would have heard about it. On top of that if you had gone to the rally you would have been made immediately made aware of the sit-in.Your first error was not carrying enough to attend a rally which was held to show the Administration students care. You can't say either that you didn't hear about it after the rally because not only was it on the front page of the COLLEGIAN everyday but it was on W.M.U.A. To further emphasize my point the sit-in was broadcasted from one coast to the other. How much more publicity do you need, give me a break people!

This was a perfect opportunity for students of color to make their strength visible, a chance to build coalitions with each other and yes, with whites. I hope you feel proud of yourselves , but let it be known...YOU BLEW IT!!!

New Africa House Art Exhibits

The view of Irene Hou's Chinese paintings such as the one done on a fan made of bamboo left some tranquil and wishing they had the money in their pocket to buy it.

An opening reception for the exhibition of Chinese paintings by Mrs. Irene Hou (also known as Miss Ssua-chin Liu) was held at the Augusta Savage Memorial Gallery at the University of Massachusetts on Friday, March 28.

Mrs. Hou is an instructor of Chinese paintings at Munson-Williams-Proctor Institute School of Art in Utica, New York. She has also taught Chinese language at Colgate University and has held numerous exhibits of her works at colleges, art centers, museums and women's clubs and on educational T.V. (at Syracuse, N.Y.).

"It is beautiful...I haven't seen this work for a long long time", said Phyllis Rodnin of the Future Student Department here at UMass, as she embraced Hou. One individual who asked not to be identified, said "this work is incredible, I'm very delighted to see such art being done by a woman."

Mrs. Hou specializes in painting bamboo and landscapes, especially in ink-wash style. At one point, Miss Ssu-chin Liu painted a bamboo tree which had the audience's attention and a crave for more.

"Beautiful arts, Mrs. Hou is a talented woman. Fine example of art put on by Augusta Savage Memorial Gallery", said Jean Sauter, head secretary of the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies. Chickling Sauter said, that she has to check out this work every time she comes to work.

Mrs. Hou also does paintings with her fingers. She has studied Chinese painting for many years from such foremost masters as Chang Ku-nien, Hu Ko-min and Yu Chung-lin. She is married to Professor Chi-Ming Hou of Colgate Universtiy. Hou has three adult sons, Donald who has a Doctorate in chemistry; William a Duke University Law School graduate, and Victor, a senior at Columbia University, who plans to attend medical school.

This is one of a series of excellent exhibitions arranged and displayed at the Augusta Savage Memorial Gallery.

The students of sculpture-clay, sculpture-metal and advanced sculpture of the Afro-American Studies Department had an exhibition of their work last week in the sculpture studio located on the lower level of the New Africa House. "This exhibit gives the students the opportunity to share their creative endeavors with the academic community", said Prof. Dorance J. Hill, of the Afro-American Studies Department and instructor for the art class.

Works in clay, plaster, sheet metal and bronze are among the fine handicrafts displayed. Surprisingly enough, most of the students have never taken a class in such areas or have worked in such an environment, however they have produced work which has proven to be of a professional nature.

In additon to the works displayed in the studios there are several large metal scultures displayed on the lawn in front of the New Africa House. The exhibition closes today.

"The Far World Comes Near"

A photographic exhibition based on the work of Joel Halpern, a professor of anthropology at the University of Massachusetts, and Sam Pettengill, a University of Massachusetts student, will be shown from April 4-15 at the Wheeler Gallery, located in Wheeler House, at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

"The Far World Comes Near" focuses on the two worlds of the Loation people, the worlds of Before and After. The world of Before is that of the Kingdom of Laos before 1975, as photographed by Joel Halpern before the most recent war in Indochina. These photographs from the old country touch on religous life in the royal capital of Luang Prabang, as well as aspects of village life. As a counterpoint, the world of After, as presented by Sam Pettengill, depicts the Laotian people in New England as new Americans. These photographs depict the parallel processes of intergration into American life, and the simulataneous maintenance of valued traditions on the part of New England's newest ethnic group.

Wheeler Gallery is open: Sunday - Thursday 7:00p.m. and Tuesday&Thursday 12:30 - 2:30p.m.

Conference For Minorities Interested In Law

Western New England College School of Law will present its spring "Minority Law Day" Saturday April 13, 1985 from 9:00a.m. to 4:00p.m. in the S.Prestley Blake Law Center.

The twice-yearly conference is designed to provide information to members of minority groups who are interested in studying law. Admission is free, and pre-registration is recommended.

Among the guest speakers will be the Hon. Reginald Matthews, acting justice of the Supreme Court of the state of New York and supervising judge of the Bronx Family Court; and Beverly J. Hayes, assistant attorney general, Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Workshops, lectures, and panel discussions will address such topics as "How to Choose a Law School", "The Concerns of Nontraditinal Students", and "What Do Lawyers Do?". There will also be a mock law class.

An afternoon panel discussion will feature Judge Matthews and minority attorneys. They will discuss the practice of law, the skills that law school teaches, the problems of placement, and the need for minority lawyers.

The day will end with a reception for the participants. For more information, or to pre-register for "Minority Law Day,"callthe Law School Admissions Office at (413) 782-3111,ext.406.

Western New England College School of Law, serving 860 law students each year, is the only Massachusetts law school outside of Greater Boston. It is located on the campus of Western New England College, 1215 Wilbraham Road in Springfield.

NUMMO SPORT TALK

by Julian Tynes
Nummo Staff

Well, the 1984-84 College basketball season is over. With the end of this season many fans across the country have seen the end of some great collegiate careers and the end of an era. This was the last year of no shot clock in the NCAA tournament, next year there will be a 45 second clock.

As for the great players ending their college careers, the Big East is seeing their first crop of major stars graduate. Chris Mullins of St. John's, Ed Pinkney and Duane McClain of Villanova and Bill Martin and Patrick Ewing of Georgetown were the first group of high school All-Americans to choose Big East schools, all are graduating after having outstanding collegiate careers. Ewing in particular may be as responsible for the prestige and dominance of this conference as any single player.

Keith Lee of Mamphis State leaves the Metro conference as its all-time scorer and rebounder. He helped turn Memphis State from a 13-15 team (the year before he arrived) to a top 10 team that made the final 16 for three straight years and the final four this his senior year.

Other well known players ending their collegiate careers are Micheal Adams of Boston College, Bill Wennington of St. John's, Maryland's Adrian Branch, U.N.L.V.'s Richie Adams, DePauls' Ty Corbin and Kenny Patterson, N.C. State's Lorenzo Charles, Cozell McQueen and Spud Webb, Arkansas' Joe Kleine, S.M.U.'s Jon Koncak, Temples' Granger Hall, George Washington's Mike Brown, Rutger's John Battle, Loyola's Alfredrick Hughes, Steve Harris of Tulsa, Aubrey Sherrod and Xaveir McDaniel of Wichita State, Sam Vincent of Michigan State, and Greg Stokes ond Micheal Payne jof Iowa.

UMass also is losing three outstanding players in Donald Russell, Horace Neysmith and Bobby Braun. Braun, a key reserve in his first three years here, moved to a starting spot at center and responded by finishing second on the team and third in the conference in rebounding. Russell, a co-captain and four year starter, ends his career as UMass' all-time leading scorer.

Neysmith, also a co-captain and four year starter, finished his senior year as the teams leading rebounder, second in the conference. He finished his UMass career as the schools number two all-time scorer and rebounder. These three men have helped lay the foundation for UMass' return to respectibility in collegiate basketball. We thank them and will miss them very much.

The NUMMO NEWS All American Team

Center, Patrick Ewing - Senior, Georgetown (who else?). Forwards: Keith Lee - Senior, Memphis State. Wayman Tisdale - Junior, Oklahoma. Guards: Chris Mullin - Senior, St. John's and Sam Vincent - Senior, Michigan State.

NUMMO's underrated All American Team

Center: Benoit Benjamin - junior, Creighton. Benjamin led the nation in blocked shots, finished second nationally in rebounding and averaged over 23 points per game. Some pro scouts rate him a better prospect than Ewing. Benjamin has a good mentor in his coach; former N.Y. Knick great, Willis Reed.

Forward: Alfredrick Hughes - senior, Loyola. Hughes is the fourth all-time scorer in NCAA history! A great player who can score at will.

Guard: Steve Mitchell - junior, V.A.B. Mitchell is a great defensive player who averages over 18 points a game and is among the nation's best playmakers.

Guard: Steve Harris - senior, Tulsa. Harris is a great scorer, averaging over 23 points a game. Some feel he may be better than Vincent and as good a guard as Chris Mullin.

Polling pole makes home in Whitmore

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

The tall, grey cylinder outside the Dean of Students Office, with a small computer screen and keyboard on it, looked like an automated bank teller.

But the machine, which appeared yesterday in Whitmore, produced survey questions, rather than currency, for the curious students who approached it.

The machine is a computerized public opinion survey called a "polling pole." It was given to the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office by Newsweek on Campus and is designed to poll students on "anything we ask it to," SAREO Director William Weitzer said.

"When Newsweek reports an opinion that is the general consensus of a particular campus, it gets that consensus through one of these machines," he said.

The machine will be in the front lobby of Whitmore for the rest of the semester "on a trial basis. Our only concern is that its questions don't get too specific," Weitzer said. The polling pole's computer will be re-programmed about every two weeks, to change the questions, and SAREO will have the chance to ask some of those questions.

"They get market research information, and we get free information about our students," Weitzer said.

The polling pole is operated jointly by Newsweek on Campus and UPI ASK, a marketing research firm affiliated with United Press International. SAREO is also participating as the on-campus sponsor of the computer.

Weitzer said because of its placement in the administration building, the machine will be programmed next semester to separate a random sample of students from everyone else who uses the survey machine, and use their opinions "to ensure that one specific type of student is not the only sample they get."

Regents to vote on tuition rise

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts tuition may be increased by $100 next year if the state Board of Regents of Higher Education approves that figure today when they meet in Buzzards Bay.

The $100 figure, the second highest of four options offered, was decided upon last week by the regents' Budget and Financial Affairs Committee. The higher figure would have been $112, according to Student Trustee James Keller.

At last week's meeting, UMass students lobbied for a "no increase" option, which would have been a balance to the Reagan administration's proposed financial aid cuts, but no such option was offered by the committee. Student Government Association President-elect, Dan Burgess said the regents refused this option because the legislature has to recognize that there are needs on campus.

Keller said the recommendation to raise tuition surprised him because of the surplus in the state budget and the fact that there will be no increase in state aid to compensate for "the severity of the (cuts)."

Stacy Roth, SGA co-president-elect, said the increase represented a "total disregard for student needs and concerns," and that a tuition increase was not necessary this year.

"It's a carryover from the attitude last year that students should pay a larger percent of their tuition. And since we raised a lot of hell last year when they (the regents) tried to pass their tuition policy," they are trying to accomplish it on a year to year basis.

"When the regents throw a $100 increase at you, the trustees throw a $261 increase (the Universal Resource Fee) at you, and there will be five different new fees on campus, it's more than just $100."

As a result of last week's sit-in, University administrators promised student leaders they would not support such an increase because of the passing of the Universal Resource Fee. According to the negotiations, the administrators will recommend to the Board of Trustees not to support the increase, who in turn will send that recommendation to the regents at today's meeting.

Roth said "there's no real rationale" for the increase listed on today's agenda. "They talk about some basic points, but they don't say the reasoning behind it."

Before the increase is implemented, it needs the approval of the whole board. "Usually the board rubber stamps the committee's decision," Keller said.

Increases slated for other public institutions are less, according to Estelle Shanley, the regent's director of public information.

Cops raid dorms, Southwood; find drugs and arrest three

Five dormitory rooms at the University of Massachusetts were raided for cocaine and marijuana by three police departments last Thursday night, the assistant district attorney said yesterday.

David Angier told the Collegian that two men and a woman were arrested as a result of searches in Van Meter, Cance and Butterfield dormitories and a Southwood apartment.

State, Amherst and UMass police collaborated in the arrests. Six search warrants were obtained Thursday to search the rooms.

The three people arrested were arraigned and released on their own recognizance.

Speech and survey focus on gay needs

Speaker stresses self-esteem

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The number one enemy of gays and lesbians is self-hate, and the shame is that some homosexuals have to live with this fear everyday, a former Liaison for Gay and Lesbian Concerns in Boston Mayor Kevin White's administration said last night.

Brian McNaught, a sex educator and lecturer, spoke to about 120 people in the opening lecture of Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week at the University of Massachusetts.

He said gays and lesbians must feel good about themselves before they "come out of the closet."

"It's a movement out of a closet of lies into the outside of truth. Begin loving yourself and read about men and women like you," McNaught said.

McNaught, a 37-year-old resident of Gloucester, said that being open about homosexuality is especially difficult from a child's point of view.

"You start at an early age divorcing yourself from the reality." He said, as a child, you begin "to tell fag jokes," just to set up "a smoke screen" so the other children won't know your honest sexual preference.

McNaught said the horror of growing up gay was "not having factual information and not having any role models" to look up to. He said this situation leads to a fear of letting people know about one's true feelings and this Study shows services lacking

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the second in a five-part series on lesbian, gay and bisexual students. Today's story focuses on satisfaction with available services.

In 1983, when the UMass Committee on Issues of Sexual Orientation questioned 22 services agencies on campus about the nature of their programs, 20 reported that they did not offer services specific to the needs of gay lesbian and bisexual students.

While all the agencies contacted - which included police, mental health services, residence halls, counseling and career development - offered services on the basis of such factors as gender and student status, only Health Services and the Everywoman's Center indicated they had special services for lesbians and gay men.

Grant Ingle, process consultant in the Office of Human Relations and a member of the committee, said he suspected the situation had "improved" since the survey was taken, adding: "We're doing a new survey to find out."

"We're going to agencies and service providers on campus and asking them if they are doing anything for gays and lesbians," said Felice Yeskel, human relations planner and advocate responsible for preparing a report for Vice

Missile freeze urged

LONDON (AP) — Europe's anti-nuclear protesters, marching by the tens of thousands in traditional Eastertime peace rallies, called on Washington yesterday to match Moscow's freeze on deploying medium-range missiles.

Arrests of trespassers and demonstrators were reported outside U.S. missile bases in Britain, Italy and West Germany, but police reported no major incidents linked to the anti-nuclear rallies.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher rejected the call made by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev on Sunday for a freeze on deployment of new U.S. cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in Europe.

Thatcher said to end NATO deployments now would "freeze in" an enormous Soviet advantage, estimated by the White House at 10 to 1.

Other U.S. allies in Europe declined specific comment on Gorbachev's announcement of a freeze, made in an interview with the Communist Party daily Pravda.

Garbachev said the Soviet Union would halt deployment of SS-20 medium-range rockets in Europe until November, but would resume the sitings if there were no similar action taken by the West. He also said he accepted President Reagan's offer to hold a superpower summit.

Initial press and political reaction in Europe was divided between those who dismissed the Kremlin gesture as a ploy aimed at splitting the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and those who hailed it as a breakthrough in the East-West impasse.

In the same story, Franks was quoted as saying that breathalyzer tests are accurate. It was Carlene Ricelli who commented on blood alcohol testing, and she said the blood test is very accurate, not the breathalyzer.

Soviet Union says U.S. ignores peace initiative

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union said yesterday that the Reagan administration had dismissed its "major new peace initiative" in an effort to diminish the plan's effect on world public opinion.

Visiting American congressmen welcomed Mikhail S. Gorbachev's announced readiness for a summit with President Reagan, but the official news media gave the summit short shrift and concentrated instead on trumpeting the Soviet leader's latest proposal on arms control.

Gorbachev on Sunday announced a moratorium on deploying medium-range missiles in Europe until November and renewed the Kremlin's call for a ban on testing space weapons during the U.S.-Soviet arms talks in Geneva.

The United States contends the Soviets have a great advantage in medium-range missiles already installed, and has said its space-defense research program is not negotiable.

Gorbachev proposals appeared on the front pages of the Communist Party newspaper Pravda and the government daily Izvestia. It was the main item on radio newscasts, which said it had attracted worldwide attention, and the evening television news carried laudatory interviews with factory workers.

Tass, the official news agency, said Gorbachev's proposals were stressed by Lev Tolkunov, head of the Soviet of the Union, one of two houses of the Soviet parliament, at a meeting with the visiting Americans.

The U.S. delegation led by House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill and the Republican minority leader, Robert Michel, is expected to get a fuller exposition of Soviet arms policy today from Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko.

Noted feminist Gloria Steinem.

Steinem calls for female individualism

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

Renowned journalist and feminist, Gloria Steinem, last night, called for women to develop the revolutionary power to make individual choices.

"It's not the choice we make that is important but that we gift each other with the power to make a choice. The point of feminism is diversity," Steinem said to over 800 at Smith College.

Steinem said in the 1950s women were "made to feel we had to give up our names and our identities if we were to become wives and mothers." And in the 1980s the "superwoman" myth that says a woman can have a career "only if you cook three gourmet meals, raise four successful children and dress for success."

Though equally dangerous, the superwoman myth is very different than earlier myths because it "makes the victim feel guilty," she said.

The problem will not be solved, Steinem said, until "men ask the question, 'How can I have a career and children at the same time.'"

She also said, 'Women will always be at the forefront of humanizing the workplace, but nothing will change until men make efforts."

The power to make choices and individual commitments is especially important now, in as Steinem called it, this second wave of feminism where women who have achieved "legal identity," are struggling for "legal equality."

Steinem noted that issues of reproductive rights, and equal pay, which make choices possible have "overwhelming support between men and women" but feminists have now come face-to-face with a "profound opposition, one of which occupies the White House."

"He (Ronald Reagan) is the most anti-equality president this country has ever seen. We have had presidents ignorant to equality, who say 'we should stop here, this is enough,' but this is the first president who has said we are going to turn the clock backward," she said.

Steinem said legislation introduced by Reagan and rightwing fundamentalists, attempts "to take away power of women to decide when to have children, to define sexuality and to restore the patriarchal structure on what their end depends."

Stressing that feminism is not a reform but a revolution, Steinem said since women are the only oppressed group that does not have a country, "Women must come together to make a psychic country, to give support, to say the unspeakable."

Steinem said she foresees great amounts of consciousness raising in the future.

Caldicott, author and activist, to hit on nuclear war and survival

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

When Dr. Helen Caldicott speaks about the "Threat of Nuclear War" tonight at the University of Massachusetts she may not "ruin your day", as she often says, but she will cast a gloomy view of your future.

But don't worry, because Caldicott, founder of Women's Action for Nuclear Disarmament, will tell you what you can do to help prevent the global destruction that would result from a nuclear war.

During her speech at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, she will also discuss the impact of recent national events including congressional approval to fund the MX Missile and Soviet Leader Mikhail Gorbachev's recent move toward halting medium range nuclear missile deployment.

"She will give an outlook on the country in light of the MX vote and on what people have to do," said Terry Shraeder, Caldicott's press secretary.

"It (the nuclear issue) is not taking care of itself," she said.

Caldicott, author of Nuclear Madness: What You Can Do, and Missile Envy, has received widespread support during the past few years in attempting to awaken people across the country to the effects of the nuclear nightmare.

Yet, at times she has also been criticized for searing her audiences and being too negative. She is often quoted as saying, "I am here to ruin your day," and during the last presidential election she reportedly told a group of elementary school students in Maine that if Ronald Reagan was re-elected they would not live past 30.

However, now that her message has been heard and her audiences are largely supportive, Caldicott is spending less time trying to open people's eyes and more time urging people to help prevent nuclear war.

"She is trying to mobilize people to activate and join groups. She can't do it all," Shraeder said.

Here in Massachusetts so many people are mobilizing that Caldicott is able to talk about her goals as being realistic in the next 20 years," she said.

However, Caldicott, who lives in Newton, still addresses educational aspects of nuclear war because as Shraeder says, "In some areas, people still have their eyes glued shut."

And, Shraeder said Caldicott's speeches are still largely negative because of the nature of the subject matter. "She still uses a negative appeal because the picture she paints is not rosy."

Caldicott has also criticized the press for not doing its homework on the nuclear issue and not covering it in a fair way.

"She feels they (the press) are not covering both sides and are not representative of how the people feel. The media affects how people react to issues like the MX missile," Shraeder said.

Caldicott's visit is co-sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program and The UMass Peacemakers.

In other police reports:

The theft of a $500 stereo receiver and the verbal assault of a male student were reported Sunday night, UMass police said.

The owner of the stereo reported the receiver missing from his 11th floor room in Washington tower after a friend discovered it missing Saturday. Police said the student had been having money problems with another resident who is a suspect in the theft.

After the theft, the student was threatened by the suspect, police said. Police said there will be a further investigation of the theft and past incidents involving money.

A stereo turntable was reported stolen Sunday from a second floor room in Van Meter dormitory. Nothing else was taken from the female student's room. Police believe that entry to the room may have been gained through an open window.

A hit-and-run accident in lot 49 of two parked cars was reported Friday night. Police said a pickup truck and a car were hit in the lot near Butterfield House. Total damage to the cars was $800, police said.

The theft of a 1978 Toyota was reported Friday night by a visitor to the University from Smith College. The car was parked in lot 31 and was stolen after approximately one hour. The value of the car is $4,500.

The theft of four hubcaps, valued at $300, was reported from the Campus Center garage Friday morning. The hubcaps were removed from a 1983 Chevrolet parked on the third level of the garage. There are no suspects.

UMass debator is best in U.S.

University of Massachusetts student Dan Povinelli was recently rated the best debator in the United States and his team ranked 9th in the nation in the National Debate Tournament.

Star Muir, director of debate at UMass, said this is the first time the team has been ranked in the top ten. "It's the intellectual equivalent of winning the Heisman Trophy."

"I feel two things about the tournament," Muir said. "I feel very pleased that they have come this far under my direction. We've done the best we've ever done. I'm very proud of the team."

"My second thought is that this is a young team and given solid financial support, this team should be in the top three next year," he said, adding that this is his final year as director.

The winning team is comprised of Danny Povinelli, a junior anthropology major, and Mark Friedman, a freshman political science major.

"Danny and Mark epitomize debate as a fun and intellectually stimulating activity. Their grasp of issues and their capabilities to translate their ideas often far exceeds their coach," Muir said. "In addition they have fun with the activity, enjoying it as a competitive clash of ideas."

The Debate Program was founded in 1909. Some of the team's most recent achievements include: winning the National Novice Championship in 1983.

was the worst aspect for him growing up gay in an Irish Catholic family.

"How can you say you love yourself when you're afraid to tell people," McNaught said. "You never trust that you're lovable."

While a senior at Marquette University in Milwaukee, he said he chose not to date any more women. "I would crack jokes just to keep from performing with women on dates."

McNaught said he met a man at a gay bar and had a relationship with him and that everything in "the world was right." However, he said he "couldn't stand living as a hypocrite and liar," because he was having trouble dealing with society's expectations of him, a gay man at age 24.

"One day I drank a bottle of turpentine," McNaught said. He said he later realized he made a mistake and learned a lesson that turned his life around.

"I swore I would never again live my life on other people's expectations."

McNaught said he wants to "communicate the message that being gay is a gift." He also said, "there is no data that supports bias against gay people," stating that people play "Bible bingo" when criticizing gays and lesbians by using quotes that gay opponents use to suppress homosexuality.

"You get to the point where you have to take responsibility for your beliefs," McNaught said. "Primarily, I like being gay because it's an essential aspect of who I am and I like myself."

★ Survey

Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis Madson on the needs of gay and lesbian students.

A pilot survey

Although quantative data on what is being offered is not yet available, a pilot survey of students conducted by Yeskel early last month raised the following comments on available services:

New Students Program: I felt like shit. Gay not mentioned once. No mention of any services. (Lesbian student)

Admissions: Admissions doesn't make it clear that gay people would feel comfortable at UMass. They don't mention gayness at all. (Gay student)

Library: There is a lack of many positive books on gay/lesbian lifestyles. (Gay student)

Health services: Health services always assumes I'm heterosexual. "You're taking birth control, aren't you?" is a frequent question. (Lesbian student)

Police: I feel that it is an incredible step for any gay/lesbian/bisexual student to contact the police if their sexuality is relevant to their complaint. (Gay student)

Residence Hall: They can be an oppressive place to live. I've experienced harassment and verbal abuse. (Gay student)

Students address needs themselves

Because of insufficient and inadequate services, the needs of gay and lesbian students on campus are largely being met by the students themselves, said Paul Throne, a member of the UMass Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Alliance (LGBA)

He said such students are being "burned out" and "overextended" because the University has failed to take responsiblity for a "healthy environment."

Not knowing who to trust

Sarah Boy, assistant to Madson, said she believes the lack of specific services is compounded by the problem of "not knowing who to go to and who to trust."

She said that although within many of the service agencies there are people sensitive to gay and lesbian concerns, there is little information on who they are, which "makes it even harder for people coming out."

John Jablonsky, president of the LGBA, commented that there "is nothing from the University about what exactly is available - you have to find out yourself."

Kathleen Offenhartz, a bisexual woman student, agreed that on campus, "It has to be made more obvious who the people are that deal with sexuality."

Because of thatlack of information, "those seeking services run the risk of confiding in potentially hostile service providers," according to the issues of sexual orientation report.

Throne cites the example of a friend of his who went to Health Services for a hepatitis shot and was told he would not have needed one if he "started dating girls."

The committee concluded in its report that it could not "in good conscience" publish a service directory of agencies "in which there could be no assurance of a sensitive, respectful reception for members of these populations."

Instead, the committee suggested the strategies for increasing the number of specific services, encouraging service agencies to be more explicit and improving the informal referral system.

Community center needed

According to Offenhartz, what is needed is a "recognized gay community center backed by the administration and staffed by professionals," which could act as a resource and referral center.

"There are wonderful people out there but we just don't know who they are," said Throne.

Tomorrow's story will focus on faculty support for gay and lesbian students.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

The need to do more

Leonardo da Vinci was gay. So were Witgenstein, Tchaikovsky, Tennessee Williams and Walt Whitman. Willa Cather was a lesbian. So were Gertrude Stein, Alice B. Toklas and the former president of Mount Holyoke College, Mary Wooley. Why were we never taught about these people's sexuality?

Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week differs from awareness weeks held for other groups of oppressed people, for it is difficult to celebrate the historical struggles, accomplishments and contributions of a people when their history has been bathed in silence. Gays and lesbians have been robbed of their past. Consequently, they have been denied the opportunity to take pride in the people they follow and they have been denied the opportunity for a strong base from which to gather strength and look with optimism to the future.

Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week highlights the need to stop ignoring the voice of this group. But is this campus listening?

This University does not seem to realize the unique contribution it can make in helping gays and lesbians reclaim their past and fight their present oppression. At UMass, there are few courses that focus on gay and lesbian issues. There are few courses that concentrate on their social, political or cultural contributions to our society. The library has gaps on its shelves where books and journals that portray homosexuality and bisexuality in a positive light should be. The University has three homophobia/heterosexism awareness trainers to educate a student body of 24,000.

Facilities offered—health services, legal services, and placement services, to name but a few—rarely cater to the needs of lesbian, gay and bisexual students. The list could go on—but it all points to the same question: why is there no central office for gay and lesbian affairs, staffed by professionals, to lobby for and support these students?

Without such an office, gays and lesbians at UMass are having their energies sapped by having to provide their own services and by battling on their own against institutional obstinacy. Currently, a report is being prepared for Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson on the concerns, needs and experiences of gay, lesbian and bisexual students on this campus. When he receives the report, let's hope he has the wisdom and foresight to urge the administration to add its voices to the students'.

For when gay, lesbian and bisexual students do stand up for their rights on campus they are frequently accused of being too "vocal"; "If they'd just shut-up there would be no problem." Should an oppressed people, whose rights are unprotected by state and federal law, remain quiet? Should an oppressed people be penalized for having the strength to stand up and discuss their sexuality in a society that likes to keep the topic taboo?

And if gays and lesbians don't stand up for themselves, who will? When a racist act occurs on campus, minority faculty speak out. When an anti-Semitic act occurs, Jewish faculty speak out. When a homophobic act is perpetrated, there is silence. This phenomenon means that gay and lesbian demands are often not treated with the serious consideration they deserve. It also emphasizes the need for the University to take steps in creating an atmosphere where faculty do not feel they are putting their professional credibility on the line if they reveal their sexuality.

Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week is a time for gays and lesbians to have a respectful focus on their concerns and a time for them to move in a supportive environment instead of one that is all too hostile. It is also a time for heterosexuals to learn more about, and be enriched by, the lesbians and gays in our community and a time for them to learn more about, and be enriched by, the lesbians and gays in our community and a time for them to unlearn some of the myths and stereotypes that all too often precipitate homophobic acts.

But the responsibility of everyone to be aware of lesbian, gay and bisexual issues should not be considered "spent" at the end of this week. If we are to have a society in which individuals are free to live and love as they please, in which each person is respected for their sexual orientation, awareness must be extended to become a life-long pursuit.

It's a question of respect

Yadira Betances

As a writer and editor of the Black Affairs section of the Collegian, I am constantly faced with a dilemma when writing about blacks. The A.P. Style Book, a journalist's bible, says that the term referring to people of African descent should not be capitalized. The Collegian follows this style, one which I believe to be insulting to the race when other nationalities are capitalized.

Since blacks were forcefully dragged to America, they have been referred to by many names which have not only degraded their character as citizens, but have also dehumanized them.

From African to Negro to nigger to colored, whites have labeled peoples of African descent as they see fit to justify their superiority. By not capitalizing blacks, editors of mainstream newspapers follow the same logic.

The controversy surrounding this issue has its roots in the early struggle to capitalize "Negro." An 1878 editorial in the Chicago Conservator by Ferdinand Lee Barnett was one of the earliest appeals; "It is certainly improper and since no one has ever given a good reason for this breach in orthography, we will offer one. White men began printing long before colored men dared read their work; (white men) had the power to establish any rule they saw fit. As a mark of disrespect, as a badge of inferiority, they tacitly agreed to spell his name without a capital."

W.E.B. Du Bois, founder of the NAACP said in 1916 that, "Not to capitalize 'Negro' under such circumstances is a direct and in these days a more and more conscious, insult to at least 150,000,000 human beings and no person or institution will persist in this insult if they realize that those persons regard the usage as such."

The term "black" emerged during the Black Power Movement of the 1960s when a large number of Afro-Americans decided to identify themselves as "black Americans."

Thus, because the term refers to a proper noun (blacks are no longer a real estate) it is proper grammar to capitalize it.

"White," unlike the term "black" is not capitalized because it is only an indicator of skin color and does not accurately denote a particular race or nationality.

As Barnett noted, as long as whites have the power to enact rules which affect peoples of color psychologically crippling their existence, white superiority will prevail.

Letters to the Editor

In life and death, true friendship endures

In memory of Bernard Beaver, veteran, former UMass student. His remains were found in the woods in Southampton last week. He had been missing since October of last year (Hampshire Gazette, April 2). Bernie, your death is a tragic loss and the sorrow is very bitter and very deep. It's a shame that this place so damn proud of its social awareness is so short of friendship to someone who is a little different; this place, so damn quick to rise to the call of injustice is condemning and cruel when someone is down and out; this place, so damn ready to make accusations of apathy is so callous and oblivious to those who fall beneath the wheel. Your friends will remember, Bernie, we promise.

Americans should study more about Japan

The Congress, which has a notion that Japan is protectionist has passed a bill in an attempt to open the Japanese market to American made goods. But is their notion correct? Last Thursday, the NY Times compared three kinds of trade barriers. According to them, the average of Japanese tariff on industrial imports will be 2.8 percent, compared with 4.4 in the US and 4.7 for the European Economic Community. Secondly, Japan imposes quotas in 27 categories, the US in 23, France in 46. But here the number of the so-called "voluntary self-quotas" which Japan has imposed under pressure by the US should be remembered. Third, 22.1 percent of the Japanese manufactured imports were subject to major non-tariff barriers, compared with 45.1 percent in the US and 36.5 in France.

Statistically, Japan cannot be proved as protectionist, so why does the US keep inspiring "Japan-bashing"? Is the trade deficit all Japan's fault? How many US companies try to study and understand Japan? How can one build up good relations with one's customers without speaking their language and without an understanding of their culture? Again, according to the NY Times, one study found that a minority of Americans study Japanese before arriving in Japan and only seven percent subscribe to a Japanese-language newspaper. The American way, just to walk in and to talk to a distributor, "Here is my product" doesn't seem to work outside of the US. The fact that Japanese bankruptcy rate is six times higher than that of the US would suggest its system doesn't discriminate against foreigners but against newcomers.

Before completely isolating Japan which is politically, economically and strategically important for the US and totally dependent upon the US, Americans should start rethinking their attitudes toward the outer world.

Nashville rock visits Northampton

Jason and the Scorchers
Sunday, April 7
Pearl Street, Northampton

By ALISON WONDERLAND and DOUG LITTLEJOHN
Collegian Correspondents

In an interview in Charlottesville, Virginia, Jason Ringenberg said: "Two hundred years ago they said the British were coming. We whupped 'em then and we're gonna whup 'em again with this brand of American rock n' roll."

Jason and the Scorchers, who hail from Nashville, were fast, tight and sizzling hot, per usual. With their unique mixture of country and high energy rock, the band brough a fresh American sound to the musically Brit-gripped area of Amherst/Northampton. Synthesizers, drum machines, and high fashion were waylaid as guitars, harmonicas and sweat took over. From the time the band kicked into "Last Time Around," off their recently released Lost and Found lp, to the last notes of "Honky Tonk Blues," they had the crowd in high gear. Despite the overbearing presence of Pearl Street security, the audience managed to cut some mean rug, as did the performers. Warner Hodges, the guitarist, displayed an exciting round of on-stage acrobatics including horizontal guitar spins and five foot jumps. The man had energy!

Highlights of the house-rocking selection included a blazing rendition of "Help!, Theres a Fire," off their Fervor ep; a heart-wrenching version of "Broken Whiskey Glass," and cuts from their most recent album, including "Shop It Around," "White Lies" (soon to be an MTV power cut—keep your fingers crossed), and "Change the Tune," with Warner Hodges' power guitar heroics in the spotlight.

The only respite from the blistering pace of the show was a song entitled "Pray for Me," when Hodges and Jason were seated on stage, and stirred souls with root vocals. They allowed the crowd to catch its collective breath, proving that country music played straight can appeal to a young audience. During the Charlottesville interview, Jason condemned the Nashville country establishment for aiming their music at "overweight, middle-aged women in polyester leisure suits." He went on to say that if the Nashville scene wanted to break free of their current trend of losing money, they would have to open up the country sound to the kids. Jason and the Scorchers do this with ease.

The encores were a very special part of the Sunday night show. The Scorchers make no secret of their true country roots, as their choice of encores clearly shows. The first encore, a Buddy Holly cover titled "Rave On," was a real scorcher (pardon the pun) as was "Honky Tonk Blues," originally done by Hank Williams, who Jason suggested was "right up there with God." The surprise of the evening was a beautifully peaceful version of "Amazing Grace," a fine closing for an Easter Sunday show.

Jason, who wears a 'Farming is the Backbone of America' sticker on his guitar, has not forgotten his roots. Nor have the rest of the Scorchers. Although Jason and Warner had to catch an early plane for New York interviews, the Scorchers came out into the club after the show, and were more than willing to chew the fat, even with people from north of the Mason/Dixon line. If Jason and the Scorchers are any indication of this "New brand of American rock n' roll," the British music scene is in trouble.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Power plus ignorance equals catastrophe states Robinson

By KIMBERLY BURGE
Collegian Staff

The protests leading to arrest at the South African Embassy in Washington will expand to corporations who do business in the white-ruled nation, according to the executive director of TransAfrica.

Randell Robinson, said last night at Amherst College, in the words of a white South African, that "Americans have to go to jail to get the attention of their own nation."

Robinson, the chief organizer of the recent nation-wide protests against apartheid in South Africa also spoke of ignorance in America about today's problems and their thoughts on them.

"Great power plus great ignorance equals great catastrophe," he said.

According to Robinson, "Since World War II, we have an amazing consistency of ending up on the wrong and losing side of social justice issues."

The main cause of paranoia in America seems to be communism, he said. "Americans seem to be fanatically opposed to communism, yet, one in twenty can spell it, one in fifty can define it, and students go to graduate school without ever reading a book by Marx," he said.

In turn, Third World people are caught in the middle of the superpower struggle. "We have to inform ourselves and teach the country how to select the right side of social justice issues," Robinson said.

He was reminded of Nelson Mandela, a black South African leader imprisoned for 23 years for his alleged attempt to overthrow the government. Recently, he was offered a chance to be free if he gave up his militancy against the government. But Mandela said, he "would rather die in prison upright than crawling and conceding my birthright."

"Everyone knows who Andrei Sakarov is. Why? Because he is white and opposed communism. We don't know about Nelson Mandela because he is black and opposes an ally," he said.

"We have never found a way to impose a small sanction on a most vicious nation only because the regime is opposed to communism," he stated. He went on to say that "the best friend Russia has is Ronald Reagan."

Not many people know what the term constructive engagement means. "In the last four years, the United States has exported over $100 million in military shop items to use against black South Africans. This is constructive engagement," Robinson said.

Robinson quoted Bishop Desmond Tutu and said, "If we don't change our policy, there will be a bloodbath in South Africa and the blood will be on American hands."

According to Robinson, our responsibility as Americans, students, and citizens is to "support one basic, fundamental social justice issue. By the end of the century, blacks will be in power in South Africa. They'll look around and see who helped them and who hurt them."

"It's funny," Robinson said, "when Sen. Lowell Weicker is arrested in front of the South African Embassy, apartheid suddenly becomes an issue. The victims remain invisible and unimportant."

Chilean aid sought

At 1 p.m. on Sunday March 3, a large earthquake measuring 7.6 on the Richter scale shook vast sectors of the central region of Chile. The areas worst hit were the large port city of Valparaiso, neighboring cities and towns and the heavily populated capital city of Santiago.

One hundred and eighty lives perished in the earthquake with 2000 injured and 60,000 homes were destroyed leaving 200,000 homeless. For this reason Chileans need your help. Chilean residents in the state of Connecticut and in Amherst with the help of churches, and other organizations have responded by launching a "Chile Relief Campaign". Through this effort, they collect medicine, clothes, school supplies, money and toys. All material collected will be sent to and distributed by Catholic Church Community Organizations in Chile.

Donations of any kind can be made in Amherst to Ester Orellana by calling 256-0542.

WHEN IT COMES TO GOOD SKINCARE SIMPLE IS BEST

Any experienced dermatologist will tell you that all the skin care you need is a proper cleansing twice a day-and, for dry skin, some selective moisturizing.

This is the credo of Clinique. Developed by a group of leading dermatologists. Clinique skin care products have brought the simple truth to today's beauty world.

You begin by learning your skin type from the Clinique Computer, a service that's available wherever Clinique products are sold.

This determines the products that are right for you. Use them faithfully. Watch your skin get better. It's that simple.

Crichlow took the 100 in 11.0 and the 200 in 22.7. Geoff McIntosh won the 800 for UMass in 1:56.2 and Waybe Levy took the steeplechase in 9:32. The UMass 4 x 100 relay team also won with a 43.5.

In the field events, Ferdie Adoboe won the triple jump with a 47-2½. The Minutemen also garnered seven second places in their opening meet.

Taking to the road last Thursday, the University of Massachusetts men's volleyball team pounded the Bruins of Brown University, 3-15, 15-7, 16-14, and 15-4, boosting their record to 1-3.

"This win definitely gives us a boost," UMass junior co-captain John Chin said. "It's been really slow starting the program, but beating them the way we did proves that we deserve recognition."

The Minutemen struggled early as team members appeared tense and uncomfortable, a stark contrast to the Bruins' confidence. Utilizing a strong blocking defense, the Bruins waltzed through the opening game 15-3.

UMass clogged the middle in the second game as sophomores Roger Chapman and Brian Evans continually thwarted Bruin rallies.

With the match even at 1-1, the Minutemen held off a late rally in taking the second game. The bear-like Chapman, a savage competitor, keyed the victory envoking fear in the eyes of the baffled Bruins.

Minutewomen back on track, destroy Dukes

Stockley, Rever post 1-hitters

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

For the struggling University of Massachusetts softball team, Monday's doubleheader win over hapless Duquesne was like a breath of fresh air.

Hurlers Lynn Stockley, who still has not given up an earned run since coming back from South Carolina, and freshman Lisa Rever each threw one-hitters in the 6-0 and 13-0 routs of the Dukes.

UMass, 10-11-1, hit the ball hard, rocking the Dukes for 13 hits in each game.

But more importantly, UMass got themselves back into the Atlantic 10 race with a 3-2 record. They face Penn State Thursday in a doubleheader at NOPE and St. Joseph's and Temple this weekend in Philadelphia for four crucial games. UMass also faces non-conference foe Sacred Heart in a doubleheader today at 2 p.m. at NOPE.

"It was quite a contrast from Friday afternoon," coach Elaine Sortino said. Last Friday, A-10 rival Rutgers nipped UMass in two one-run ball games thanks to a host of UMass errors, including six in a 6-5, 10 inning loss.

Yesterday, the Minutewomen committed just two errors in the first inning of the opener and then on the defense settled down.

"We executed pretty well today," Sortino said. "I felt both pitchers had solid performances and the defense played well behind them."

UMass engineered two double plays in the opener while Stockley mowed down the Dukes with 10 strikeouts. Rever added nine herself in the nightcap. Stockley improves to 5-5 with 57 K's and a 0.29 ERA. Rever improves to 4-2 with 34 K's and a 0.62 ERA.

"We just got on top of things offensively," Stockley said. Rever added, "We were clutch. We hit with runners on base."

Reed scored on an error in the first inning of the opener and UMass led 1-0. It was close until the fourth when the Minutewomen exploded for four hits, three runs and two RBI for the insurmountable 4-0 lead.

UMass' Cathy Reed dives back to first, but not before Duquesne firstbaseman Linda Highfield tags her out in action yesterday at NOPE field.

Freshman right fielder Chris Ciepiela led the show going two-for-three with a triple and two RBI. Reed and Carol Frattaroli also went two-for-three and catcher Beth Talbott went two-for-two.

"We started off kind of flat but we came through and started to hit well," Frattaroli said. "We have to start up and stay up."

UMass took a 5-0 lead in the second game, another offensive slugfest. Catcher Ilene Freeman, who went two-of-four, including a triple and home run with 3 RBI, led the way for UMass. Ciepiela again hit well with a three-for-four performance including a triple and three RBI.

It won't be that easy against Sacred Heart, a Division II power that went to the Final Four last season, in the doubleheader this afternoon at 2 p.m. at NOPE.

"They are a very, very, very strong team," Sortino said, "One of the strongest you'll see here. It'll be a good opportunity to excute against a good sound ballclub."

But UMass will be really concentrating on the Atlantic 10. The Minutewomen have to finish in the top four of the seven team league to make the A-10 tourney. An automatic bid to the NCAA's awaits the A-10 champion.

"We just have to win," Frattaroli, an all-conference pick at second last year, said. "We just can't lose again until... sometime in June."

SOFTBALL SOUNDINGS -- The NCAA has instituted a new championship rule that is being used in all A-10 games. In extra innings (after seven in softball), every inning is started with a runner on second base.

The rule is designed to bring about a result, faster. It was devised after a 26 inning, two-day game last spring at the NCAA championships.

"It puts the pressure on you," Sortino said. "It makes the games more exciting to watch. If we won, we would be saying how great it is."

Rutgers beat UMass twice in extra innings last Friday. In the bottom of the 10th of the opener, two passed balls enabled the runner to score from second.

In the nightcap, a double up the middle scored the runner from second and the Knights had the 2-1 win.

UMass baseball manager Dick Bergquist and the Minutemen face Harvard today at 3 p.m.

Minutemen look for sixth straight

Red-hot baseball hosts Harvard

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team, riding a five-game win streak hosts perenial Ivy League powerhouse Harvard at Lorden Field today at 3 p.m.

While UMass enjoyed sunny weather yesterday, apparently Worcester did not as yesterday's scheduled game at Holy Cross was postponed to May 13.

UMass manager Dick Bergquist wasted no time in preparing the 9-7 Minutemen for today's game as the team took the day to gear up for the Ivy League champs. However, Bergquist said he would rather have had the team play than practice.

"I was disappointed that we didn't get to play today because we've been on a roll," he said. "The work should also have helped our pitching."

The Minutemen are red-hot, winners of six of their last seven games and are in first place in the Atlantic-10 after their three game sweep of St. Joseph's last weekend in Philadelphia.

The Crimson (6-6) are alway tough (beating UMass 8-4 last year at Harvard) and are coming off a wild two-game split with Navy, taking the first, 17-5 while dropping the second 13-3.

The veteran squad is led by the senior captain and cleanup batter Elliot Rivera (.462, two home runs, 14 runs batted in), the designated hitter, senior Mickey Maspons (.381, three, 15) and junior leadoff batter Bob Kay (.388, one, nine, nine stolen bases).

The Minutemen will probably face lefthander Chris Marchok (1-1, 3.86 earned run average) but will also have to prepare for seniors Charlie Marchese (2-0, 5.23 ERA), a righthander, and lefthander Jeff Musselman (2-1, 5.29 ERA).

The Minutemen are led by seniors Todd Comeau (.382, 19 RBIs) and Angelo Salustri (.316, four, 15). Comeau, the designated hitter, is coming off a lower back injury but is swinging the bat well. The pair, along with junior first baseman Jeff Cimini (.375, one, 12) have been on an offensive tear lately combining for 12 hits and 13 runs batted in over the weekend.

Expected on the mound for UMass is freshman Brett Valentini (0-0, 2.45 ERA) whose last start was a strong five inning performance against UConn in which he received no decision.

"Comeau was our best looking hitter against St. Joseph's," Bergquist said. "He's swinging the bat real well along with Salustri who hit two homers at St. Joseph's.

The most pleasant surprises have to be the work of the freshmen Steve Allen, Darrin O'Connor and Matt Sheran. They are all talented players and were recruited as such, but we really didn't expect such immediate contributions. We're really pleased with their play," Bergquist said.

The Minutemen are on a tear, but of concern to Bergquist was whether yesterday's postponement against Holy Cross would have an effect on the team. Certainly he would rather have had the team play than practice.

"The work would also have helped our pitching," the manager said.

BASEBALL BANTER: With the Minutemen currently on a roll winning six of seven since returning from their 3-6 Southern tour, the recent success has overshadowed an ever growing injured list which includes second baseman Jack Bloise (pulled leg muscle), catcher Todd Ezold (torn tendons in his left hand) and utilityman Tom Fabian (broken nose). Bergquist hopes both Ezold and Bloise can be ready for action by the end of the week but is unsure of when Fabian will return.

UM golf and volleyball win, track falls

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's golf team ran its record to 5-0, beating Boston College and Holy Cross on a cold and snowy Hickory Ridge course on Thursday.

UMass was led by Charlie Ross and Tim Smith who both carded a 78. BC's Chris Vandervelde was the top golfer with a 77.

Bill Conley had an 81, Joe Petrin an 82 and Tyler Shearer an 84 as UMass, with a 403, outdistanced BC's 421 and the Cross' 435.

In track on Saturday, the UMass men's team had two victories by sprinter Rawle Crichlow but fell to Dartmouth 99-55.

Planning for the Future Today

Dear Readers and Supporters,

As this semester draws closer to completion and warm weather finally begins to settle in, many of us may forget or take for granted that we must continue to work for the future of our organizations. NUMMO NEWS and many other organizations, are now beginning to make plans for the coming school year.

During the past year, the staff of NUMMO has worked diligently to produce a quality publication that addresses the needs and concerns of students of color on this campus. While we have not always succedded in achieving this goal, the effort and sincerity has always been present.

Unfortunately, many of us cannot continue our work here. While NUMMO is very important to us, we must also begin to place academics and other personal concerns into the forefront.

For those of us who have been involved in NUMMO for a long time, leaving will be difficult. We hope, and we are making a plea now, that you the members of our community, will begin to take an active role in the support and continuation of this vital news organization.

NUMMO is now accepting applications for production work and nominations ofr editorial positions. The work is hard, no doubt, but the rewards are many. The friendships made, the skills attained, the knowledge shared and the satisfaction of knowing that you are contributing to the growth of your community are just a few of the rewards that we have all been exposed to. It is time now for new leadership, new ideas and new commitments to guide this organization.

But it can't be done without you, without all of us working together. This April 25th will mark the tenth year anniversary of NUMMO, a remarkable accomplishment in itself. Yet to reach our 20th year, to grow and move forward will not be an easy task.

Right now we depend on the Collegian in order to publish. However, we are coming closer to our goal of self-sufficiency and if we work together this goal and many more, more become reality. So please come to our office in room 103 New Africa House, attend our meetings on Monday's and Wednesday's at 3:30, find out how you can become involved. Oh, and by the way, work-study and non work-study paid positions and academic credits are available.

Gospel Music Celebrates Dr. King

by Christopher Allen
Nummo Correspondnet

"We've come this far by Faith," was the theme last week, as over one hundred people gathered at the Campus Center Auditorium last Thursday to commemorate the life of Martin Luther King Jr. on the 17th anniversary of his brutal assassination.

Gospel music was the highlight of the evening, as choirs from all over the area joined together to sing the praises of God in honor of Martin Luther King Week. The program began with a candlelight vigil conducted by all the choirs. Awards were presented to Amherst Junior High School students for a Martin Luther King Essay contest and the music began.

UMass' own Angelic Voices, conducted by Doris Clemmons, made their debute performance and received a warm welcolme from the crowd. The Amherst Gospel choir, the Springfield Community Choir and the Greater Bethlehem Choir from Newark, N.J. also gave excellent performances. Soloist Rhonda Jolly seemed to touch the core of many hearts with her beautiful selections. As one member of the audience was heard saying, "Praise God for such wonderful singing."

The musical voices of soloist Precilla Clemmons and the Genesis choir along with the words of wisdom from guest speaker Dr. Brian Mosley, and evangelist from the Greater Bethlehem Church in New Jersey, made the evening complete. Special thanks must go out to Doris Clemmons, CCEBMS Advisor, who did an excellent job coordinating the event and helping to make sure the Dream of Martin Luther King lives on.

New Self Defense Class

A new style of Karate is being taught at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst - The Universal Budu System of Karate created by Abdul Mumeet S. Sharif.

Abdul Mumeet S. Sharif, who is the only holder of a tenth degree Red belt in this system, is the founder of the Universal Budo Karate Academy. Sharif, a proud Vietnam veteran and a Muslim, created this system in 1963 and it was recognized by the World Professional Karate Academy in 1973.

Sharif said that he began the martial arts at the age of eight. He also added that self-defense is not new to his family. "The art of self-defense has been taught for many years in my family. I come from a family of warriors," aid Sharif.

When he was asked what led him to teach karate he replied, "It was the physical rehabilitation program at Westover, Massachusetts that started me teaching karate." At this program Sharif was recovering physically from leg and knee surgery for combat injuries he recieved in Vietman.

From his first school, which is located in Springfield, Mass., the Universal Budo Karate Academy had grown and expanded nationally. Sharif said that he has personally taught over 1,000 students and over 3,000 students have been trained under his system. He has also taught students from several countries, and the Karate Academy has schools from New York to California. However, rapid expansion was not Sharif's first priority. "We kept it small for a reason, to bring quality instruction to students," he said. Also Sharif is now teaching for the town of Amherst whose students have evaluated him most highly.

Sharif then emphasized that even though martial arts schools are widespread in America, many of them fail to provide quality instruction to students. "We need morals and ethics in these schools," said the Master of self-defense. His observations of drinking and smoking in other martial arts schools led him to that conclusion.

This attitude of speaking the truth to correct the wrong is even displayed in his patriotism, "I don't go along with all that is advocated, but I do believe in the U.S. Constitution and its defense," remarked Sharif. He then added, "I have ancestors who died for this country. We must stand up and live for truth. I am against Communism and Nazism. We must speak out against wrong against all nationalities." Furthermore, he said that he is directly opposed to the overthrow of the U.S. government because it is the last existing democracy on the Earth in his opinion.

Since leaving the military he has not carried a fire arm. When he was asked why he chose not to, he replied, "If you become familiar with your feet and your hands that's all you need. We teach you how to take weapons away from the aggressor." In fact, a part of Universal Budo Karate Academy's oath, which is said at the opening and closing of class, states that they do not carry and weapons, but will use any the attacker has with them.

The Universal System is very rigorous, but the hard work does pay off. One such person it has paid off for is Dick Vita, who has studied under Sharif for seven years. Vita will also be a head instructor for the NorthEast Region.

In concluding, Sharif had a warning for those who intend to join the Universal Budo Karate Academy and intend to use karate negatively. "If we find out that are a bully we will excomunicate you. OUr main objective is to turn out descent human beings for humanity."

The Brothers in Vietnam

by Rod Clare
Nummo Staff

It was "a war like no other we ever fought...If we had listened to the vets when they came home, we could have moved this country forward a hundred years in human relations, "Wallace Terry, famed author of Bloods, said in reference to the Vietnam War in front of a capacity filled Student Union Ballroom last Monday.

Bloods is Terry's critically acclaimed book on Black soldiers in Vietnam and in it a sense of the history of the Black man's struggle for recognition in America can be seen. Terry's lecture also strived for an integration of Blacks into the American mainstream. He started by recounting the history of Black participation in all of America's wars of which he has not received his due recognition.

Talking about his own growing up years, Terry said that from the movies he saw it seemed "white soldiers were invincible and Black soldiers were invisible." When Terry was sent to Saigon to cover the war as a TIME magazine correspondent he said he "found Blacks were everywhere." Even though Blacks made up a sisproportionately high number of the fatalities, with the frontlines being cal----led "soulville" at first, Blacks filled in all kinds of duties in an integrated army and he felt that e-equality between the races had finally come about.

Then a new breed of Black soldiers came along. When the dr^ft was implemented to increase the fighting forces, Black youths from the ghettos who were knowledgeable on Malcolm X and Richard Wright were coming into the armed forces. These "Bloods" formed bonds of friendship that were very strong. Stated Terry, "When they saw confederacy flags or cross burnings they rebelled, held meetings, dev-eloped their own handshakes, and even their own flags."

"Nobody was as cool as the Bloods" said Terry. With wonderment in his voice, he noted that the Bloods wore black beads, black arm-bands, black berets instead of helmets, and even black sunshades while fighting in his jungle.

However even the coolest of the cool sometimes needed a crutch to fall back on. Some took to alcoholism, some to drug dependency, and others to overeating. Being a Blood also meant facing death quicker because units with Bloods were almost always up on the front line as the coveted rear assignments were few and far between for Blacks in general. There was also additional pressure from the North Vietnamese who stated that Blacks should go back to the U.S. and fight for their rights instead of killing off another people of color.

When the Bloods came back to the U.S. after their tour of duty, Terry noted that either no one cared about what happened to them or they were scorned for participating in a war that Terry said "we had no business being in."

Terry said regrettfully that it is just now that veterans are getting the recognition that they deserve whether their cause was right or wrong. He also stated that his book has been misunderstood and that he wrote his book first as a human drama, second as an American story and third as Black history which noted the coming together of the two races on the front races.

The Truth About History

It was the Nile Valley specialist, Dr. Yosef ben-Jochannan who delivered the keynote speech at the Ancient African Civilizations Conference in March at Chicago State University.

Much of Dr. Ben's speech dealt with the many myths and distortions that exist in African history. One such myth that he discussed was the one in which the African Moses is credited of recieving the Ten Commandments from the God Jehovah. He said that the Ten Commandments are ten laws that have been copied from the Forty-Two Negative Confessions and have been subsequently credited to Moses. These Forty-Two Negative Confessions can be seen in the Tomb of Rameses the VI in the Valley of the Kings in Ta-Merry, or what is commonly known as Egypt.

From this Dr. Ben moved to the myth of European Jews building the pyramids. He asked, "Which German built a pyramid in Egypt? Which Pole? Which Czechoslovakian? Which Russian built a pyramid in Egypt? Adam and Eve was not mentioned when the first pyramid was buiilt. Abraham was not born when the last pryamid was built."

Dr. Ben then added that such information about the Negative Confessions and African people building the pyramids is not taught in colleges and universities, even those which have Black Studies Programs. "I am not knocking down the Black Studies Program. The intent was good, but it got screwed up in the works. Certain people started teaching there and universities were saying to teachers, 'you teach Home Economics'. Well, in the morning your teaching Black Studies," stated Dr. Ben.

Not only was Dr. Ben critical about the current state of the Black Studies program, but he was also critical of those Blacks who "begged" for a national holiday for the late Dr. Martin Luther King. Dr. Ben said that this act was "cowardly" and "dastardly" because, "it bismirches the character of Dr. King." He added that, "The Irish did not ask for a day, they took one. An Italian got lost,, and the Italians took a day for a man who got lost, and didn't have to go to Washington. The British did not give George Washington and O.B.E. for being polite to them; they gave it to those who fought for Britian. No way does a society award those who fought against it. I am so glad that Malcolm did not suffer such a fate, to have a president give him a day," expressed Dr. Ben.

Dr. Ben then asked some critical questions. "What is it that Hitler did that Victoria didn't do? What is it that Hitler did that George Washington didn't do? Is it when you keep an African in slavery it isn't slavery but when you keep a European in slavery it is slavery?" asked Dr. Ben.

Adding to this he said that the reason why such people as Alexander the Great and Catherine the Great are called "Great" is that they killed mainly Asians and Africans. However, if they had killed mainly Europeans, as Hitler did, they would not be called great at all, he added.

Dr. Ben ended his lecture in an extraordinary way. He got all of the Black men to say: "Black woman, I love you." Dr. Ben believes that the Black man has to show more respect and love for the Black woman as we did once in the ancient period of the Nile Valley.

SPORT TALK

On Monday, April 15th, one of the best fights of the last ten years will be held. "Marvelous" Marvin Hagler will attempt to defend his undisputed middleweight championship of the world against Thomas "Hitman" Hearns. The possobilities of this fight are so intriguing that many experts rate it dead even. First a look at the fighters:

Hearns is taller, faster and younger. Hagler, however, is stronger; a natural middleweight who has never been knocked out. Hagler usually starts off slow. Hearns comes out the "Hitman", looking for an early KO. Hearns is supposed to be vunerable to body punchesa, while Hagler stalks the body. However, Hagler has never fought anyone with the combination of size, speed, reach and power that Hearns has, and will have to overcome these factors to get to Hearns' body.

Hagler was tagged repeatedly with overhand rights in his Roberto Duran fight (which he won by decision). The overhand right os Thomas Hearns' best punch. However, Hearns did not look impessive against full middleweights like Murray Sutherland. Hagler supporters say, "If Hearns couldn't stop Sutherland how will he stop the Marvelous one?" Hearns supporters point to his outstanding victory over Duran and Fred Huthchings and say, "The Hitman is Back."

Well I'm not going to cop out and predict a draw. I predict that Thomas Hearns will defeat Hagler to win the Middleweight Championship of the world. Why? One reason is Hearns is younger, faster and has a longer reach. The other reason is that Hearns is a master boxer. He defeated Pipino Cuevas, he was beating Sugar Ray Leonard (out boxing him) until he ran out of gas (from dehydration). He defeated Wilfredo kBenitez with one hand (the other one was broken) and he destroyed Roberto Duran.

The best fighter Hagler had fought is probably Duran. Hearns had been in more of the big money fights and will not let the pressure get to him. Because of this Thomas Hearns should be the next Middleweight Champion.

For more than three years John Ruddock has been an active member of the student senate and other Third World organizations. "Effective time management is necessary to maintain good standing with the University. If people involve themselves in extra-curricular activities, that experience will assist them later in their carrers." Such were the words of John Ruddock, J.R. as he is affectionally called, a 20 year old senior here at UMass who frequents the Student Union Buliding,especially the fourth floor where the Senate office is located.

Being a native of New York, Ruddock attended Public School until due to what was termed his "disruptiveness in class" he was put through a test which resulted in him being reffered out of the public School to St. Anne's School, which is a small alternative private school for gifted children in Brooklyn Heights, New York.

In 1980, after he had exhausted the resources available, J.R. was transferred to Elizabeth Seeger High School; a small high school in Greenwhich Village, N.Y. where he completed his high school education.

In high school he recieved an Intelligence Quotent (I.Q.) of a162 rating and was declared a young genius.

Owing to his superb academic achievement, Ruddock was accepted at Syracuse University where he has intended to have a double major in Enginnering and Physics. However; after attending the summer program at Syracuse and a visit to the UMass campus, he decided to make the University of Massachuetts at Amherst his place of abode.

As Ruddock said, "Certain other factors which led to my choice of UMass over Syracuse were the land scope,theliberal atmosphere in the Pioneer Valley and, ironically now, the ample financial aid packet that was offered to me by this University."

Ever since his arrival here at the University in September of 1981, Ruddock has never ceased working and getting involved with various organizations. In 1982 he became the pioneer, along with Patti O'Niel and Olivia Ilano, of UHURU; a black organization of Third World artists.

Among the many organizations on campus that J.R. has been actively involved in are the Afrikan-American Students Society, the Duke Ellington Committee, Union Program Council, Students for Jesse Jackson and the Student Government Association., including the Third World Caucus.

Ruddock has been more than simply involved with the Third World Caucus. He is by far a dependable 'corner post' in the Caucus. As a good politician knows the 'tactics' of reaching the masses Ruddock has done likewise. He started WZZZ a small 1 watt radio station in Southwest, from where he was able to entertain and inform the public with the assistenace of the Black Mass Communications Project and W.M.U.A.

Freetime, sparetime or leisuretime for J.R. is something he has not yet experienced. Recently as a result of a success and proven leadership and ability to bring diverse groups together, Ruddock was elected speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

To the masses of students at UMass Ruddock encourages them to become involved in the resources that are available to them, especially Third World students.

"The Far World Comes Near"

A photographic exhibition based on the work of Joel Halpern, a professor of anthropology at the University of Massachusetts, and Sam Pettengill, a University of Massachusetts student, will be shown from April 4-15 at the Wheeler Gallery, located in Wheeler House, at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

"The Far World Comes Near" focuses on the two worlds of the Loation people, the worlds of Before and After. The world of Before is that of the Kingdom of Laos before 1975, as photographed by Joel Halpern before the most recent war in Indochina. These photographs from the old country touch on religous life in the royal capital of Luang Prabang, as well as aspects of village life. As a counterpoint, the world of After, as presented by Sam Pettengill, depicts the Laotian people in New England as new Americans. These photographs depict the parallel processes of intergration into American life, and the simulataneous maintenance of valued traditions on the part of New England's newest ethnic group.

Wheeler Gallery is open: Sunday - Thursday 7:00p.m. and Tuesday&Thursday 12:30 - 2:30p.m.

Conference For Minorities Interested In Law

Western New England College School of Law will present its spring "Minority Law Day" Saturday April 13, 1985 from 9:00a.m. to 4:00p.m. in the S.Prestley Blake Law Center.

The twice-yearly conference is designed to provide information to members of minority groups who are interested in studying law. Admission is free, and preregistration is recommended.

Among the guest speakers will be the Hon. Reginald Matthews, acting justice of the Supreme Court of the state of New York and supervising judge of the Bronx Family Court; and Beverly J. Hayes, assistant attorney general, Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Workshops, lectures, and panel discussions will address such topics as "How to Choose a Law School", "The Concerns of Nontraditinal Students", and "What Do Lawyers Do?". There will also be a mock law class.

An afternoon panel discussion will feature Judge Matthews and minority attorneys. They will discuss the practice of law, the skills that law school teaches, the problems of placement, and the need for minority lawyers.

The day will end with a reception for the participants. For more information, or to pre-register for "Minority Law Day,"callthe Law School Admissions Office at (413) 782-3111,ext.406.

Western New England College School of Law, serving 860 law students each year, is the only Massachusetts law school outside of Greater Boston. It is located on the campus of Western New England College, 1215 Wilbraham Road in Springfield.

Regents raise tuition

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

BUZZARDS BAY—The state Board of Regents Higher Education yesterday voted to raise in-state tuition $88 and out-of-state tuition $288, while rejecting earlier plans for higher increases.

The regents' rejected the original proposal calling for tuition to increase $100 for in-state students and $368 for out-of-state students, instead opting for the lower increase.

Last week the regents' Budget and Financial Affairs Committee proposed that the board raise tuition $100, the second highest of four tuition increase options. After almost an hour of debate, the board yesterday voted 7-6 against the original proposal. It then voted 7-3 in favor of the third highest option, which will raise UMass in-state tuition $88.

The board also voted to increase the existing tuition waiver program. Community colleges are currently permitted to waive 8 percent of tuition revenue and state colleges and universities can waive 4 percent. The board increased these limits by 1 percent.

Regents Chancellor John B. Duff justified the increase, saying the legislator requested the regents to raise $12 million in revenue. The original increase proposal would have raised $8.4 million.

The proposal approved yesterday will raise $7.1 million in revenue for the higher education system, $1.3 million less than the original tuition increase proposal.

"We feel that with what we're trying to accomplish on the waiver side, it was best to go with (our original proposal)," said David Paresky, chair of the budget committee.

Michael Ferrigno, director of the State Student Association of Massachusetts asked that the board consider the lesser increases.

"If this is the kind of increase we can expect when the (state) economy is so strong, what can we expect when it's not so strong?" he said.

Elizabeth Rawlins, a regent, referring to a remark that the difference between the proposal was only $12 said, "Twelve dollars may not mean anything to us, but at my place of employment if you do not have $12 of the fee you don't register."

Ferrigno called yesterday's vote a "tremendous victory for students, especially at UMass" because tuition was not increased at the higher level.

In other regent business, the board voted unanimously to declare a portion of land at UMass be used as a rekresidence for the mentally retarded. The UMass Board of Trustees voted last week to approve the transfer of land.

Disarmament is urged by activist

By JOHN YONCE

If Americans do not learn how to "use their democracy" and change the weapons policies of the United States, the destruction of the earth by nuclear war is inevitable within 10 years, renowned author and peace activist Dr. Helen Caldicott said last night.

"You have an incredible priviledge and responsibility living in this country," Caldicott, an Australian, said "If you don't use it you're going to destroy this planet...you and the Russians." Caldicott spoke for about an hour and a half about the implications and causes of nuclear war to about 800 people in the Student Union Ballroom.

"I don't know what they teach you in school but they don't teach you how to use your democracy," she said. Caldicott pointed out that in Australia citizens are fined $5 if they fail to vote. "Look what I've done in your country and I'm not even a citizen and I'm a woman," she said.

Caldicott said that the American government is not listening to what its citizens want, and it is their responsibility to make them listen.

"The way Reagan's building weapons will make nuclear war inevitable," she said. Reagan is leading the Russians in the arms race, and by the Russians following his lead, it's affecting the U.S.

"We're putting the destiny of this nation in their (the Russians) hands," she said. "They decide whether we wake up in the morning, we don't."

Discussing the issue as communists against capitalists makes no sense, Caldicott said, since Nixon made an alliance with China, which has one million people.

"We've got more communists on our side than they do," she said.

Recent weapons developments, such as the Trident submarine, Pershing II missiles and the MX missile, have increased the chances of nuclear war, she said. The Pershing II missiles, only two minutes from Moscow, increase the chance of an exchange because of the closeness of the weapons and the chance of computer error.

"Russian computers are less sophisticated," she said. Although Reagan refuses to sell them any, she said, "you'd figure it's in our best interest to sell them to prevent possible errors."

Caldicott pointed out that in November of 1979, the U.S. was 13 minutes from a nuclear exchange because of a computer error. The U.S. defense system had 255 errors last year, she said.

One Trident submarine carries enough nuclear weapons to destroy the entire Northern Hemisphere, Caldicott said. Reagan is requesting funding to produce 10 of them, she said.

Homemade bomb injures student

A University of Massachusetts student was reported in satisfactory condition yesterday after an explosion shook his dormitory Monday afternoon, leaving him seriously injured.

Robert Nixon, 20, was found bleeding profusely with a piece of metal protruding from his abdomen after a pipe bomb he and two friends in Washington Tower had constructed from a bicycle pump and explosive powder blew up, UMass police said.

Arthur Clifford, a University spokesman, said the students were "using the device to blow toilet paper out of the window" of their third-floor room late Monday afternoon.

"They apparently packed the tube of the pump too tightly with toilet paper and the fuse died," Clifford said. "When the injured student walked over to examine it, the device exploded and he was struck in the stomach with a piece of jagged metal from the pump."

The explosion blew out the room window and imbedded pieces of the metal pump into the wall, Gerald T. O'Neill, director of the Department of Public Safety, said.

The sophomore from Roslindale, who was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital and underwent emergency surgery Monday night to remove the piece of metal, will be released later this week.

The explosion is under investigation by the state fire marshal.

In other police reports:

Eggs, milk and turpentine were splashed in and outside of a university professor's car while it was parked in lot 32 Monday. Police said broken beer bottles were also found near the 1980 Volkswagen. The professor told police that he did not know who might have vandalized the car.

Black lesbians face 'triple jeopardy'

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

The combination of being a woman, being black and being a lesbian means living a life of "triple jeopardy," Barbara Smith said last night in the keynote speech for Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week in Bowker Auditorium.

Smith, a black lesbian feminist and author said in her speech "Acts of Faith, Acts of Courage: The Movement of Lesbians and Gay Men of Color," that to be a black lesbian takes a "great deal of stamina and courage."

She said that for Third World lesbians and gay men fighting homophobia is particularly difficult because "racism infringes on our lives and makes us need our community of origin more than white people."

Because of this need to "maintain ethnic credibility" it is "hard to express who we are," she said.

Smith, noting that black lesbians are tripley oppressed, laughed at the suggestion once made to her that she "came out because it was politically correct."

State hires firm to quicken hazardous waste clean-up

BOSTON (AP)—The state has signed a $5 million, two-year contract with a private engineering firm to attack Massachusetts hazardous waste problem by speeding up site investigations, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis announced yesterday.

The governor said the contract awarded to the Wehran Engineering Co. of Middletown, N.Y., provides a way to step-up enforcement efforts without creating a permanent new bureaucracy inside the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering.

Addressing a Statehouse news conference on the second anniversary of the state "Super-fund" clean-up law, Dukakis described the contract as "a major next step on the road to providing safety and security to our citizens."

But activists familiar with the hazardous waste problem said privately that the publicity surrounding the announcement was designed to counter charges that DEQE has lacked the staff for aggressive enforcement.

The governor's press conference also came one day before a special legislative commission is due to release a report recommending the creation of a new board to push public agencies toward swifter resolution of the health and financial problems caused by disposal of toxics.

News of the Wehran contract also came eight days before the Legislature's Natural Resources committee is scheduled to consider legislation proposed by the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group that would commit the state to spending more money on an accelerated clean-up plan.

Flanked by his top environmental officials, Dukakis said the hiring of Wehran Engineering as a "field investigation team" will lead to quicker site assessment at more than a dozen of the 452 confirmed and suspected hazardous waste sites across the state.

Phone service jeopardized

New users must place orders

BOSTON (AP) — New England Telephone is warning new and moving customers that they must specify a company to handle their long-distance calls or find themselves unable to make connections.

A recent federal court ruling means long distance calls of new customers living in so-called "equal access" areas cannot be automatically handled by American Telephone & Telegraph Co., New England Telephone spokesman Peter Cronin said Monday.

In the past, customers who opted for long distance carriers other than AT&T had to dial special local telephone numbers, access codes, an area code and the number.

After the breakup of AT&T, telephone companies have been required to create "long distance equal access" areas where any long distance company can be used by dialing number in one of the areas will be asked when they apply for service what long-distance company they wish to use, Cronin said.

"If you do not choose a long-distance carrier by the day before your local service starts, per the court order, we will be required to block your long-distance calls" Cronin said.

Congress's compromise brightens financial aid outlook

by DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

A recent compromise over cuts in student federal financial aid between the Reagan administration and Senate majority leader Robert Dole R-Kan. may enable many students to stay in school, but some people are still not satisfied.

The compromise, calls for slashing $352 million from the higher-education assistance budget instead of the $2.3 billion cut Reagan had originally requested.

Reagan had asked for a denial of loans to students from families earning an adjusted gross income of $32,500 or more, and a total federal loan and grant cap of $4,000.

The Dole compromise lifts the income ceiling to $60,000 and caps the total amount of federal loans and grants at $8000.

Director of Financial Aid at the University of Massachusetts Arthur Jackson said the new proposal would leave most UMass students safe from cuts.

"Very few, if any, (would be affected). We don't have any students getting aid whose parents make over $60,000," Jackson said.

But he said he is "still opposed to a cap on things," because a cap on income does not take into account variables, such as family savings, home equity, number of children in the family and other things. "There are no two families making $60,000 that are alike," Jackson said.

A spokeswoman for Rep. Jim Collins, D-Amherst said Collins is "happy, but it's still going to be very difficult. There are still students losing their loans and those who won't get them."

"It's obviously going to help but it's still a compromise," said Cindy Howland, president of Students Advocating financial Aid, a UMass based group that sent 55 people to Washington last month to lobby against aid cuts.

Jackson said the compromise will be discussed in a fiscal conference committee in the next few months where further adjustments will be made, and finally sent to the House and Senate for a congressional vote which may make or break the plans of college students across the country.

★Smith

"In what context is it politically correct to be a lesbian or gay?" she asked the audience, adding that because "these identities are so appallingly thought of in our society" it might not be the wisest choice.

"I don't think anyone chooses to be lesbian or gay, they choose to come out," she said, adding "all of us who are lesbian or gay know these are primal feelings."

Smith reflected on her own experience of "coming out" and said she did so in the mid-1970s when the "women's movement taught me I could be a lesbian and still care about the things I cared about."

"Meeting other black lesbians pulled me through," she recalled, because it made her drop the stereotype she had that lesbianism meant "low-life and street-life."

Smith talked on a number of popular misconceptions around the issue of homosexuality and identified as a key on the belief that "lesbian and gay oppression is not as serious as other oppressions and it is a private, not political, concern."

She said this fallacy grows from "the lack of desire of people to be held accountable for our oppression."

"If they acknowledge we are oppressed they have to acknowledge they are oppressing us," she said.

Other misconceptions she described included "homosexuality is a white problem or white disease" and homophobia is acceptable where other bigotry is not."

Smith believes that the key to addressing issues of oppression lies not in "nice opinions" but in "activism."

She said that one of the qualities of the activism of the Third World lesbian and gay movement was that of a "multi-issue approach" that both challenges "racism in the white gay and lesbian movement and sexism in our own movement."

Sex stereotypes attacked

Panelists say more understanding needed

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Staff

The reasons for a person's sexuality are not definite and concrete but varying and complex in nature, concluded participants in a panel discussion yesterday at the University of Massachusetts as part of Gay Awareness Week.

The panel consisted of three speakers and Sylvia Forman, a UMass anthropology professor who served as mediator.

Michael Gross, special academic program director of Hampshire College, said there are problems with the way that biological researchers approach sexuality.

"There is a lack of understanding about how human beings are," Gross said. Stereotypes remain a part of scientific research, he added: "Gay men are expected to be effeminate and lesbians are related to aggressive, masculine women."

"It's wrong to be so mechanistic. Sexuality is personal and idiosyncratic in nature," he said.

Biological conditions are not the only factor determining sexuality, added anthropologist Catherine Bateson. "We start with biological givens and then elaborate," she said.

To be gay is not only a sexual preference but "a complicated decision with profound commitments," she said.

There are "homosocial" bonds between men and women, author Eve Sedwick said, adding that bonds between men are very different than those between women. "Men's bonds are what make up and control the culture, while women are regarded as objects," she said.

There is a variety of types of bonds one can have with one's own gender, but men's bonds are more subject to scrutiny and more attempts are made to define the relationships, Sedwick said. "Male bonding is structured around homophobia."

The panelists agreed that individuals are affected by many factors, ranging from one's childhood to previous sexual relationships. "One must find a way into social niches in a complex system," Bateson said.

"There's a tunnel vision where sexuality is concerned," Gross said.

But now, added Bateson "We are moving into a society which allows for a greater range of choice."

Professors called delinquent on support of homosexuals

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the third in a five-part series examining gay, lesbian and bisexual students on campus. Today's story focuses on faculty support for these students.

> "Without a continuing base of faculty support we are simply seen as a bunch of rowdy students and our demands aren't taken seriously."
> —Paul Throne, LBGA member

The reluctance of faculty members to take a stand and support gay, lesbian and bisexual students on campus is a "definite problem," according to John Jablonsky, President of the student Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Alliance at UMass.

Jablonsky observed that when racist, sexist or anti-Semitic acts occur on campus concerned faculty are quick to speak up, but "this doesn't happen with homophobic incidents."

"Without a continuing base of faculty support," Paul Throne, a member of the LGBA said, "we are simply seen as a bunch of rowdy students and our demands aren't taken seriously."

Asked why faculty support was so little in evidence Ann Ferguson, a UMass philosophy professor who describes herself as "lesbian, feminist, Marxist," replied, "I would speak out if someone came to me."

She said she would be glad to speak up but because of her other commitments she doesn't "go out to look for extra groups," so communication would have to be "student led."

UMass Professor of Women's Studies Janice Raymond agreed that "faculty do not come forward because they haven't been asked," and she suggested that channels of communication between students and faculty be improved.

Ferguson said gay and lesbian students should either approach faculty directly or perhaps "send out a questionnaire asking faculty if they would be interested in working with the LGBA," she said.

But both Ferguson and Raymond concede that the issue of lack of faculty support goes beyond lack of communication.

According to Raymond, the failure of faculty to speak up "must be put in the context of very little civil rights protection."

Further, she described the faculty climate as "hetero-relational" inhibiting many faculty members from being open about being gay or lesbian.

She said that although many faculty are "out" to their students and their closest colleagues, they are not "out" to the extent that it is well-known, because some concealment of their lifestyle "allows them to move easier in a hetero-relational world."

"At a straight faculty cocktail party you'll suddenly find yourself alone in the middle of the room," she said, adding that outside this type of situation the same people are usually very friendly.

Ferguson said many faculty fear that disclosing their sexuality would undermine their credibility.

She said that in her own classes she will often not reveal her sexual orientation until the end of the semester for fear that this knowledge will "jeopardize" what she has to say to the students.

Asked if she resented having to choose a point at which to reveal her sexuality, Ferguson replied that "coming out" was a political act which must be timed so that students don't close their minds and instead learn that she is an individual as well as a lesbian.

Sarah Boy, assistant to Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson, said that concern for gay and lesbian students on campus is not an easy issue for faculty to be involved in because of the "risk of being identified" as gay or lesbian.

Brian McNaught, former gay and lesbian liason for Boston Mayor Kevin White, said liberals find the cause of homophobia difficult because there are risks involved that do not accompany involvement in other issues of oppression.

"One does not lose one's white status by championing the concerns of blacks, or one's status as a male by championing the ERA. But in the area of heterosexism one risks losing the status of heterosexual and with it the possibility of losing job, status and family."

Graduate Senate plans across the board cuts

By BETHANNE MOSKOV
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate met last night to discuss their proposed budget for fiscal year 1986.

According to a report given by the finance committee the actual budget for fiscal year 1985 was $214,136. The net worth of the senate at the beginning of FY85 was $252,125 leaving a net worth of $37,989 at the end of the fiscal year.

The budget proposed for fiscal year 1986 contains an expected net worth of $198,589 with $167,300 worth of expenses, leaving a finishing net worth of $31,289. General cuts were made in operations (food, travel, etc.), discretionary funding (publicity), and line item funding (RSO groups). Adjustments to the line item fundings are still being made.

Also discussed in last night's meeting was the ACE arts project. John Furbish, spokesperson for the project, asked the Senate to pass a motion of endorsement which would signal the commencement of the project.

The project, funded from various University organizations, hopes to improve the physical condition of the environment, making the landscape more artistic. Although the Graduate Senate is not directly funding the project, the senate must give its endorsement to get the project underway. The motion was unanimously passed.

Greg Graham, a senator from the sociology department also brought up discussion on the grievance policy. Graham is seeking to allow graduate students legal counsel when they must appear before a grievance board. No final decision was made and the matter is being further looked into.

Series to focus on women in the workforce

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

Beginning tomorrow, Thursday lunchhour at the University of Massachusetts will take on a new appeal when the Working Women's Lunchtime Series kicks off a six week program from 12 a.m. to 1 p.m. in room 905 in the Campus Center.

The purpose of the series is to "help women come together, particularly to discuss their work lives and strategies," according to Myra Hindus, coordinator of the Working Women's Program at the Everywoman's Center co-sponsor of the events in conjunction with the Employee's Assistance Program, University Staff Association (USA) and the Labor Relations Center.

Although the main focus of the lunch discussions will be on office work, Hindus said, the talks will be relevant to the lives of all working women. She said the series will start with a showing of the film "Good Morning Monday," an examination of office life and the women who live it. The film will be followed by a discussion led by Mary Wardwell, President of the Staff Association.

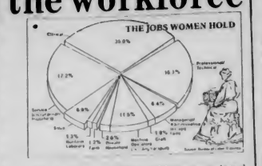
Next Thursday, a new film from the United Auto Workers will be shown titled, "Would You Let This Happen To Your Sister?" an analysis of sexual harassment. Hindus will facilitate the discussion following the movie, which she said would focus on what constitutes sexual harassment--from inappropriate touching to offensive posters, as well as strategies for dealing with it.

A two-part series on office health issues to be presented by Noreen Cleary of the UMass School of Public Health will begin on April 25.

The first of these will feature a slide-tape presentation covering health hazards and prevention. Cleary's discussion will focus on everything from "the chair you have to sit in, to ventilation and xerox machines."

"Offices are thought of as nice and clean, but that's not true," said Cleary, adding "you should go home from work feeling good," but often this is not the case.

The second of the presentations on health issues will concentrate on Video Display Terminals (VDTs) and stress what Cleary characterizes as "two of the biggest issues currently facing women office workers."



She said some of the problems associated with VDTs are blurred vision, back strain, muscle strain, glare, radiation leakage and carpel tunnel syndrome in which dexterity is lost in the hands because of nerve death due to using the same finger muscles on the key board.

On May 9 Hindus will be co-presenting a session on comparable worth and the wage gap with a representative of Yale Local 34, the union of clerical and technical workers that recently won a major comparable worth victory at Yale University.

Information about comparable worth, including fact sheets and discussion of such topics as occupational segregation and its local impacts will be featured in this session.

Man harasses Amherst woman

A woman was harassed Monday night by a man who yelled obcenities and sexual slurs at her, Amherst Police reported.

The woman left the Amherst Cinema on Amity Street and was confronted by the man who blocked her from approaching her car. He chased her to Boltwood Walk and then left her, police said.

In other police reports:

•A woman was struck by a car as she attempted to cross State Road in Whately, yesterday afternoon. Police said she complained of pain to her right leg and hand but refused medical treatment.

•A sterling silver set of unknown value was reported missing from the home of an Amherst resident. Police said there was no forced entry into the home.

Senate may ask SAO to cut budget spending

The Undergraduate Student Senate will vote tonight on a motion demanding that the Student Activities Office cut its budget by at least 10 percent to share the burden of the SGA fiscal crisis "in a fair and equitable manner."

Funding for registered student organizations will decrease by $175,359 because of the senate's budget crunch attributed by many senate leaders to "full costing," a 2.4 percent trust fund accounting fee required by the University.

According to SGA treasurer Diane Rossi, the SAO is asking for a budget increase of $18,000.

The senate will also vote on whether to direct the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy to "research restructuring the meal plan to allow for more flexibility for students." If the motion is approved, SCERA will conduct the research during the summer and submit a written report at the senate's second meeting in the fall.

5 college coordinator helps search for peace

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

As coordinator of a peace studies program, Michael Klare says he feels he doesn't have a monopoly on the road to peace, so he tries to explore all approaches to it and listen to views from across the spectrum.

Klare coordinates the Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies, formed last year from a $185,000 Ford Foundation Grant. The program serves to "help (5-College) faculty learn more about the area (war and peace issues) to improve teaching in the field," said Pat Murphy of Five College Inc., located in Amherst.

"The long-term goal is to help promote peace and stability in the world," Klare said. "The operational goal is to increase exposure of faculty and students to current thinking and analysis of war and peace issues to increase awareness so they can continue the search for peace."

Klare, who has written and researched in the field for 15 years, is the program's only full-time worker. He said one must first educate and second "educate for a purpose."

He said the grant money (about $50,000 annually) is used to organize lectures, seminars, conferences and workshops on all five area campuses.

In addition to the Ford grant $25,000 from the Wallich Foundation was granted to begin the program, which is scheduled to last three more years. In the remaining time, Klare said he hopes to educate as many people as possible.

Klare, currently a professor at Hampshire College, teaches courses on U.S. military policy and the politics of militarism. He will teach at Amherst College next semester in the sociology department, and at UMass next spring in the history department, teaching courses relating to peace and world security issues.

Emphasizing that there are a whole range of worrisome issues that must be dealt with, Klare said, "My biggest concern is the risk that small regional wars in the Third World countries can ignite World War Three."

Since the goal of the program is to educate as many people as possible, Klare said he will "be preparing a list of courses in the five-colleges that are germaine to peace and world security issues."

Whitmore protestors: Defeat into victory?

I am writing this letter because I feel that the one thing worse than defeat is calling it victory.

That is what everyone who was involved with the Whitmore Occupation is calling a massive defeat. Sorry kids, but the BOG was pretty much in good shape when the occupation started. All the demonstrators got out of the administration was a reiteration of what was already gained through other means (massive student outrage earlier this semester and a petition which SCERA circulated among the RSO groups about two weeks ago).

There is now a committee on divestment. Big deal. It is merely a way for the administration to allow the demonstrators to save face. It is a smoke screen. It may come to some valuable conclusions, but the administration will not (considering its current and previous behavior) act upon them.

The big issue was the blatantly unfair Universal Resource Fee (URF). You lost that. All the divestment in the world won't cover the fact that when the students and Whitmore had an eye-to-eye confrontation, the students blinked.

The problem is really very simple. The vast majority of the protestors (I was there for about the first two hours of the sit-in) are unwilling to risk anything past minor discomfort. At the demonstration, the people running the show were consulting the administration's standards for protests. Some metaphorical blood must flow before we get what we want; to be treated like human beings.

There are two things, one of which we must do to force the administration to view the students as human beings to respect (or at least, fear): We must create such a nasty stink that the trustees reverse themselves on the URF, or we must force the Chancellor of this University, Joseph Duffey, to resign.

It is a sad state of affairs when the student's only option is to destroy someone, but if we do not, we will never have any control of our destiny. The control of our lives is more important than any concern for the quality of life of our $88,000.00 a year despot.

Pyramids only pay those who start them

Once again, the spectre of a "pyramid," chain letter, or "golden chain" has come up to prove the truth of the saying: "A fool and his money are soon parted." Those unfortunate individuals who seem to believe that there is, indeed, such a thing as a free lunch should do some simple math to see how impossible it is to make money from thin air.

If a pyramid is begun, requiring each person involved to get five more recruits and to wait until he/she has been moved up five spaces before getting his money, this means the first person will get five more persons, each of whom must get another five, meaning a total of twenty-five people are involved as the pyramid keeps expanding at a geometric rate. The number of people involved will skyrocket incredibly fast, meaning that if you are in the fourth "rank" of a pyramid expanding by a factor of five, and you need to wait for the chain to continue for four "ranks" after you to receive your money, you'll wait a long time, because an incredible 78,000 people would have to be involved—three times as many as attend UMass. There is one way to win using a pyramid—start one. By joining one in progress, you can only win by finding an even more gullible fool and waiting for him to do the same. And so on. And so on.

A source of communism

Daniel White

The country most responsible for the spread of communism around the world is the United States of America.

I'll give you a minute to stop laughing before I explain this seemingly ridiculous statement.

Now I want you to imagine you live not in the United States, but in a small Third World country ruled by a military junta. Your government is not burdened by a bothersome constitution or bill of rights to protect its citizens.

As a farmer, you farm the same land that your father and grandfather did. It's all you know. When the fall come you harvest your crops, sell them, and pay your landlord his rent, and use the rest to prepare for the coming winter. You can't afford luxuries like running water, but you get by.

One day everything changes. You go to work and find out the landlord has sold the land to a large foreign corporation. You are told to harvest your crops, plant grass for cattle, and leave.

What do you do? What can you do? Like millions of others, you pack your things, gather your family, and move to the city in hopes of finding work. Jobs are scarce and workers plentiful, but you manage to get a job on a factory assembly line. The hours are long and the pay pitiful.

Every week you see limbs ripped off in the gears of machines and men killed in explosions. You want to protest but that would only get you fired, and you have a family to feed. Some of the workers try to unionize but they are arrested and never heard from again.

At night, the emaciated frames of your children's starving bodies haunt your nightmares. They shock you upright in bed and you shudder as the chill night air envelopes your sweaty skin. Unable to sleep you stare out the window of the tin shack you call a home. The stench of rotting garbage and feces turns your stomach. Shouts and sirens, distorted by the distance, sound like the death throws of some great beasts.

You wonder what happened. You were never rich, but once you had pride in your work. You fed and clothed your own family. If you were sick, your neighbors would work your fields until you got better. Now your neighbors rob you if you leave your house unguarded. You must send your wife and children to work because you cannot support them alone. You are only 40 years old, but you feel like 400.

You see riots break out over the poverty, starvation and disease. Then you see them crushed by the army with its shiny new, American-built tanks and guns. And you become angry.

You come home one day to find that soldiers have raped your wife. You come home another day to find your eldest son has been "drafted" into the army. Still another day you come home and hear your son has been killed for stealing some food to eat.

At his funeral you kneel by his grave and scream at God, "What have I done? What sin have I committed that you would punish me so?"

Tears stream down your face but your only answer is silence.

Then a man you know from work comes to visit you. He tells you it doesn't have to be like this. He has friends who are fighting to throw out the Yankee imperialists who rob you of your dignity. He says that with your help they can end the tyranny and oppression you live under.

You join them even though you know the battle will be long and you will probably die before it's won. The United States gives thousands of tanks and guns to the fascist government to "preserve the freedom and self-determination of the people against communist tyranny." But for you the stake in this war is not the triumph of communism over capitalism, but your own survival. And if you must become a communist to win it, then so be it.

This is how the United States spreads communism around the world.

Controversy can produce positive change

Lesbian and Gay Awareness week is intended as a time for lesbian, bisexual and gay people to celebrate their identity, and for us to educate others about what being lesbian, gay or bisexual really means. In order to affirm our commitment to positive social change the PGA has recently changed its name.

We realize last semester's events created some controversy. We also realize that out of this controversy came many important changes. For one, we now have an administration attempting to address the needs and concerns of lesbian, gay and bisexual people.

We all encourage you to take part in all the activities this week. This week is a perfect time to put all judgments aside, and learn in a relaxed and open atmosphere. The University community, and society as a whole, can only benefit when there is better respect and understanding among all people.

When discussions turn into arguments

During the sit-in at the Student Affairs Office in Whitmore last week, the focus of the protest expanded from the issues of student rights and the Universal Resource Fee, to securing the BOG, then to University investments in South Africa. Before the whole affair was over, I had heard rumors of groups which wanted to make demands concerning the Yvette Henry arson case, the MX missile and the "Save the Whales" movement. There were probably more.

Like others, I was concerned about this development. It caused discussion among the tired protestors to become arguments. If this had continued, the focus of the effort of the April 1st coalition would have come to ruin. Fortunately, there came a satisfactory agreement with the administration to include more student representation into the decision making process, something the administration had wanted to reduce.

There is no doubt that mistakes occurred during the sit-in. But the attention this event drew from the student body confirms the build up of frustration from the events around us.

Let's face it, people are fed up with frustration! Apparently the latest fashions, Rock n' Roll, idiot TV programs and political talk fail to keep people satisfied. Forgive me for echoing a tired expression, but apparently more and more people want to know: "Where's the Beef?"

There always have been and always will be those who are never satisfied, ones who will back a lost cause just to be a martyr. But when a mass of people assemble to make themselves heard, that says to me that someone is not acknowledging the questions satisfactorily. This leads me to wonder: "What could have been done to prevent what went down last week?"

I can only speculate.

Hopping mad over a "bunny's tale" of death

In response to John Yonce's column Friday "A Bunny's tale of death."

The cold weather survival field training exercise indeed introduced the students to the trapping and preparation of wild animals for food. Although this training of course is used in the military, it was also good information to the public in general. I was present at this exercise. The instructor and other cadets were not dressed in full combat array as was shown in Tom Haley's cartoon and no weapons were brought on the training sight.

The rabbits were killed by a sharp blow to the back of the neck. If the technique was properly done, the rabbit was killed instantly and there was no pain. We did not "kill them by crushing the spine," nor did the instructor ever advocate "breaking its head." As much as possible was done not to make the animal suffer. The entire block of instruction was handled in a mature manner.

The cadets and students were repeatedly told they could be excused from that part of the exercise. The primary instructor warned the people exactly what was going to happen, everyone had a fair chance to leave the area.

One student said, "They were domesticated rabbits and really nice things," he said. "There were a lot of people upset by it."

These rabbits were not bought at a pet store. The woman who sold the rabbits knew exactly what they were to be used for. They were not pet animals. As for people being upset, there was no one there who got sick, or cried or voiced an objection at that time. Sure, no one laughed or had fun, but they weren't supposed to.

I strongly object to a quote in Yonce's column. "Their opinion is that it has to be done, I guess they feel you need the experience of killing, skinning, and cooking the rabbit. It's like saying you should go out and kill people to get the experience of killing them."

This quote was only the opinion of the student and was never voiced by the cadets or cadre members. Firefighters do not wish for fires to start, nor are they happy when they do occur, but they are prepared to fight one nonetheless. Would you memorize calculus theorems, yet never practice them, but expect to pass a final? No! Hopefully no one would ever be in a position of having to survive in the wilderness, but the instruction was there so people could be ready should it happen.

Finally, I would like to point out that this exercise was done in February, not in April as the article suggests. We don't mind people knowing what we do in Army ROTC, but we do mind when the public is misinformed.

As a fellow journalist, Yonce, I think you should know better.

Change too much to handle

This is a belated plea to curtail future April Fool's Day editions of the Collegian. I derive a sufficient amount of amusement from the daily offerings and am uncomfortable with any change in format. Consider the following...

Recently we were informed in the pages of the Collegian that UMass is receiving increased "recognition" because of an article in US magazine and placement in a top 15 preppy poll. I for one would be more impressed if we made the National Enquirer or perhaps USA Today top 25 poll under miscellaneous category.

While I agree that UMass is receiving more recognition I believe it is of a different sort. I refer to the "Universal Resource Fee." I think everyone should take note of a situation where on the one hand the University is honored by the presence of the current Romanell-Phi Beta Kappa professor on this campus: Robert Paul Wolff, and on the other hand, through the effects of the proposed URF, the dissolution of similar achievements by current graduate students. Recognition indeed. In a similar vein we should all recognize the University's purchase of the old Vietnam DMZ fence surrounding our library.

My second example is less important yet consistent with the first. Recently sports columnist Tony Betros picked the Mets over the Cubs. Anyone who wrote that Indiana coach Bob Knight threw his chair in a basketball game between Indiana and Wisconsin instead of Purdue (thereby missing much of the importance an intra-state rivalry brought to the story) cannot be serious. Besides I'm starting my 21st year as a Cub fan.

Clearly Yeasthead is the best thing going for the Collegian but I wonder: Just how much Nietzsche had Yeasthead read?

RESIDENCE HALL CONTRACT SIGNING INFORMATION

Important, Please Read Carefully

The University requires all students living in the residence halls for the fall 1985 semester to sign a 1985-1986 Residence Hall Contract Card. Any student wishing to live in the residence halls again for next fall should be aware of the following:

Contracts and Contract Cards will be mailed to you in your residence hall on or about April 12.

Contract Cards must be completed, signed and returned to the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore, no later than the last day of the semester (May 24, 1985).

Assignments will be cancelled for any student failing to return a signed Contract Card by May 24, 1985.

Students returning Contract Cards will receive a "Contract Receipt." Keep this receipt for your records. It is strongly recommended that students NOT return Contract Cards by mail.

If you still have questions about the Contract Signing procedures, call or stop by the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore (545-2100). Thank you.

ARTS

Paris, Texas offers cinematic relief

PARIS, TEXAS
Directed by Wim Wenders
Starring Harry Dean Stanton and Nastassia Kinski

By ELAINE SENAY
Collegian Staff

Critics and filmmakers acclaimed Paris, Texas at the 1984 Cannes Film Festival and awarded Wim Wenders its Golden Palm for movie making excellence. Wender's film has finally arrived to relieve the Happy Valley from its diet of Police Academy II and Porky's Revenge.

Just because Paris, Texas received raves at Cannes, please do not assume that it is obscure or pretentious. It is a beguiling film that wraps an audience in its powerful story. Sam Sheperd's screenplay tells a quirky tale of Travis (Harry Dean Stanton) who took leave from the world for four years. To his brother Walt (Dean Stockwell), Travis was probably dead. In the meantime, he and his wife, Anne (Aurore Clement) have taken over the upbringing of Travis' abandoned son Hunter (Hunter Carson).

Unwilling to explain the reasons for his disappearance, Travis remains stricken by memories that have haunted him during his exile. He wants to keep moving. His pain tortures him to the point where he does not eat, sleep or speak. When Walt comes to bring his brother back to Los Angeles, Travis initially resists returning to the flow of daily life.

For Travis, accompanying Walt back home also means being reunited with Hunter. Hunter and Travis establish a comical relationship. Travis wants to be a real father to his son and his attempts lead to some humorous results. Hunter senses his father's grief about the past. He does not judge him or even try to punish him for driving their family apart. Hunter instead joins his father in a search for his mother, Jane (Nastassia Kinski).

The search for Jane crowds the pace of Paris, Texas. It is unfortunate because the first part is an excellent piece of direction and cinematography. Wenders does use a home movie sequence to good advantage in order to set up a contrast between Jane as the carefree young woman and her subsequent transformation. Jane is steeped in disillusionment and suffering. Like Travis, she has been unable to shake off the memories of a marriage gone wrong. Kinski appears only briefly in the second part of the film, but visually she is startling. As Jane rambles on about her life, Wenders focuses on her, to the point where the top half of the screen is blacked out. Wenders insinuates the camera, catching characters as they try to hide their emotions.

Paris, Texas is a kind, subtle portrait of domestic suffering. There is joy to be found in this tragedy. Wenders' film gives hope as Travis tries to put a little of the sweet into an otherwise bitter existence.

E. Wayne Abercrombie will conduct two performances of J. S. Bach's "St. Matthew Passion" on Friday, April 12, 7:30 p.m. in Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College and on Sunday, April 14, 3:00 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at the University of Massachusetts.

Luther "Guitar Jr." Johnson doing what he does best.

Shared bill too much of a good thing

John Hammond and Luther "Guitar Jr." Johnson at the Iron Horse Cafe
Sunday, April 7

By JACK BRESNAHAN
Collegian Staff

A near capacity crowd came to the Iron Horse on Easter Sunday to hear Grammy Award winners John Hammond and Luther "Guitar Jr." Johnson.

At the 10:00 show, Hammond went on first, solo, accompanying himself on the guitar and harmonica. Playing a series of blues standards such as "Statesboro Blues," and "Howlin' Wolf," He generated appreciative applause. Though it seemed that some of the clapping was only polite, and in-between songs it was uncomfortably quiet, there were some true highlights. Good examples of this were "Maybelline," with rambling car-like harp, and "Dust My Broom," on which he utilized the slide on his old National steel. This continued on "An Old Tune," "Do That Rag," and the pure blues of "It Hurts Me Too." Finishing the set with Bo Diddley's "Who Do You Love," he concluded with (...when she walks through the college, the professor loses his mind...) "She's Tough," for an encore.

The mood and tempo soon changed when Jr. And The Magic Rockers took the "stage." Pressed for time, the band sped through two instrumental warm-ups, then Jr. took the vocals on the Wolf's "I Had A Dream." That's a crusty old number that had Jr. playing out in the aisle. Minus a dance floor, the normally staid atmosphere was altered when a woman with a long bow in her hair got up and danced in the stairway landing on "Find A Way To Get My Baby Back." Jr. was joined by John playing the harmonica on a medley, "You Can't Lose What You Never Had," and "Rich Man's Woman," two Muddy Waters songs, and on "Mean Mistreater." Junior's days with Muddy also shone through on "Close To You," and "Everything's Gonna Be All Right." The only drawback was that due to poor technical soundwork, John's harmonica was far too loud, and consistently drowned out guitar leads. I found that to be unbearable, especially since it was that same sound-man who ordered me to lower my voice during the Hammond show when I was barely talking above a whisper. This was also continued on "Bit By Bit," by Junior Wells, and on "Talk To Me Baby."

All in all, the music was good as well as the intention. But I think it would be far better to concentrate on doing one excellent show rather then rushing through two. It would be much more memorable, and for the right reasons.

Record short takes

By ELIZABETH C. LANGLOIS
Collegian Correspondent

Here it is spring again, and another great crop of bands has released albums. The fact is, there are many great albums out that I'd like to tell you about, but I can only write about a few of them here. Guadalcanal Diary — "Walking in the Shadow of the Big Man"

Don Dixon and his pal Mitch Easter have brought us so many great bands. Here is Don Dixon by his lonesome, and what a pop gem this is! Far better than their earlier effort, Guadalcanal Diary gives us a grab bag of country licks, exquisite harmonies ("Why do the Heathen Rage?"), and entrancing beauty. ("Sleeper's Awake"). A real treat.

Game Theory — "Real Nighttime"

Game Theory are from California, and this time around are produced by Mitch Easter. He, and the band, don't disappoint. Easter seems to have an infinite amount of studio tricks, which he always uses to a band's advantage. The lead track on Side 1, "Here Comes Everybody," says it all. Great melody with all the innocence of 60's pop.

The Vipers — "Outta the Nest"

The NYC music scene has been producing a lot of fine bands lately (the Fuzztones, the Outta Place, the Mosquitoes, just to name a few). The Vipers are at the top of the heap. Good synthesis of garage smarts with winning pop harmonies and melodies. "Nothing's from Today" and "Horrowed Time" are among the best on an album chock full of good songs.

The Droogs — "Stone Cold World"

Another overlooked band who've been around awhile. This is a fine album with some over-the-edge stuff "Set My Love on You" and "Change is Gonna Come," one of last year's best singles. They are equally adept at shimmering psychedelic pop "For These Remaining Days."

Plasticland — "Plasticland"

It's a real shame that we had to wait an interminable period to get this album, by an American band, released here. It's psychedelic dementia with great hooks. The Chocolate Watchband meets Pink Floyd. Now, to make a simple point, these albums are all released by American bands. Whoever said that all great music is imported hasn't been listening to the airwaves lately. The U.S. is finally reclaiming its rightful place. Where did the Brits originally learn about rock? From us, of course.

Biff Bang Pow — "Pass the Paintbrush Honey"

Creation Records is a relatively new label that's brought us psychedelia recently from the Patels, Revolving Paint Dream, and Biff Bang Pow, among others.This is another Pink Floyd-sounding band with dreamy vocals and spacey guitar work. Strong points: "Chocolate Elephant Man," "Colin Dobbins," and "A Day Out With Jeremy Chester" which bring to life a Syd Barrett-like confusion with brilliance.

Robyn Hitchcock and the Egyptians — "Fegmania"

Hitchcock is a modern day, demented Syd Barrett character with a penchant for bizarre but funny and sarcastic comments about society. He's shed the stark backing of his last two solo efforts, and has grabbed two former Soft Boys, and made this album which is a soundtrack for a film Hitchcock is allegedly making. He's resurrected his Soft Boys guitar sound for such fun songs as "Man With the Lightbulb Head," and uses keyboards to texture songs. If Syd Barrett hadn't gone crazy and was still recording, this is probably what he'd sound like.

ROOM CHOOSING PROCESS FOR FALL 1985

Please read carefully

RESERVING YOUR CURRENT ROOM ASSIGNMENT

If you intend to keep your present residence hall assignment, personally sign up with your Resident Director/Residence Hall Manager on Tuesday, April 16. DEADLINE FOR ROOM RESERVATION IS TUESDAY APRIL 16.

IF YOU WANT TO KEEP YOUR PRESENT RESIDENCE HALL ASSIGNMENT WHILE ALSO SUBMITTING A PREFERENCE FORM YOU MUST DO THE FOLLOWING:

1. Sign up for the same room on Tuesday, April 16 or a different room on Wednesday, April 17.
2. Fill out a Preference Form. On the Preference Form in the lower right corner is a box you must "check" if you wish to be returned to your residence hall if your residence hall or area choices cannot be met.

YOUR OLD RESIDENCE HALL ASSIGNMENT IS GUARANTEED ONLY IF YOU DO BOTH STEPS

CHANGING YOUR ROOM ASSIGNMENT

If you wish to move to another room in the same residence hall, you must sign up with your Resident Director/Residence Hall Manager. DEADLINE FOR MOVING WITHIN A RESIDENCE HALL IS WEDNESDAY, APRIL 17

If you wish to move to another residence hall, you must complete a Housing Preference Form. DEADLINE FOR RETURNING THE COMPLETED HOUSING PREFERENCE FORMS TO THE HOUSING ASSIGNMENT OFFICE IS FRIDAY, APRIL 26 Preference Forms may be dropped off at any Area Operations Office (Southwest-JFK Lobby, Northeast/Sylvan-Johnson, Central/Orchard Hill-101Baker).

If you wish to move to another residence hall to room with a student already assigned to that residence hall, you must together complete a ROOMMATE REQUEST FORM. DEADLINE FOR RETURNING ROOMMATE REQUEST FORMS TO THE HOUSING ASSIGNMENT OFFICE IS THURSDAY, APRIL 18.

If you wish to become roommates with a student in a residence hall to which neither of you is currently assigned, you must each complete a Housing Preference Form. These forms should be identical (with the exception of the "check" box) and stapled together. DEADLINE FOR RETURNING HOUSING PREFERENCE FORMS IS FRIDAY, APRIL 26.

IN-HOUSE ROOM REQUEST FORMS

If, during the regular In-House Room Choosing period, you were unable to secure a particular type of accommodation (a particular single or double room), please contact your Resident Director/Residence Hall Manager and fill out an In-House Room Request Form. Rooms that become available during Summer Session will be assigned according to seniority, to those students who have filled out this form and returned it to the Housing Assignment Office.

QUESTIONS?

If you still have questions about the Room-Choosing process, please contact the Housing Assignment Office (545-2100), 235 Whitmore. Thank you.

University of Massachusetts at Amherst

Commencement 1985

10:00 a.m., Saturday, May 25

All Candidates
There is no Commencement rehearsal for degree candidates. Candidates should assemble by school/college at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium no later than 9 a.m. graduation morning, May 25, 1985. Signs will be posted indicating schools, and Commencement Marshals will issue specific instructions and distribute programs. Upon signal, candidates will follow the Commencement Marshals to the assigned areas and be seated.

Candidates will receive diploma covers from the deans of their school or college. Diplomas will be mailed when all processing has been completed. Please be sure the Registrar has your correct permanent address.

Who is Eligible to Participate?
Undergraduate degree candidates who anticipate completing degree requirements by the end of the calendar year 1985. Questions concerning academic status should be directed to the Records Office, 213 Whitmore, 545-0555.

Master degree candidates who have previously submitted the Degree Application Form by April 30, 1985 to the Office of Degree Requirements stating the intention to complete all requirements. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, 545-0824.

Doctoral degree candidates who have completed all degree requirements by April 30, 1985. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, 545-0824.

Faculty
Faculty and staff should assemble at the SOUTH end of the stadium on the gravel between the Facilities Building and the stadium wall. Faculty will be part of the processional and will be seated immediately in front of the candidates from each school and college.

Parents and Invited Guests/Plan to Arrive Early — Space is Limited
Since the Commencement Exercises are open to the public and guest seating is without reservation, parents and friends should plan to arrive early to ensure good seating.

Handicapped Seating
Viewing area for the handicapped will be located on both sides of the stadium on the eastern and western walkways. Since seating is limited, it is requested that only one person accompany the handicapped guest.

Invitations
There is no limit to the number of guests who may attend the ceremony and tickets are not required. Each student will receive a packet of six formal invitations.

Caps, Gowns, and Hoods
Undergraduate and Master Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it at the Textbook Annex, May 6-May 24, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

On Commencement Day, May 25, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Doctoral Degree Candidates
Doctoral caps, gowns, tassels, hoods and invitations will be available only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, April 29-May 24, Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. through 5 p.m., upon clearance by the Office of Degree Requirements. On Commencement Day, caps, gowns, tassels, and hoods may be obtained after 9 a.m. at the NORTHWEST end of the stadium (on the gravel area).

Doctoral candidates who plan to participate in the Commencement ceremony must have a hood. Each candidate's name will be announced over the stadium sound system and two officers of the University will drape the hood on the candidate's shoulders. Doctoral hoods can be purchased only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, A249 Lederle Graduate Research Center, at a cost of $30. (Five College Doctoral Hoods will be available at $42.95.) Doctoral hoods may be rented through the University Store at a cost of $10.

Rentals
Academic apparel for this year's University Commencement may be rented through the University Store. All faculty members are urged to place their orders as soon as possible. THE LAST DAY TO ORDER IS FRIDAY, MAY 17. Payment must be made at the time of order and there will be no refunds if apparel is not used. Academic apparel may also be purchased. For further information about rentals or purchases, please contact Connie Szelewicki at the University Store, 545-2619.

Accommodations
Many area motels are already booked for the evenings of May 24 and 25. A limited number of rooms in University dormitories will be available for relatives and their guests for the nights of May 24 and 25. Please contact the Conference Services Office, 918 Campus Center, (413) 545-3400, as soon as possible to request a form to register for dormitory housing. These forms must be returned with full payment to Conference Services no later than May 3, to guarantee your dormitory room reservation.

Food Services
Coffee, soft drinks, and donuts will be available at rotundas on both sides of the stadium toward the North.

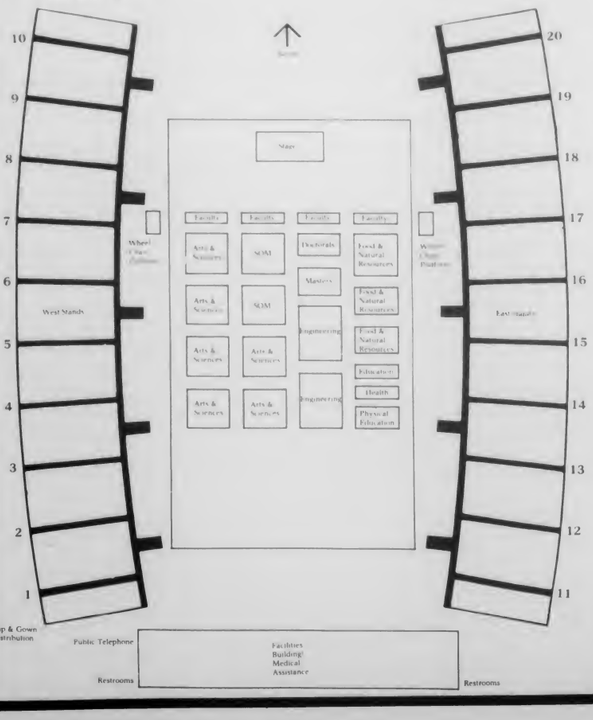
Stadium Plan



Parking
Parking at the stadium is extremely limited. Vehicles will be directed to several parking lots located nearby and shuttle buses will provide transportation to the stadium. Buses will return to the lots immediately following the ceremony.

Traffic Assistance
To aid the traffic flow at Commencement, radio station WTTT AM (1430) will broadcast traffic reports throughout the morning. Please tune in as you approach Amherst for the best route to the ceremony.

General Information
Medical facilities will be located in the Facilities Building at the south end of the stadium.

Public telephones will be located on the west side of the Facilities Building.

Restrooms are located at both ends of the Facilities Building at the south end of the stadium.

Viewing areas for those confined to wheelchairs will be located on both sides of the stadium, on eastern and western walkways.

For additional information, contact the Office of University Relations, 390 Whitmore, 545-2560.

Please remember alcohol is not permitted in the stadium.

RAIN DATE

There is no alternative rain site. The ceremony will be held outside regardless of the weather. The ceremony will be delayed a maximum of two hours in the event of heavy rain, and if that decision is made it will be announced on local radio stations that morning.

Gorillas can either do or die today

10th ranked Brown "a must win"

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

With the exception of the last season, the winner of the University of Massachusetts-Brown University lacrosse game has won the New England championship for 18 straight years.

The Gorillas, at 1-2, need a victory to re-establish themselves as national contenders and overtake Brown in the New England rankings.

A loss today (3 p.m. at Boyden Field) would put UMass in an almost impossible position to make the national tournament as Brown, 10th ranked nationally, is one of a handful of teams UM is competing with for one of the last spots in the top eight.

Need any other reasons why today's game is a big one? Junior midfielder Rich Abbott's twin-brother Chris is a Bruin attackman...and nobody wants to lose to their brother.

"Hell yes, it's the biggest game of the season," UM coach Dick Garber said. "We beat them and we're right back in it, lose and we're in a difficult position at best. They (Brown) are a rough, physical team that I think is the best team we'll have played so far. We can't afford to play around with them."

The Gorillas are riding a two-game losing streak, dropping a 13-9 decision to Cornell a week ago before losing 12-9 to Rutgers on Saturday.

The team, in its last two games, hasn't come to play. The Gorillas allowed several easy goals and waited too long before coming back offensively, a trend Garber is hoping to halt today.

"It's no one thing that I can say we're working on," the veteran coach said. "It's a matter of concentration on everyone's part. We have to come ready for every game, and everyone didn't do that against Cornell and Rutgers. We have to play the caliber of lacrosse I know we're capable of."

Garber will shake up today's lineup a little. The attack will feature leading scorer (six goals, eight assists, 14 points) Tom Carmean, former reserve Kenny Freeman (2-1-3) and either senior Mike Fiorini (3-0-3) or freshman Pat Cain (1-0-1).

The Gorillas will run three midfield lines with Karl Hatton (3-2-5), Greg Fisk (4-2-6) and Matt O'Reilly (1-0-1) starting. A second line of Abbott (0-1-1), Stephen Moreland (2-0-2) and Neal Cunningham (2-0-2) and a third line of Tom Lukacovic (4-0-4), Glenn Stephens and Al Rotatori will see a lot of action. The close of defense of Tommy Aldrich, Mark Stratton and Gerry Byrne is intact.

The goaltending will be handled by freshmen Paul McCarty (in place of the injured Gerry Moreau). McCarty looked sharp against Rutgers in making nine saves. Defenseman Scott Craig is back from a minor shoulder injury.

The Bruins feature a solid attack led by Mick Matthews (8-16-24) and Tom Gagnon (11-7-18). Goalie Scott Lohan is allowing eight goals a game. Faceoffs are a weak part of the Bruins game, giving UM's Seamus McGovern the opportunity to get UMass into the offense quickly.

Keys for UMass include the work of the defensive midfielders sliding to the open man, the offense's ability to work at the crease and generally playing up to their ability.

Brown was a 9-8 winner in overtime last season and a UMass victory over the Bruins would go far in getting this season back to the points its supposed to be.

Harvard puts the freeze on Minutemen's offense

Winning streak snapped by Crimson pitching

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

Harvard University's Chris Marchok threw six shutout innings yesterday to lead the Crimson to a 3-1 victory over the University of Massachusetts at Lorden Field.

"He was the best pitcher we have faced this year," said UMass Manager Dick Berquist. "Even better than the ones we faced down South."

The loss ended the Minutemen's five game winning streak and dropped their record to 9-8. The team still is on top of the Atlantic 10 with a 5-1 record within the conference.

UMass did not go down easy as the Minutemen mounted their only offensive threat in the bottom of the seven (it was a seven inning game).

Chris Schindler started the inning on the mound for Harvard in place of Marchok. Crimson Alex Nahigian took Marchok out to avoid an injury do to the cold weather.

With one out, Sean Flint reached first on a infield single between the second baseman and the shortstop. Jay Zerner came in to run for Flint. Freshman Darrin O'Connor followed with a single to right field and the Minutemen had runners on first and third with only one out and the top of the order coming to bat.

Bruce Kingman singled to left field scoring Zerner and moving O'Connor to second. Nahigian saw enough of Schindler and quickly went to the bullpen for lefthanded sophomore Jim Chenevey.

Berquist countered by pinch hitting right handed batter Tony Szklany for Matt Sheran. Chenevey won the battle by striking out Szklany with a tough knuckle curve ball. This brought designated hitter Todd Comeau up to bat.

Comeau came into the game on a tear having knocked in eight runs over the last three games and boasting a .382 batting average. The senior slugger worked the count full before Cheveney struck him out with another knuckle curve.

UMass pitchers performed well too as five Minutemen hurlers combined to give up only one earned run in the game.

Brett Valentini (0-1) started the game, but quickly became obvious that the freshman was not going to last long. Valentini walked the first batter, Tony DiCesare, on four pitches, two of which were in the dirt. Bob Kay sacrificed DiCesare over to second base and Jim Depalo followed with an infield single.

Valentini got Elliott Rivera to fly out to shallow right field, but Mickey Maspons singled to left to score DiCesare. The next batter, Scott Vierra, walked to load the bases and that was it for Valentini.

Berquist brought in junior Mick Wydra to face Chris McAndrews. The Harvard right-fielder lifted a long fly ball to the left center gap that looked like it would score three runs, but UMass center fielder Steve Messina made a spectacular diving catch.

Wydra pitched three and a third strong innings allowing only two unearned runs in the fourth. Jay McNamara lead of the inning with a base hit to right and when the ball skipped by Sheran in right, McNamara went all the way around to third. He scored on a suicide bunt by Paul Vallone. Vallone was safe at first on the play as Wydra muffed the bunt.

After stealing second, Vallone scored on an single by Kay to account for Harvard's final run. Steve Allard, Jon Martin and Jeff Jensen each pitched a scoreless inning for UMass in relief after Wydra's stint.

Tulane player pleads guilty

NEW ORLEANS (AP)— Two Tulane students, one a member of the basketball team, pleaded guilty Tuesday in connection with the Green Wave basketball point-shaving scandal.

David Rothenberg, 22, a student from Wilton, Conn., and Bobby Thompson, 21, a little-used guard, entered the pleas in a surprise court appearance and face sentencing on July 9.

Thompson pleaded guilty to one count of conspiracy guilty to one count of conspiracy to commit sports bribery. Rothenberg to two counts of conspiracy and one count of possession of cocaine.

Gazelles fifth in nation, football begins

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team is still ranked fifth in the nation, trailing only Temple, Penn State, Maryland and Loyola.

The Gazelles, 3-0, were at Boston College for a late game last night.

The UMass football team went outside for Spring drills on Monday as coach Bob Stull welcomed back the bulk of his 3-8 team from a year ago.

Stull is making some changes however, moving running back Duckworth Grange to cornerback while shifting wide receivers Jimmy Earle and John Crowley to the defensive backfield. Ex-quarterback Jason Curtis has been moved to linebacker.

At quarterback, junior Jim Simeone faces competition from freshman Mike Trifari, freshman redshirt Mike Palazzi and freshman transfer Bob Williamson, who had committed to UMass but went to Worcester Tech before transfering.

Alabama transfer Tim Hecht is also in the QB picture as are two incoming freshmen from Stull's first recruiting class.

The team will drill outside until the annual spring game, scheduled for May fourth.

The UMass basketball team has elected sophomore point guard Carl smith as captain and awarded its most valuable player award to Horace Neysmith. Most-improved player was Bobby Braun while the defensive award went to Smith and all-time leading scorer Donald Russell. Senior Ronnie smith will play in the upcoming New England all-star game in Connecticut.

Women's soccer coach Kalekeni Banda reported he has found his sweeper back and is still looking for a goalie to team with his high-scoring freshman crew that got him to the NCAA final four. Banda's women's track team opens today with a dual meet against Springfield.

The office of public information at UMass will take a picture of anyone associated with UMass that plans to run in the Boston Marathon. The shot will be in front of Boyden Gym at 12:15 p.m. today.

Home ec dept facing review

Organizational problems cited

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

Beset with a lawsuit, a threat of a lawsuit, internal backbiting, the resignation of an acting director and an unsuccessful, year-long search for a permanent director, the Division of Home Economics will undergo an extensive external review to avoid such problems in the future.

Spurred by Friday's resignation by acting head Elsie Fetterman and other changes in the department, dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources E. Bruce MacDougall has started the search for a review board.

"I believe that we need some advice on how Home Economics should be organized," he said, acknowledging that organizational problems led to instability in the department. "Home Ec has all the makings of an outstanding department—just look at the popularity of fashion marketing, for instance—but we must organize ourselves to properly show that."

While MacDougall would not specify or intimate intended improvements, he did describe plans for the review board.

"What we need is input from someone not affiliated with the University. Ideally, the board would consist of three people—two from other universities, maybe someone else from the outside...but at least a senior administrator of some sort and all members in some way be familiar with Home Ec departments."

Glenn Brown, current head of the department of Food Science and Nutrition, will serve as new acting director in addition to his other duties.

Fetterman was appointed acting head after the resignation of Helen Grove, who left approximately a year ago to accept a position at the American Home Economics Association in Washington, D.C.

During the past year, such problems have arisen:

•Assistant professor and sexologist Roger Libby, an outspoken advocate of deviant sexual and family lifestyles, brought a $165,000 suit against the University for what he claims are biases against his sexual views. These biases, Libby said, led to his denial of tenure. The suit, citing members of the administration and home economics division, is in litigation.

•Assistant professor Al MacDonald, also denied tenure, was not told of the decision until after the date of notification had passed. Rather than enter a lengthy court battle, MacDonald and the department have established a settlement whereby the University will grant him another semester in exchange for his waiving the right to legal procedure.

•A dispute has arisen over the appointment of Nylda Lopez Ansari, a full-time faculty member transferred from an extension/research position to a full-time teaching position. Questions have arisen over Lopez' eligibility for the position.

Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Richard O'Brien said, "I just don't know the answer. Because of essential changes in the study of home economics itself, the department here, like those around the country, is changing rapidly. And as the department changes, the faculty changes. We just have not had the greatest of luck in effecting that transition smoothly."

Record-high number apply to UMass

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Staff

The number of undergraduate applications at the University of Massachusetts hit a record high last week, passing the 18,000 mark for in-state prospects.

Although the number of applicants has risen, the number accepted will not increase, Larry Benedict, dean of academic support services said. Benedict explained that the UMass Board of Trustees has set a limit of 19,500 undergradustes, leaving 3,900 openings for in-state first-year students and 600 slots for out-of state.

Benedict said the university has received 6,391 more applications than last year for in-state students and 5,700 from others, an increase of 135.

Arthur Jackson, director of financial aid, said that as long as there is a threat of federal aid being slashed and tuition at private and ivy league schools continues to rise, the number of applicants will increase from year to year.

UMass' academic reputation has improved in recent years, Benedict said. The university has concentrated on public relations and the attention received from the press has been positive, he added.

"We've worked over the years to get news of the University's successes out to the media and students," Deirdre Ling, vice chancellor of University relations, said. Such attention as the Fiske Guide to Colleges and Lisa Birnbach's recent review of UMass help "get the word out," Benedict said.

Benedict said the standards of the student body will also continue to improve because "We're becoming more selective." The average total SAT scores in verbal and math have risen from 997 in 1984 to 1045 in 1985, he added, and the high school rank of the students has increased also.

The University's academic excellence has finally been recognized, Ling said: "We've always had a strong faculty but now they're becoming more well known. Faculty successes are more publicized, she added, to let the public know about the prestige UMass has among scholars. "We have genuine accomplishments to talk about."

The alumni are very satisfied with their alma mata, Benedict said. A 1983 report conducted by Peter Rossi of the Sociology Dept. to study alumni attitudes found that the alumni view the school as equally as good as the eastern schools, and on a par with the Big Ten schools of the Midwest. They are generally satisfied with the school, and hold the university's academics in high esteem. "We're a full liberal arts school, while also preparing the student for the job market," Ling said.

Two sentenced for 'vicious' rape

BOSTON (AP) - Two men who raped and stabbed a young woman before dumping her into Boston Harbor were sentenced yesterday to 40-60 years in prison by a judge who called the crime "the most vicious and unconscionable series of acts that I've had the displeasure of listening to" in 38 years.

Michael Quarato and David Giacalone, both 20 and of East Boston, were each sentenced to 40-60 years at the state prison in Walpole and will be eligible for parole in 30 years.

Quarato was sentenced to an additional 7-10 years to be served after his first term.

After meeting the woman, the men asked for a lift home and the woman obliged. They raped and tortured her for three hours, stabbed her in the legs, beat her and cut off her hair.

The men then took the woman to a deserted pier and tried to kill her by kicking her repeatedly in the temple. Thinking she was dead, they dumped her 15 feet off the pier into Boston Harbor, where she was spotted later and rescued.

FBI puts heat on Nazi group

SEATTLE (AP) - A violent neo-Nazi group that has been linked to the slaying of a Denver radio talk show host and two armored truck holdups worth more than $4 million is now mostly in jail, federal officials say.

An investigation of the group that called itself The Order began late last year and has produced the arrests of 24 group members and close associates in 13 states, officials say.

The group's founder died in a Dec. 7 shootout with the FBI; his reputed successor is in custody.

No more than half a dozen followers are still at large, officials add. A racketeering indictment naming many or all of those named so far could come next week, the government lawyer in charge of the investigation said.

Members of The Order have been linked by the FBI to the June 18 slaying of Denver radio talk show host Alan Berg, a Jew and frequently caustic critic of right-wing groups, and to "virtual carbon-copy" armored truck holdups that netted $3.6 million in Ukiah, Calif., on July 19 and $500,000 in Seattle on April 23, all during 1984.

FBI agents claim there were detailed but unfulfilled plans for an armored truck heist Dec. 4 in Boise, Idaho, and a $30 million safecracking late last year at the Brinks Armored Co. office in San Francisco.

The investigation also extends to a $25,000 bank holdup Dec. 20, 1983, in Seattle, and the April 29, 1984 firebombing of a Boise, Idaho synagogue.

George Fisher, a senior FBI agent in Seattle, said the agency had inadequate evidence to support charges in the Seattle holdups and the Boise firebombing.

Student picketers march past the information desk in the Campus Center last night, protesting Citicorp's involvement in South Africa.

Conference opens with student arrests

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

The arrest of three student protestors and short speeches by University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp, Vice-President of the Merchant Banking Group of Citicorp Susan Bergan and Managing Director of Thyssen Engineering of West Germany Helmut Schlotke marked the opening of "The Training of and U.S. Business' Needs for International Specialists" conference last night.

Student protestors picketed outside the elevators on the second floor of the Campus Center. The picketers protested Citicorp's loans to the government of South Africa.

As the members of the conference were eating dinner, protestors shouted "Divest Now" out the elevator doors as they opened on the 10th floor where the event was taking place. Students were not allowed off the elevators by police.

According to a leaflet citing United Nations Center Against Apartheid documents, Citicorp lent $250 million to the South African government which institutes policies excluding the majority black population from the political process and restricting their freedom to travel and work.

UMass police would not comment on the students' arrests.

Two students were dragged out of the conference by Campus Center employees and later arrested while attempting to raise an anti-apartheid banner during Bergan's speech. All three were arrested for disturbing the peace.

In his opening remarks, Knapp said, "The campus is no longer where the professoriate operates, the world is the place where the professoriate operates."

Bergan, in a 20 minute speech said, "The increased speed of communications around the world has made the world smaller." Three developments have led the importance of international business training, according to Bergan. The growth of world trade, the internationalization of the capital network and the change of U.S. net capital exporting to net capital importing.

"U.S. business needs an increasing amount of people with international experience," Bergan said. "Today, no company can afford to be ignorant" in the field of international business, she said.

Sharing the keynote address with Bergan, Schlotke said, "Whatever happens in the world...the U.S. will be affected and cannot help being involved.

UMass budget too small, officials say

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

While University of Massachusetts administrators and officials agree that they need more funding next year than Governor Michael S. Dukakis has proposed, it is unclear exactly what additional programs should be funded.

Paul Page, director of budget and financial affairs, said last week that Dukakis has proposed a budget of about $148 million for the Amherst campus for the fiscal year 1986, a 12 percent increase from last year's budget.

"The University's is one of the lowest increases of any of the public colleges in Massachusetts, and this comes in the face of increasing admissions applications and support for graduate programs," Page said.

After attending Massachusetts House Ways and Means committee meetings in Springfield last March, Page said, the board of regents met and then presented a counter-proposition which requested about $5 million more than Dukakis had proposed.

Page said if the University does not receive the extra funding, graduate stipend increases might not be funded directly and the University will then have to examine internal funding and determine how funding will be reallocated.

"It is not a very rosy picture as far as I'm concerned," he said.

Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, who has previously lobbied in support of the University, said Tuesday he is still awaiting a detailed analysis from the University and the regents of the requested additional funding.

"As is appropriate, the University and the regents have the burden of proof for these requests and legislative approval will depend on the quality of the request and the detail of their presentation," he said.

Meanwhile, the University is mailing 13,000 letters to UMass students' parents and alumni, Bryan Harvey, associate to the Office of Institutional Research and Planning, said.

Interviewed Monday, Harvey said the letter is being mailed mostly to alumni and urges them to contact state legislators to ask their support for the additional funding request. The letter was prepared in conjunction with University President David C. Knapp's office.

"With a word to your state legislator...you can ease the pressure of these (fiscal) uncertainties, and provide a measure of continuity in the education of the young people of the Commonwealth," the letter states.

The letter also explains the regent's additional request and says the funding is necessary for campus physical plant problems and for securing "the quality of undergraduate education through such things as improved teaching and new equipment for our classrooms and laboratories."

"We can and should have the nation's best university, but I'm frustrated that the University optimizes only a small amount of its potential in getting what we can," Collins said. He added that the University is in a critical period of development and must clearly explain where it wants to be in five years to legislators and citizens of the Commonwealth.

Absence makes the heart grow fonder : UMass misses Cage

Renovations bringing tremendous change

Dec. 11, 1984. The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team has just lost a heartbreaking 71-70 triple-overtime game to Boston University.

Head coach Ron Gerlufsen sits in his locker room trying to explain the loss to the media. "A lot happened in the game but there's one thing I do know," The coach said. "If we were in the Cage, we would've won."

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The Curry Hicks Cage. Minuteman opponents almost unanimously agree its the hardest place to play at. Forty-two hundred screaming fans packed into its cramped confines can almost scare a team out of winning.

But in recent years the venerable building suffered the effects of its age. The dirt floor and wooden track no longer were sufficient for indoor practices by the baseball, softball, track and lacrosse teams, the ceiling and stands both darkened as the years passed. Since its completion in 1930, almost nothing had been changed in the building.

$2.5 million worth of renovations will, by the scheduled completion date of October 1, give the Cage a new look, but allow it to retain its charm.

The Boston-based architectural firm of Childs, Bertman, Tsechares and Casendino planned the renovations. The Cage will be given a new concrete floor which will be covered by a synthetic playing surface over which a portable basketball floor will be placed. The floor was designed by Champion Floors, the company that put in the Boston Garden's basketball court. A ticket lobby and locker rooms will be added to the south side where all fans will enter and leave the games.

Sullivan and Sons, a Northampton general construction company, has been working on the building since the close of the basketball season a year ago, and according to Robert Pickett, assistant in charge of facilities to physical education Dean David C. Bischoff, "the changes have been tremendous."

"The Cage, as many people remember it, doesn't exist anymore," Pickett said. "The inside is totally renovated and once the outside is done the University will have a first-rate basketball facility."

On the outside, the addition's foundation and roof girders are in place and workers are building up the walls. The addition will also feature a skylight, concession stand, training rooms, four locker rooms (two for the UMass men's and women's teams and two visiting team locker rooms), and support rooms for media and special guests.

Inside, the walls and ceiling have been painted white and the stands ripped out. The concrete floor covering the entire arena is in and awaits the all-sport surface.

The bleachers inside will retract into the wall while the balcony's stands will go up to the railing with aisles in back of them, not in front as before. The scoreboard, a recent addition, will remain intact. The outside, at the expense of about 20 parking places, will be landscaped.

"The contractors are on schedule, the materials are here and work has been going steadily," Pickett said. "It will have a new track and floor and I expect that all of our teams will see definite improvements and find it a great practice facility."

The Cage held 4,200 prior to renovations and estimates for after the construction place its seating at slightly below the old figure.

"I really missed that place," said Gerlufsen, whose team played its home games at the Springfield Civic Center. "It's a great old building to see a basketball game. University of Massachusetts basketball just didn't seem the same without it."

Gerlufsen said he hopes to make plans with former Minuteman Julius "Dr. J." Erving, now an all-star in the National Basketball Association to help in re-opening the Cage at UMass' first game next season.

"Getting the Doctor back there would remind the fans of when UMass was a strong team," the coach said. "I hope that we, with the help of the Cage and the fans, can get back to that level again."

Gayand Lesbian community ask for civility on campus

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the fourth in a five-part series examining gay, lesbian and bisexual students at UMass. Today's story focuses on the role of the administration.

"We hold the University responsible for not creating a campus environment that is truly one of civility for lesbian, gay and bisexual students."

This comment was addressed to Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey and seven other UMass officials by members of the Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Alliance when they presented top administrators with a list of demands at the end of last semester.

The demands called for the establishment of a professionally staffed office of gay, lesbian and bisexual affairs on campus and arose partly in response to a wave of homophobic acts that were occurring at the time.

'Horrified' at intolerance

"A lot of us in the administration who thought that the climate was tolerant of diversity were horrified at how intolerant it had become," recalled Sarah Boy, assistant to Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson, who was present at the meeting with these students.

Boy was referring to such incidents as plans for a heterosexuals' fight-back march, plans to hang a gay student in effigy and the appearance of "gay-busters" posters on campus.

Boy said that as a result of the meeting, the administration "came up with a number of stop-gap measures for this semester."

One of these measures was the appointment of Felice Yeskel as a human relations planner and advocate to assess the experiences and needs of gay and lesbian students on campus.

According to Yeskel, "Although the students demanded a central office, the administration felt some research was first required to assess the students' needs."

Data being collected

Yeskel is collecting data through questionnaires, telephone surveys, analysis of a taped "speak-out," surveys of residence hall staff and phone logs of institutions on campus identified with gay and lesbian affairs. She is also approaching service agencies and asking them what programs they offer specific to gay and lesbian students.

She said that although the report will not be completed and submitted to Madson until early May, the preliminary findings suggest that "the students live in an environment that is oppressive to them."

For example, a Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office phone survey showed:

•Eighty-eight percent of students felt that anti-gay and lesbian attitudes existed at UMass.

•Ninety-two percent of students reported they had seen other students putting down gays and lesbians.

•Eighty-four percent said they had seen anti-gay graffiti.

The speak-out includes such comments as:

•You can imagine how encouraging it is for a gay man coming out to go into every toilet and see "burn faggot burn."

•All around you, gay, lesbian and bisexual people are being constantly harassed...to the point that many people are held back from being themselves.

"I was surprised that the problem was so severe," Yeskel said, commenting on the preliminary findings.

Final consideration

Asked whether she thought the administration would give the final report serious consideration and make it the basis for changes, Yeskel replied she felt the administration was "concerned" and "acting in good faith," but "what happens to the recommendations I'll make remains to be seen," she said.

"I think doing the report is good," said Kathleen Offenhartz, a bisexual woman student, but she added "the administration likes to see themselves as nice guys and this is one way of getting us off their backs."

"I'll be very disappointed if they stop at the report," Paul Throne, alliance member, said, noting that the administration's proposal to create the position of homophobia/heterosexism awareness trainer in the Southwest Residential Area has yet to be fulfilled.

Boy said her prediction is that "when the report is done the Office of Student Affairs will start planning for changes in existing services and getting additional services."

But, she remarked, "since requests for fiscal 1987 have already been submitted, no one should expect a gorgeous semester next year."

The administration has also agreed, at the end of last semester, to fund in part, with the Student Government Association, the position appointment of Ellen Olmstead as a heterosexism/homophobia awareness trainer with the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA).

Olmstead said, however, that "there is no guarantee of money for this position next semester."

Commission on Civility

The events of last semester also led to the involvement of the Chancellor's Commission on Civility, composed of members from a wide range of university constituencies, whose purpose is to foster high levels of discourse on issues of civility.

"At the start of the year, we set up priorities and the oppression of lesbians and gays was at the top," said Jay Savereid, English professor and commission chairman.

Homosexuals repressed since 1820 author says in lecture

By RENEE BACHER
Collegian Staff

The voice of homosexuals have been historically repressed, according to a revisionist historian who spoke yesterday afternoon as part of Gay/Lesbian Awareness Week.

Jonathan Katz, author of A Gay American History, spoke to a crowd of about 150 on the "Creation of Heterosexuality" from its historical origins. He outlined the structure of gays in the 19th century until 1982.

Katz referred to the years between 1820 and 1892 as "b.h." (before heterosexuality).

During this time, categories for sexuality did not exist. "Love and lust were consigned to separate spheres," Katz said, and men and women were also consigned to these spheres.

The era Katz calls the "heterosexual mystique" occurred from 1900 to 1930. During this time heterosexuality was stressed as being universal and included a human judgment of opposition between males and females. To stress this point, Katz sang a line from a song titled, "Masculine women, feminine men (which is the rooster, which is the hen?"

Between 1945 and 1965, "heterosexual hegemony" occured, Katz said. It encompassed the "cult of domesticity" and the unchallenged dominance of the heterosexual norm, he said. "Heterosexuality in crisis" took place between 1965 and 1982. According to Katz, because of the gays who came out of the closet, "The coming out of the homo provoked the coming out of the het."

Katz's approach to understanding the relations between heterosexuals and homosexuals involves a distancing between the two which he calls part of a "utopian dream."

SAO asked to cut its budget

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted last night to demand the Student Activities Office cut its budget by 10 percent and upheld a motion ending the $7,000 Conference Account, in order to assist in an "SGA fiscal crisis."

"I hope this means the Student Activities Office will get rid of some of what they don't need, so the money can be used to better serve the students," Dave Valade, a senator from Lewis said after raising the motion.

Funding for RSO groups will be decreased in total by $175,359 due to the effects of the fiscal crisis. The SAO, according to SGA treasurer Diane Rossi, is asking for a budget increase of $18,000.

"I firmly believe we do have the power to make Randy (Donant,Director of SAO) cut his budget, Rossi said, noting that in 1981, students forced the office to cut its budget.

The Senate Budget Committee and Coordinating Committee have also made recommendations to SAO that they cut their budget.

The deletion of the Conference Account which provided funds for RSO groups to attend conferences, will make an additional $7,000 available to fund RSO groups.

"$7,000 is not much money at all, but it's going to save some RSO's by their skins," said Budget Committee chair Jordan Rosner.

Rosner added that in meetings last semester between SGA leaders and Bob Jenal of the Student Activities office who conducts the Student Activities Trust Fund Review, there was a warning of an upcoming fiscal crisis, but the previous senate leadership "never did anything about it."

"Any chance we have to get more money, we have to jump on it," he added.

Senate speaker John Ruddock announced the SGA Constitutional Task Force will meet with UMass General Council Attorney William Searson in regard to his rejection of the 1985 SGA constitution.

SGA co-president Stacey Roth noted that the only comments of recommendations one would expect Searson to make are of a legal nature. Roth said, "He (Searson) has made many, many, suggestions that walk a fine line in defining them as legal questions," adding, "We plan to suggest (he) keep his own feelings about student government and student rights out of it."

THEY DRANK FRESH BEER. YOU DRINK COOKED BEER.

Back in the days when baseball was just beginning, there was no such thing as bottled beer or beer in cans.

Those were the great days of draft beer, fresh from the keg.

Like the draft they brewed at Frederic Miller's old Plank Road Brewery. It had a smooth, fresh taste those horsehide heroes loved as much as they loved baseball.

A taste that's hard to find in today's bottles and cans. Because most beers, in bottles and cans, are pasteurized. Cooked to 140 degrees to preserve their shelf life. So they lose that fresh, draft taste.

But now there's a bottled beer that's not cooked. It's specially cold-filtered instead. To keep the true taste of fresh draft.

Introducing Plank Road Original Draught. It tastes as fresh from the bottle as it does from the keg.

Charges filed in bombing

Disciplinary action was initiated yesterday against one of the three University of Massachusetts students involved in the bomb explosion Monday which left one student seriously injured.

The student was not identified, although one of the three students, Adam H. Hessler, was charged with possession of a homemade exploding device and explosives.

Hessler, a 19-year-old hotel, restaraunt and travel administration major, was released on personal recognizance after pleading innocent in Hampshire District Court Tuesday, court officials said.

The state fire marshall had requested a warrant for Hessler's arrest after investigating Monday's explosion. Robert D. Nixon, the injured student, remained in satisfactory condition yesterday at Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

The three students had packed a bicycle pump with toilet paper and gunpowder to blow toilet paper out of the third floor window in Washington tower.

The device exploded, sending metal parts of the bicycle pump into the wall and Nixon's stomach.

•Seven stolen parking decals were recovered Monday and Tuesday from parked cars across campus. Police said possession of stolen decals constitutes larceny and may result in serious court charges.

•The roof of a 1972 Volkswagen was caved in while it was parked in lot 32, police said. The woman who owned the car reported that the depressions in the roof measured six inches deep and that the antenna was snapped off. There was no estimate of damage reported.

UMass starts Tower Library repair

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

Work has begun on a 13-month project to restore the University of Massachusetts Library Tower to full occupancy and usage.

A funding allocation of $2.4 million will be spent to construct a covered walkway addition on the south side of the library, modify the elevators, complete the third and sixth floors, and alter the first floor for the addition, Edward Ryan, director of planning and construction said.

The covered walkway will provide another entrance and exit from the library on the side near the Old Chapel where the original entrance was located, he said. Occupancy in the library is now restricted to 500 people because there is only one exit to be used in case of fire.

"We're planning 13 months total, if everything goes as planned and that would put our scheduled completion date at spring of 1986," Ryan said.

"The walkway will be 36 feeet long, with an overhang of 48 feet, and will extend up to the planter there. The walls will be glassed in on both sides," he said.

Library staff and administrators could tentatively plan to move the main collection of books from Goodell in the library next summer if the project is not interrupted, Ryan said.

"But that's optimistic and it should be at this time," he added.

Project Engineer Bill Marren said the contractors who received the work project, Converse Construction Inc. of Beverly, have done dormitory renovations for the university and "We've had good experience with them in the past."

A solution for the problem of spalling, or the flaking and chipping of the brick exterior, has not yet been found but the university continues to work on that project and the leaking tarp which covers the Campus Center and the parking garage on the plaza level, Ryan said.

Finished in 1974, the library cost about $16.5 million and was designed to accomodate 2.5 million volumes and up to 3,000 people.

Polish murder trial subject of trial

The murder of Polish solidarity priest Fr. Jerry Popietuszko not only stunned Poland, but focused world-wide attention on how that East Bloc country's legal and governmental system works.

The outcome of that trial is the focus of a speech at 8 tonight by a former editor of a Solidarity newspaper.

Jolanta Strzelecka, former editor of Tygodnick Powszechny, a Catholic intellectual weekly, and Solidarity Weekly, will discuss why the Polish government allowed the trial of four members of the secret police to be open to the public and the press, in a lecture in Room 61 of Bartlett Hall.

Popietuszko was kidnapped along with his driver in Poland on Oct. 19, 1984. Ten days later his slain body was found in a river.

Responding to world-wide pressure for answers to his murder, the Polish government arrested four members of its secret police, a move that stunned many Polish government experts.

Strzelecka will discuss the trial and its potential after effects in Poland.

The lecture is free and open to the public.

Debt management seminar emphasizes financial planning

The average student has to repay $8,500 in educational loans after graduation. At that time, many students also begin to apply for home and car loans while trying to establish a good credit rating.

Unfortunately, many students don't think about financial planning until it's time to graduate. "Don't defer reality," says Arthur Jackson, director of financial aid services at the University of Massachusetts. "Students should be educated about their rights and responsibilities concerning educational and consumer loans."

A Debt Management Seminar will be held today from 1:30 to 4:40 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom to inform students about financial debts, responsibilities, planning and how they relate to their career goals.

Representatives from the Financial Aid Office, the Bursar's Office and bank officials will address issues of particular interest to graduating seniors, Jackson said.

"When people go into a bank for a car loan, the first thing they ask is, 'How much are you in debt from school?'" Jackson said. He said many students don't consider the responsibilities of repaying their loans until they are reminded.

"When students don't make their first payment, they may fall into a default status which counts against their credit rating," he said. That may lead to civil or legal action by the institution from which the money was borrowed.

Additional topics to be discussed today include repaying guaranteed student loans, establishing credit and deferment and cancellation of loans.

Yvonne John serves a happy customer, UMass student Jon Strymish, at her new restaurant in Hadley.

Yvonne's Caribeana opens in Hadley

By LAURA KOESTER
Collegian Staff

A red door, red tablecloths, exotic flowers and a beach mural make up the warm Caribbean atmosphere of a new restaurant opened by University of Massachusetts graduate student Yvonne John.

John is also the manager of Yvonne's restaurant in the basement of the New Africa House. "I grew up working hard. If I sat still, I'd probably get sick. Your body becomes accustomed to it."

John will continue to do all the cooking for her restaurant on campus, but she will spend most of her time at the new one, called Yvonne's Caribbeana on Rte. 9 in Hadley.

John came to the United States nine years ago from Guyana. "I've wanted to own my own restaurant for a long time, but I had to work towards it," she said.

Six different kinds of cuisine are served at the new restaurant, including East Indian, Oriental, African, American, vegetarian and of course Caribbean.

Some of the entrees are Indi Madras curried chicken, seafood combinations, island teriyaki beef, curried lamb and tofu and vegetables.

John said she obtained the funding for the restaurant through a loan from Northampton Institute for Savings.

She said the support and encouragement of friends, faculty, family and "other prominent people in the area," were instrumental in getting the business started.

John has six children whom she raised as a single parent while working and attending school. She has a bachelor of arts degree in food management and is working toward her doctorate in multicultural education.

John also runs a catering business and teaches a course at UMass on West Indian cultures at the Malcolm X center. She has also published her own cook book and is working on completing a second one.

Women's studies kicks off 10th year

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's studies department begins a celebration of its 10th anniversary tomorrow with an exhibition in Bartlett Hall titled, "The Past...Our Future", organized by Lisa Baskin, Art Editor of the Massachusetts Review.

The exhibition was described by Arlene Avakian, staff assistant in the Women's Studies department as a "collection of early documents going back to the beginning of the second wave of the women's movement in the 60s".

"These are the kinds of things libraries don't collect and they give a clear view of the early history of the women's movement in the valley," she said.

The anniversary celebration continues Friday with a discussion at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall titled "Women's Studies in an International Context: The Decade Past, Visions for the next Ten Years." It will be led by Johnetta Cole, professor of Anthropology at Hunter College, Marysa Navarro, professor of History at Dartmouth College and Catharine R. Stimpson, professor of English at Rutgers University.

Saturday's activities include a series of workshops, from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. in Bartlett Hall, titled, Working It Out: Women's Studies Grads and Careers, We're all in this together: Work as a collective activity; Focusing on the Best in Yourself: Preparing for New Options, and Feeling, like an Imposter: Undermining Ourselves.

Avakian said she thinks anniversaries are a "good time to take stock and consider the direction for the future."

"There's been a lot of change over the past 10 years. It's been the result of a lot of hard work," she said. "We'd like to celebrate that and take the opportunity to see where women's studies has been and what direction it should take in the next 10 years."

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Modern times are leaving our Mother Earth behind

Matthew Benedict

What's so modern and advanced about the 20th century? Granted, we enjoy the highest standard of living our young human race has known; advanced technology has sped-up production and communications, reducing time-consuming busywork; and there exists and infinite amount of opportunities for people to choose from to direct their lives. Indeed, we can now live life to its fullest.

Yet, as we all know, for any advancement, something must be pushed aside in the name of "progress." The costs for 20th century "progress" are sad and dangerous: We have lost contact with ourselves, our fellow humans and our Mother Earth.

Modern man places an undue and detrimental emphasis on speed and motion. Our advancements—glorified gadgets—relect this: high-speed travel and communications, the computer craze, video games, fast food, no-fault divorces and the demanded mobility of the shrinking family. These efforts of streamlining have created the dangerous results of instability and impersonality.

It is difficult for a person to create permanent relationships in a society which frowns on inter-personal contact, fixedness and self-expression. The conditions and demands of modern life work against people being able to create and sustain close contacts with themselves and their neighbors. Furthermore, everyone has completely forgotten their Mother Earth, from whom we all originate. Our Mother, abused and forgotten.

Society's ideal of how life should be lived by its members is based on institutions like McDonald's and The Love Boat. In the case of the former, a person can order, purchase, receive and ingest a generic meal in a matter of minutes. In the latter case, a person can meet, fall in love, have a major breakup, reconcile and set a wedding date within one hour. "Modern life is wonderful! God, I hope I don't have to wait longer than five minutes for my dinner or more than an hour for my lifetime mate. Or travel longer than three hours to reach Europe. Details and inconveniences."

The above is a dangerous frame of mind, for both the individual and a society. We have become a race of Nomadic tribesmen, separated from one another by tribal affiliation and constantly moving in search of one exploitable resource after another and give nothing back. The constant motion of modern-day existence creates impersonality and instability, hitting us hardest in our hearts, psyches and personalities. We simply cannot connect with each other (and ourselves and our society) when everything is in a perpetual flux. Nor can we ask for breathing space for fear of being trampled and forgotten. We have lost contact with ourselves, our past and present, always moving towards some goal. Hopefully.

We must demand a slowdown in society's physical and psychological "advancements" before we smother and destroy ourselves. We must slow ourselves down also, turning away from motion, impersonality and blindness to everything around us, not against. Our advancements should assist us, not make us victims to our creations. We must grab for (and demand) our individuality, our hearts, our neighbors and our weeping Mother Earth, asking for some meaning and justification of this high-speed and high-tech vicious circle. We deserve more than generic hamburgers, Space Invaders and Love Boat reruns. We're human beings, not mathematic statistics on microfilm and memory chips. It is not too much to ask of a life we are supposed to be living. Or a society which we, afterall, have created.

Autopsy of the Democratic Party

Sal Assad

This is the first part of a two-part series.

Despite its recent decline, liberalism is generally recognized to have ruled our politics and thought in the last half a century, from the time of FDR, one of the most competent American presidents of the century, to the time of Jimmy Carter, one of the most incompetent. During the time of FDR when Big Business reached a tacit unwritten agreement with labor, the Big Business, and their ally, the state, promised the working people a steadily rising standard of living along with a certain set of minimum protections and rights, known as the Social Security System.

In return the labor leaders, the AFL-CIO, were co-opted into supporting all of the foreign adventures, invasions and bombings carried out by the subsequent presidents from World War II to the Korean War through the invasion of the Dominican Republic in 1965 to the war against the Vietnamese popular national liberation movement. Meanwhile the U.S. multinational corporations like GE, Du Pont, Dow, etc. and banks were all blessed by a government bureaucracy which hysterically saw its godly mission as one of constantly expanding "our" economic sphere of influence throughout the planet.

Immediately after World War II, 1500 military bases were set up all around the globe along with hundreds of thousands of soldiers and thousands of nuclear missiles. All this along with an international almighty network of terrorism called the CIA, was used to crush all movements that somehow threatened our corporate profits in the corresponding countries. Although the justification of building this modern empire was a so-called communist conspiracy, in almost all cases of American intervention, there was no presence of any "Soviet danger." To mention a few examples: in 1953 the CIA overthrew the liberal, anti-communist government of Mossadegh in Iran; in 1954 the CIA overthrew the liberal government of Arbenz in Guatemala; in 1965 we went to the Dominican Republic to crush a political demonstration; in 1973 we overthrew the government of Allende in Chile. In all these cases we intervened to crush governments of movements who were not communist, but simply were threats to our corporate profits. In all these cases we overthrew governments that were democratically elected and all these interventions resulted in tens of thousands of deaths, mass arrests, rule of torture and the establishment of bloody and repressive dictatorships (for example: the Shah, Pinochet, Somoza, Marcos, Trujillo). All these governments provided tax-free investment zones with cheap labor for American profit-mongering corporations.

This situation can simply not be blamed on any particular president or political party. The Democrats have been historically as interventionist as the Republicans to say the least. Thus, to the dismay of well-intentioned but naive liberals, all were either pitifully ignorant or suffering from deliberate collective historical amnesia or die-hard Democrats (people like our ex-ambassador to El Salvador Robert White, our UMass Prof. Jean Ellstein, the UMass Democrats, the Editorial Board of the Boston Globe.)

The Democratic presidential nominee Walter Mondale declared at the 1984 Party Convention: "As the president of the United States, I would not hesitate to use our armed forces to protect American business whenever necessary;" so harmoniously in line with the late

U.S. Democrats
RATS ARE THE FIRST TO LEAVE A SINKING SHIP!

Republican hero Calvin Coolidge's statement that "America's business is business."

If Mondale's statement was simply "a slip of tongue from a mediocre mind," how about John F. Kennedy's escalation of war in Vietnam or his attempt to invade Cuba to crush the popular revolution?

A decision that doesn't make any sense

I'm not surprised the UMass administration wanted to take away the power of the Board of Govenors. Its latest decision was to put an ice cream shop in the vacant Union Records Store, instead of the bike co-op, by a 13-7 vote.

With the decision to put in an ice cream co-op, I see that the majority of the BOG doesn't understand the finances and running of the Campus Center and its food services.

As a whole, the food services in the Campus Center/Student Union lose money every year.

It's not hard to see why. There just isn't enough student money to support all the food services. And how do these businesses stay afloat? With student money from our Campus Center fee.

The ice cream proposal is vastly underestimated one BOG member said and referred to figures quoted by William Harris, director of the Campus Center, which were much higher.

The start-up costs and the cost for renovations will be tremendous. Where will that money come from?

It will come from students.

The bike co-op proposal made sense. It is already an established business. It won't cost the Campus Center anything because it doesn't lose money like the ice cream shop will.

One BOG member stated that another school, Wellesley, has an successful ice-cream shop. And she liked the idea. That's nice. I like ice cream, too. But did she and the other 12 that voted for the ice cream shop look at it fiscally? I don't think so.

The coffee shop sells ice cream now. This decision doesn't make any sense and if the BOG keeps making stupid and fiscally irresponsible decisions like this, I don't blame the administration for trying to take the BOG's power away from them.

U.S. watches cautiously

Rob Skelton

Last weekend's coup in the Sudan, reacted to with caution by the U.S. State Dept. is, in the peculiar ways of African politics, a victory for self-determination. In the long run, it will prove no more of a threat or evil to its people and regional international security than the previous military government did. It is fortunate that the will of the people prompted the change and that the military responded with a bloodless, politically palatable coup.

Ousted President Gaafar al-Nimeiry, whose 1969 seizure of the power had been more or less legitimized by the U.S. and others, completely mismanaged the Sudan; in doing so he alienated large portions of the peoples he was presiding over.

Sudan, twice California's size and the largest country in Africa can, like the Golden State, be divided into two distinct parts. The North, part of the maghreb (Moslem Saharan Africa), is a world apart from the mostly black, Christian/animist sub-tropical South. Secessionist movements supported by Libya have been disruptive for years, and refugees from Ethiopia and drought have overburdened Sudan's social safety structures to the extent that it must rely entirely on international aid to survive.

Austerity measures imposed by the International Monetary Fund decreased government subsidies, forcing up staple prices. This incited rioting within the country. Similar reactions in Morocco and Tunisia in 1984 didn't bring down their governments, but then their leaders didn't choose that time to go abroad.

The State Department looks at it all like this: Is it safe for 1) Americans, and 2)investment/ (exploitation?)/capitalism? Does it remain a friendly against threats or will it become a threat against friendlies? They are slightly worried now because neighbor terrorist-state Libya was the first to applaud and recognize the new Sudan. Americans are safe (whew!), but it is a "strategically-located country vital to U.S. interests," so we are watching and waiting.

As it turns out, the interim chief of the Sudan, Gen. Siwar el-Dahabi, has assured the U.S. that he'll continue to lean our way. On the question of winners and losers, almost every party involved emerged victorious. The people of the Sudan called for change and got it. The change remains non-hostile toward the West, so the West wins. Libya's madman lost an enemy, so he's smiling. Ditto the government of Ethiopia and the rebels in the southern Sudan. The only real loser in the affair, if you will, is the ousted Nimeiry—poor boy.

Sudan was the setting, near the turn of the century, of a Moslem fundamentalist revival that serves as a monument of inspiration for the Jihad, or Holy War, of today. Involved was a Khomeini-type known as the Mahdi, who made history by bringing unprecedented grief to the English colonizers. All of this reminds us of our vulnerability in areas of the world which are, after all, foreign to us.

Shock treatment worked

William J. Spain

When I was 18, my older brother decided to subject me to his own form of shock treatment. It was not anything cruel and certainly nothing calculated to provoke amusement on any one's part. Elder siblings are prone to that sort of thing but occasionally all they want to do is teach us something.

He invited me to go to New York one weekend with him and his girlfriend. We would be staying with two guys, one of whom was an old friend of his from prep school. Our agenda was simple—party in the Big Apple for a few days. No problem there; I had sampled the pleasures of that intense city before and I was ready to go wild again.

The shock came when we got there and I discovered that his friends were a gay couple. I couldn't believe that my own brother would do such a thing to me. While I had never been inclined to the "line-them-all-up-and-shoot-them" philosophy, I was a victim of inbred societal mores and had always experienced vague feelings of revulsion when considering the subject of homosexuality.

My brother was well aware of this. He had recently been treated to a discourse on my opinions of homosexuals. "It is unnatural," I informed him. "Those people must be emotionally disturbed. They aren't like us." He responded only by saying that one should not criticize what one does not understand.

That weekend blew a lot of my misconceptions out of the water. Our hosts did not eye me hungrily or try to convert me. I was not made to watch any displays of physical interaction that would have disgusted me. I found their household to be relaxed and tension-free.

In all things except one, they were like the vast majority of happily married heterosexual couples I have known. Their relationship was based not on sex, but on love, tenderness and support. Perhaps they are not typical. I don't really know. I do know that they are an example of something beautiful that can flourish if it is given an open and understanding atmosphere. They remain together to this day, no mean accomplishment for any couple in this age of fleeting love affairs.

There are still things about the gay lifestyle that puzzle me. The idea of falling in love with another man is foreign to me. However, I now refrain from passing any judgments. It can be a mighty cold world out there and I cannot hold it against anyone for seeking warmth and comfort in another's arms, no matter who they choose. To do so would be to show a lack of compassion for one's fellow beings. We must remember that everyone is human first and anything else a distant second.

William J. Spain is a Collegian columnist.

Budget burning 'symbolic act' by UM dems

In a recent Collegian letter, "unimpressed" was a word Rod Snelling used to describe the Republican Club's reaction to the University Democrats budget burning at the March 27 meeting of the Student Senate. It was at this meeting that we informed the SGA of our intention to find alternative financing and to challenge other groups to do so. Let us assure Snelling that we are not in the business of trying to impress Republicans. Our action showed that there are groups on campus that want to see the SGA fiscal crisis solved. We, unlike Snelling's organization, are paying more than lip service to the principle of financial responsibility. The University Democrats are not out to impress the GOP's campus organization, but apparently, contrary to Snelling's comments, we did. If our organization and budget were of "comparatively little value," why did we elicit Snelling's response?

Our challenge was for the Republican Club to follow our lead. Why didn't Snelling just answer our proposal without taking advantage of the Collegian as a platform for his negative Republican tactics? He belittled us by claiming that we are an inactive group. We are the "inactive" group that worked on the highly succesful Geraldine Ferraro rally. We are the "inactive" group that worked against the growing pro-Reagan tide (Ronnie was reported to be carrying this campus earlier that year.) We delivered this campus to the Democrats by a 3 to 1 margin.

We are, despite what Snelling says, growing in influence every day, as we become more active in the Democratic state and national committees.

Snelling's response to the University Democrats represents a misguided outlook. He thinks that he can keep our legitimacy in check by ignoring our suggestions. Perhaps he should burn his ego before his group takes up our challenge to burn their budget. Does he fear that we are too much of an organized opposition to the UMass Republican Club's objectives? We are an obvious alternative. Our party represents many interests. Plurality is our strength. It is a strength that our opponents do not possess.

Letters to the Editor

BOG must make tough decisions sometimes

The Board of Governors has an obligation to this University community to make difficult and sometimes controversial decisions. On Thursday March 28th I proposed and the Board passed a motion recommending that the Campus Center administration discontinue the sales of Coors Beer at all of the Campus Center facilities. This motion was introduced as a result of anti-worker policies practiced by the Coors Company, blatently racist statements attributed to William Coors and donations on behalf of the Coors family to organizations which promote anti-gay sentiments as well as to organizations which are directly involved with the creation of policies that are designed to undermine educational opportunity to minorities, women and those who can not afford a college education.

The Coors Company has been cited for numerous labor violations yet they continue to exploit their worker's rights by demanding that they submit to polygraph testing (lie detector) as a prerequisite for employment. They also continue to search their employees' persons, automobiles, lunch boxes, lockers etc. for any reasons which they deem appropriate.

Last February, William Coors, acting as an official company representative, stated in front of a group of minority business people that "blacks lack intellectual capacity." He also said, "The best thing they (slave traders) did for you was to bring your ancestors over here in chains." These statements and this philosophy in general is absolutely unacceptable.

Many people say, and I agree that the Coors family has a right to pursue the political philosophy of their choice. But, we must draw a line and say no when those philosophies infringe on the rights of others. People have a right to choose their own lifestyles including sexual preferences and the opportunity to pursue higher education.

When we buy a glass of Coors Beer we are financially supporting union busting, racism, and oppression. We are not obliged to offer a market for Coors products to be sold on this campus. So let's join our many friends such as the AFL-CIO, The National Organization for Women, The United States Student Association and the National Education Association in their attempt to halt the social injustice which is being promoted by the Coors Beer Company.

Black and white

In Yadira Betances' column Tuesday, she states that the term "black," unlike the term "white," should be capitalized because "black," unlike "white," denotes a particular race or nationality, not skin color. We feel that Betances' argument perpetuates the very climate of disrespect which she tries to mitigate.

We cannot help but feel that there is some hypocrisy involved in her position. We were always under the belief that white Americans were of European descent and that black Americans were of African descent.

We fear that as long as Americans think of themselves as black first and Americans second, that misunderstandings, prejudice and discrimination will persist. We personally do not want to be a party to the continuation of the segregationist attitudes that we inferred from Betances' article.

Slavery must not forever be an albatross around this country's neck. Rather, we must be allowed to continue to build one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all, and prejudice for none.

Another tale

Last Friday a column by John Yonce, "A Bunny's Tail of Death" unfairly manipulated people's natural sympathy for "cute, fun, (and) fluffy bunnies" and falsely accused Army ROTC of wrong-doing. I was a civilian participant in the FTX program, and yes there were some (myself included) who were mildly disturbed by the preparation of the rabbits. However, the act was necessary to give us proper instruction in how to avoid contamination. Instead of discussing the reason or purpose of the exercise, or debating whether or not it should be legal (which it is); Yonce chose instead to make an emotional attack on the military.

It is no secret that this very university tortures and kills laboratory animals for redundant experiments on a daily basis. I question whether Yonce had real concern for the "cute, fun, (and) fluffy bunnies" or whether he was merely seeking to curry favor with the anti-militarists whom he covers regularly for the Collegian. Those who participate in ROTC serve and defend our great country. They deserve our respect and our thanks.

Now that Yonce has revealed his true bias, the question is whether or not he will be able to sincerely cover ROTC news items when he is wearing his reporter's hat.

Recent records are either snappy or sappy. Here are two examples of each:

THE OFFS: First Record (CD Presents Ltd.) I can appreciate the fact that oftentimes a band must experiment with styles in order to find its identity, but I don't want to have to hear its floundering. The Offs flounder between ska, reggae and pisspoor funk. This allows single songs to work, such as "I've Got the Handle" or "Cool Down," both reggae. Other songs, such as "Why Boy," which are God-knows-what-genre fail miserably. The record has some moments, but does not succeed as a cohesive whole.

Another annoying aspect of First Record is the fact that it is packaged like a punk album. Any songs (like "One More Shot") which may have had a progenitor in punk are the type of mutated offspring better left on a hill to die. Despite their confusion, the Offs do have some talent. Keep on trying guys, but don't cut another disc until you've decided what the hell you want to sound like. Dare I say that First Record is Off-ul?

NORMAN SALANT: Sax Talk (CD Presents Ltd.) Many Rock bands--both alternate and mainstream--have tried to relieve Jazz of its monopoly of the saxophone; yet none of these bands have really escaped Jazz's soulful influence. None, that is, but Norman Salant. Just as Fred Frith has distorted a guitar until it is something quite other than a guitar, Salant has modified his own instrument: Salant, who has played with The Residents ('nuff said) and Romeo Void, does things with his sax that would stun Bird Parker. He has transcended the confines of his instrument, and must be commended for that. The jacket gives thanks to Andy Warhol, so there's no doubt of Salant becoming an underground fad pretty soon. Or maybe there is--what decade is this?

FADE TO BLACK: Corridors of Gender (CD Presents Ltd.) I'm not sure why this record is called Corridors of Gender. Perhaps the lyrics would justify the title, if only I could hear them. Unfortunately the singers alternate between moaning and screaming the words, so they're rather unintelligible. There's a lyric sheet enclosed which is unenlightening, pompous and didactic. I might quote some of the "poetry" to harangue an enemy. The muddled vocals go along well with the confused instrumentals which are either morbidly downbeat or nauseatingly conventional, depending upon the song. This is one band whose break-up I will not lament; I never want to hear this uninspired group again.

SADE: Diamond Life (Portrait Records/CBS) Sade Adu has that husky, sultry voice that sets knees wobbling. This, combined with jazzily soulful instrumentals, makes Diamond Life an irresistable album. You might be familiar with some of the tracks already: The sexually explicit "Your Love is King" is an unabashed hit in England and "Smooth Operator" is receiving a lot of local air play.

And for good reason: Sade (pronounced "SHAR-day", the pasted label on the disc proclaims) has a wonderful voice, bluesy and seductive. Her band is never ostentatious and provide a smooth fusion of rhapsody and rhythm. In all truth, the songs tend to sound alike (with certain noteable exceptions), but that by no means demeans the record. It is elegant background music which goes along naturally with lowered lights, soft couches, jugs of Gallo and that Special Someone.

Sade's Diamond Life: chilly scenes of summer.

The lyrics, all written by Sade, are occasionally sappy, and in the case of "Your Love is King", tacky. The music, however, more than makes up for this. Buy the record: The band is steamy and Sade is even prettier than Madonna (Don't tell Madonna I said that).

The aesthetics of ceramic art

Contemporary Ceramics
Six New England Artists
At the University Gallery
Through June 9th

By FREDERICK E. STEINWAY
Collegian Correspondent

Probably the most dramatic of the ceramics currently on exhibit at the University Gallery are three glazed and painted busts by Nancy Smith of Lincoln, Massachusetts. The gallery attendant told me these "get up and dance" on the late shift, and I believed her when I saw them.

All three of the Smith pieces are self portraits, according to Gallery administrator Regina Coppola. One--blue-skinned--wears a wolf-pelt one her head. The next, "cadeuceus," appears with a twin headed snake wrapped around her shoulders. The central bust bears white flowers and a trout that bends, as if in mid-leap, toward the woman's face. Each subject captures a rich and authentic psychological experience. They might be named "Earth," "Air," and "Water."

Ceramic jar by Chris Gustin currently on display at the University Gallery.

Probably the most elegant of the ceramics are the set of four paired "Guardian Vessels" by Nancy Lapointe. The evocation of ancient Chinese bronzes is overt. Each "Guardian Vessel" comes with a smaller companion whose lid is fastened with twine. The larger vessels each wear a bolt or key to serve as a handle. This quaternity of ceramics projects a restful harmony of line and form.

Any trip to the University Gallery this month should include a turn in the maze. It is, as you will probably discover, a true double-maze: its two entrances lead to different pathways that connect in a surprising way. The whole structure is open to the light through cotton belts and canvas panels--each colored with tie-die, stripe or target patterns. The whole maze is like a warmly-colored room within a room, a painting you can walk through.

Alan Shields, maker of this maze (on loan from Paula Cooper Gallery in Soho) also made the extended wallpiece, "Mitchell Turnpike" whose relation to highways is probably the geometry of signs. The dyes here are outstanding, and the patterning in the third panel especially seems to offer messages to travellers on foot.

The show, which opened on March 30, will extend through May 9. The Gallery, downstairs in the Fine Arts Center is open weekdays except Monday, in the daytime. You can stroll in for a refresher on the pondside, between classes or even after a tasty meal at Earthfoods.

ARTS

live wire
by Peter Wissoker

This is my week to rank on David Byrne, lead singer of the rock band Talking Heads, now featured in a movie Stop Making Sense, at the Pleasant Street Theatre. I'm not ranking on the movie, just the man in the suit, the marketing man. What is with the stupid suit? In last month's Vanity Fair there is a picture of Byrne "the suit" with a woman sticking her tongue in his ear. She's supposed to be a model. Is this the same man who sang "Boy time, girl time is that the difference between you and me?" In order to keep the column lively my wife social critique will continue further down the page.

Tonight the Del Fuegos and the Drongos will be at the Rusty Nail. The Drongos should make a great opening band. When they played at the Zone last semester they were good for about the first forty minutes so this should be just about right. And the Del Fuegos are the Del Fuegos. With a name like that they can't be bad. They lay the Stray Cats to an early grave. Enough tough talk, go see them.

Friday night, local bands The Stand and That's Flat! will be playing at the Rusty Nail. Circle will be playing at the Hatch. Go see them. Either show will do. Say it once, say it again: There's no local scene unless you make one.

Say it once, why say it again! Why doesn't David Byrne shelve the suit. On the record it says "no gimmicks". If this is so why was there an article about the design of the suit in the New York Times right after the movie opened. What's more Stop Making Sense is not a movie of the last tour but of a reproduction four months later of said tour. But enough about me...

Saturday night singer/songwriter Ferron will be at Smith College with Suzanne Vega. Ferron has been wooing audiences in the area for years and now is ready to break the area wide open, perhaps to the regret of her loyal fans. But really don't let my press agent tone fool you; it will be really fun. This will be your next to last chance to see Suzanne Vega up here before her album comes out. The show is at 8 p.m. in John M. Greene Hall. Also on Saturday Johnny Winter will be at the Agora in Hartford.

Sunday night the Drifters will be at the Red Balloon and Aztec Two Step will be at the Iron Horse. Monday, my man Richard Thompson will be at the Iron Horse and Tuesday Livingston Taylor will be there.

Also, the UMass Blues Band will be at the Drake on Wednesday night.

Trivia Question: In salute to my irritation with David Byrne today's trivia question for a prize unknown is as follows: What instrument, not usually used by the Talking Heads, was featured on their first single "Love Comes to a Building on Fire"? Bring your answer down to the Arts desk marked with the day and time. Remember it's OK to sell, but not to sell out.

Livingston Taylor lives in the shadow of brother James Tuesday at the Iron Horse.

Local heroine, Ferron performs Saturday at Smith College.

BIBLIOFILE
BY BRADFORD VERTER

SIMONE DE BEAUVOIR: Adieux (Pantheon, $8.95 paper) This moving and informative book, subtitled "A Farewell to Sartre," is in two parts. The first is a year-by-year chronicle of the last 10 years of de Beauvoir and Sartre's life together. The second is a 314 page interview she conducted with him during August and September 1974. Adieux is less a philosophical than a biographical work. It offers a frank and insightful view into the varied career of the most vital and influential thinker of our century.

JULIAN SYMONS: Dashiell Hammett (Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, $24.95) Symons, himself a noted mystery author and critic, has written a concise, fascinating critical biography of America's greatest crime writer. The book touches upon his younger years as a Pinkerton detective, his success in film and publishing, his 30 year affair with Lillian Hellman, and his tragic demise following McCarthy's anti-communist purges. Symon's book is not as in-depth as other biographies, such as Diane Johnson's study. It is, however, commendable for its brevity and pace. Its coffee-table format allows for many interesting pictures and makes the book a very attractive volume.

IVAR BRYCE: You Only Live Once: Memories of Ian Fleming (University Publications of America, $12.00) Ivar Bryce is a charming writer whose cheer carries over in his warm recollections of the creator of James Bond. Included in this short memoir are amusing anecdotes of their days together at Eton, their espionage activities during WWII, and their continuing friendship until Fleming's unhappy death. Because of their closeness, however, Bryce ignores the well-known darker side of Fleming's nature, a serious omission.

PAUL GRIFFITHS: Bartok (Dent, 10.95) In this masterful musical biography, Griffiths traces the influences of folk songs and contemporary composers on Bartok's work. He also relates events in Bartok's life that related to his work; for instance he based the theme of a piece on his initials and those of an early love-interest, Felicitas Fabian: 'F-F-Bb-Bb.' Griffith's book, one of Dent's "Master Musicians" series, is highly derivative and very dry and academic, but is nonetheless intriguing.

HERTA BLAUKOPF, ed.: Gustav Mahler, Richard Strauss: Correspondence 1888-1911 (University of Chicago Press, $22.50) This is a somewhat disappointing book. The letters Mahler and Strauss wrote each other tell us little about their personal lives or the time in which they lived. The details revealed abut their works are for the most part trivial. Blaukopf has written a long essay, "Rivalry and Friendship," which follows the text of the letters. It is unintriguing and nitpicking and should have been restricted to magazine publication. I suppose the book is important from a scholarly viewpoint, but is by no means worthwhile casual reading.

DIANA BOWDER, ed. Who Was Who in the Greek World (WSI, $8.95 paper) These are two really remarkable reference works. Both have cross-referenced biographical information with bibliographical sources cited, summaries of the appropriate histories, glossaries, family trees, maps and chronologies. The entries are concise, comprehensive, lucid and informative. The books are extremely readable and should by no means be confined to the academic. They make for interesting browsing and, as the blurb points out, "are an invaluable aid for crossword puzzle enthusiasts." The two books cannot be too highly praised.

Red Sox explode again, 14-5

BOSTON (AP) - Rich Gedman had four hits and the Boston Red Sox scored seven runs after a pair of New York errors in the second inning Wednesday in rolling to a 14-5 victory over the Yankees.

Gedman singled and doubled in the decisive second inning, which Bill Buckner capped with a two-run homer.

Wade Boggs and Tony Armas drove in three runs apiece as the Red Sox, who beat the Yankees 9-2 in the season opener Monday, made it two in a row.

Staked to a big cushion, Boston southpaw Bruce Hurst breezed to the triumph, scattering 10 hits and walking only one in seven innings before giving way to reliever Mark Clear. Bob Ojeda pitched the ninth.

Right-hander Ed Whitson, signed as a free agent after helping San Diego to the National League pennant last fall, was the loser.

number two ranked team in the country.

"Harvard is very good," Hixon said. "They have a lot of speed and they have a good defense. It's going to take a lot of goals to beat them and we're going to have to be at our best.

"They are a sleeper and they are underated in the polls. Plus, when our two teams get together the games are always very close and very competitive. It should be an exciting game," Hixon said.

In last year's regular season contest Harvard prevailed 7-4 but UMass avenged that loss with a 5-4 victory in the NCAA tournament quarterfinals.

Lisa Black leads the Harvard offense, scoring 16 goals and dishing out six assists. Kelly McBribe has tallied 13 goals and Kate Felson 12 for the Crimson. The Harvard defense is led by two All-Americans: goalie Cricket Johnson and defender Ellen O'Neil.

"It's going to be a very fast game," said Hixon. "They are well skilled and we will be tested speed-wise. Both teams go to the goal as fast as they can. It should be a track meet for 50 minutes."

Fila a key for Softball

UM to tangle with Lions

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The task of replacing the University of Massachusetts two-time All-American shortstop Allyson Rioux was a tough one for coach Elaine Sortino this season.

But the freshmen have begun to come through. After a shaky start in the pivot, freshman Alisa Fila has begun to settle down into the position and her play has improved the past four games.

And that is good news for UMass, who host Penn State in yet another crucial Atlantic 10 doubleheader for the Minutewomen at 2 p.m. today at NOPE.

Fellow freshman Paige Kopcza started off the season at short but a fractured elbow has put Kopcza and her .464 batting average on the bench. Kopcza will try to work out early next week but her arm still is sore, Sortino said.

So the job is up to Fila, who hadn't played short since her sophomore year at Lynn English High. Fila is now batting .250 after bottoming out at .207.

"I feel more comfortable out there now," Fila said. "I think I was trying too hard before."

Sortino said, "She is working really hard. She knows what she has to do and is doing it. I'm pleased with what she's done."

What UMass 10-11-1 and 3-2 in the conference has to do this afternoon is stop a hot Penn State team that is 16-6 and swept a doubleheader from Ohio State over the weekend.

The Nittany Lions are led by all-conference selections Geri Saya, a senior third baseman who batted .316 last year and senior outfielder Pam Mowery (.300 last year).

The Minutewomen will counter with junior lefty Lynn Stockley (5-5 0.39 ERA) in the opener and freshman Lisa Rever (4-2 0.78). Stockley has thrown five shutouts this year although each time the opposition scored a run, she has lost.

Baseball goes with Kostro vs. AIC

The University of Massachusetts will send junior righthander Bobby Kostro at American International College in baseball action today at 3 p.m. at Lorden Field.

Kostro, 0-0 with a 10.56 earned run average, will be seeing his second start of the season. UMass is 9-8 overall and winners of five-of-its-last six. Senior designated hitter Todd Comeau, at .373 with 19 runs batted in and two homers, is leading UMass at the plate.

Gorillas fall deeper into hole, 13-6

Brown hands lacrosse third consecutive loss

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The season that started with such promise has turned into a nightmare for the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team.

The Gorillas, scoring only one second half goal, dropped their third straight game as Brown University hustled its way to a 13-6 victory yesterday before 700 fans at Boyden Field.

UMass now stands at 1-3 on the season and must win almost all of the remaining 10 games to have any chance at qualifying for the NCAA tournament. For the moment however, the Gorillas are just looking to survive.

"The penalties killed us and again we were beaten to loose balls that counted and generally outplayed," UMass coach Dick Garber said. "Right now, it's one game at a time for us. We have to get our act together."

Brown, taking advantage of ten UMass penalties, scored four times on the man-advantage while outshooting UMass 51-29. The Gorillas hardly touched the ball in the second half, taking but 12 shots in the last two quarters as the 10th ranked Bruins effectively controlled the ball.

"UMass is one of the group of teams on our level that we're fighting against to make the tournament," Bruins coach Dom Starsia said. "Anytime you can come up here and win it's a plus. We took advantage of what they gave us and our defense was tremendous in the second half."

In the first half, UMass stayed in the game as the offense worked well for shots and the defense kept Brown from putting together any runs.

The Bruins took a quick lead as junior Chris Abbott (twin brother of UMass midfielder Richie) beat goalie Paul McCarty (13 saves) with 11:20 to go.

UMass tied it as freshman Al Rotatori scored his first goal of the season about three minutes later. John Keough gave Brown a 2-1 lead at the 8:35 mark, catching a pass in the air from Mick Matthews and stuffing it past McCarty.

O'Reilly hooked up with Tom Carmean with just 1:01 left in the period and UMass had it tied at two.

Matthews scored just 1:18 into the second period before Carmean, taking advantage of a man-advantage, tied it for UMass. Dan McKee and Keough (from Matthews again) gave Brown a 5-3 advantage with 7:39 left to go. Kenny Freeman fed O'Reilly with 3:34 left to put UMass within a goal. Carmean took just 27 seconds to tie the game, coming from behind the cage to beat Brown keeper Scott Lohan (14 saves).

But Brown set the tone for the second half as McKee took a feed from Matthews with just three seconds left in the half as a penalty expired to put Brown up 6-5.

The goal was the first of eight straight as Brown built a 13-5 lead. Matthews, McKee, Steve Heffernan, Tony Stedman (twice), Tom Gagnon and Walter Cataldo tallied for Brown as UMass, often a man-down because of penalties, fell apart.

Freshman Kelley Carr, part of the wave of substitutes Garber put in as UMass fell farther behind, scored UMass' only goal of the half with 4:39 left in the game.

The Gorillas, who have been outscored 38-24 in its last three games, couldn't capitalize on their six extra-man advantages, scoring only once. They enjoyed a 58-48 advantage in ground balls.

"Our primary goal is the New England title, then let what happens happen," Garber said. "We have the ability to win these games. It's very frustrating not to be playing up to our potential."

Minutemen sign Chase

University of Masssachusetts basketball coach Ron Gerlufsen signed Baltimore high school star Duane Chase to a letter-of-intent yesterday morning.

Chase, a 6-6, 215 pound forward with a 40 inch vertical leap, led Southwestern High with 21 points-per-game and 14 rebounds in earning first team all-Baltimore honors. He joins Cardinal Gibbons' David Brown as UM's other Baltimore-area signee. Brown was inked during the early signing period last year.

Chase was also recruited heavily by Atlantic 10 rivals West Virginia and George Washington as well as NCAA tournament participant Virginia Commonwealth. A football quarterback, Chase was recruited by Purdue and West Virginia for gridiron. UM football coaches said yesterday he will probably not play for UMass.

"He will give us a rebounder and will help in and around the basket," Gerlufsen said.

With the signing, UMass has two spots open. Other announcements are expected today.

Women's lax whips BC, hosts Harvard today

Using their outstanding speed, the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse amassed a 4-0 lead in the first three minutes of their game against Boston College on Tuesday to go on and win 16-7.

Today UMass, 4-0, will rely on their quickness once again as they host Harvard University, a deceptive 5-3, on the NOPE field at 3:00 p.m.

"The thing I was most pleased with was the way we started out with the four goals in the first three minutes," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "That was exactly what we wanted to do: come out hard, establish the tempo and put the other team on the defensive."

UMass got another strong performance from senior midfielder Pam Moryl as she scored a team leading six goals. Other scorers for UMass included Bunny Forbes and Becky Bekampis with three goals apiece and Emily Humiston with a pair. Ginny Armstrong and Andrea Muccini each scored one goal.

Defensively, UMass played "o.k." according to Hixon. However, Hixon would have liked to have seen fewer goals scored by B.C. Hixon attributed B.C.'s success to a lack of consistency in the Gazelle's backfield play.

UMass will need that consistency today as they face their toughest challenge of the season to-date in the Crimson. While Harvard is ranked seventh in the nation, two notches below the fifth ranked Gazelles, two of Harvard's three losses were to national powers.

The Crimson lost to number one ranked Temple University, 13-8 and dropped a 13-2 decision to the University of Maryland, the

Just a few thoughts...

It's playoff time once again, as the NHL preps for its second season. The hockey matchups have quite interesting combinations...Last year, the Bruins took the Adams Division and the Canadiens placed fourth. The Habs proceeded to dispose of the B's like a used dishrag, taking it in three straight. This season, Montreal took first and the Bruins fourth. Can the Bruins do what the Canadiens did? Probably not...The big difference could once again be goaltending. Steve Penney is maturing to be one of the best in the game, while Pete Peeters has been struggling. Doug Keans has been OK, but can he take playoff pressure?...Look for the Habs in four.

The best series should be Calgary-Winnepeg. Both had outstanding yet overlooked years and this contest should be what every hockey fan dreams of--physical. If you can name four people on each team, you're next in line for Trivial Pursuit-Hockey Style ...Sometimes an outrageous prediction has to be made. Here it is--Los Angeles over Edmonton. The Kings and the Oilers get along as well as Phil Donahue and William F. Buckley. If L.A. can put early pressure on the Edmonton defense and make them less offensive-minded, they have a shot.

Look for the Capitals to rebound from their late season swoon and take the five-time finalist Islanders, who just looked too lackadasical this year. They will face the Flyers, who will probably be the odds-on favorite to take it all...Wake me up when the Norris Division is over.

Boy, did the Red Sox break out the lumber on opening day or what? Phil Niekro's knuckler was going in every direction, including out. Meanwhile, "Oil Can" Boyd pitched strongly, getting out of jams and going seven solid innings. Boyd is listed at 155 pounds in the Red Sox press guide. The only way he could be 155 lbs. is if he was soaking wet and wearing Mr. T's jewelry...Met fans (yes, you can count me in that clique) are beaming right now. True, the pitching wasn't great, but that gets better as the weather gets warmer. Thirteen hits, including a game-winning home run by Montreal Malcontent Garry Carter looks good in the box score...I know that my mistakingly putting Wisconsin instead of Purdue last month is a terrific reason to switch over to the Cubs, but I'll be a crazy, zany guy and go with the Mets anyway.

A few final thoughts: This years Master's tournament looks to be as tough a call as any. The course is geared for a long-ball hitter, which favors Craig Stadler and Seve Ballesteros. I'm going with Calvin Peete, and watch out for Ben Crenshaw...Hagler vs. Hearns next Monday. Hey, the man's from Brockton, he'll take it in nine.

No more need be said.

Protesters fault police, enter 'not guilty' pleas

By IAN POLUMBAUM

Three University of Massachusetts students pleaded innocent yesterday in Hampshire District Court after they were arrested for protesting loans to the government of South Africa during a business conference Wednesday night.

The protesters, who were charged with disturbing the peace, asserted later yesterday that police did not give them a chance to leave the Campus Center conference peacefully or warn them that they would be arrested.

Beatrix Hoffman, 21, spent Wednesday night in the Northampton police department jail after she refused to pay a $15 court magistrate fee. Todd Little, 21, and Mark Kenen, 24, were both released after posting $15 fees.

All three were arrested by UMass police in the Campus Center, where a vice president of the Citicorp banking group was one of the speakers at the conference. According to the protesters, Citicorp has supported South Africa's apartheid system by lending that government $250 million since 1979 at less than 1 percent interest.

UMass police Chief Robert Joyce said Little did not have an invitation to get into the conference and was arrested after he became "loud and boisterous."

Little said police pushed him back into the elevator on the 10th floor along with three other protesters who were trying to enter the conference banquet there.

"When we got back down to the first floor, I started walking away," he said. "They (the police) called me over and arrested me."

Hoffman and Kenen, who said they had invitations and were admitted to the conference after the dinner was over, tried to raise an anti-apartheid banner during the Citicorp official's speech. They were pulled out of the conference by a Campus Center employee and arrested.

Hoffman said "No police witnessed the (banner) incident. They came in and handcuffed us." She said that when she asked the officers the reason for the arrests, "They said, 'We don't really know.'"

"We weren't asked to leave and they didn't give us any opportunity to leave," she added. "We had no desire to get arrested. If they had asked us to leave, we would have left."

No one from the UMass police department was available late yesterday afternoon to comment on the protesters' allegations.

Coors is voted out by BOG

By VICKI SPAGNOLI

Coors beer is on its way out in the Blue Wall after the Campus Center Board of Governors last night voted 15-6 not to withdraw its recommendation to the CC administration to stop the sale of Coors.

The board is recommending that the sale of Coors be discontinued because of reported violations of Coors workers rights, non-existence of a union in the brewery for the past eight years, and the Coors family's support of right-winged political organizations like the Heritage Foundation and the John Birch Society. BOG member and official AFL/CIO member Jim Shaw said.

"I'm not trying to do disservice to the Coors Company. What I'm concerned with is this company's unfair work ethics, and oppression" of human rights, Shaw said.

The Campus Center will stop selling Coors, William Harris, Director of CC ad ministration, said. "We're selling out the Coors inventory," he said. "Coors isn't selling very well."

Two weeks ago, the BOG voted to recommend that the CC stop selling Coors. Opposition members motioned to withdraw the recommendation and that vote was taken up last night.

The vote followed two and a half hours of questions and debate between representatives of the Adolph Coors Co.,the AFL/CIO, and the BOG.

Arthur R. Osborne, Massachusetts AFL/CIO president, said the Coors company supports everything the AFL/CIO is against. "They're against education, medicare, every decent thing there is. They're our number one enemy in the country," Osborne said.

The AFL/CIO began a national boycott against Coors beer last year because the Coors family and the Coors corporation had taken the lead in anti-worker, anti-union issues, Osborne said. The National Education Association, The National Organization for Women and the U.S. Student Association has also joined the boycott in the past year, Osborne said.

Kenneth Furman, assistant division manager of Coors beer in Kansas City, said what the AFL/CIO is suggesting is "unfounded." He said the Coors company is not anti-union. The brewery union was voted out of the Coors company in 1978 following worker contract disputes, Furman said. He said the workers have a yearly opportunity to vote a union back into the company and have chosen not to do so.

Coors employees make an average salary of $25,000 a year and Coors is considered of one of the "top affirmative action

Polish trial is government 'scenario'

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The trial of those accused of killing Polish "Solidarity" Priest Fr. Jerzy Popieluszko was not one in which the intent was to determine guilt or innocence but instead was simply a way to carry out a "scenario" prepared by the Communist government, according to a former editor of a Solidarity newspaper who spoke in Bartlett Hall, last night.

Jolant Strzelecka, former editor of Tygodnick Powszechny , a Catholic weekly, and Solidarity Weekly, said despite the appearence that the trial was one in which the truth would be determined, it was the government that determined how the court case against four members of its secret police would be handled.

"In the press reports, almost no one pointed out that the trial in Torun (Poland) did not take place before an independent judiciary but before a bench of judges who are intrinsically dependent on political authorities.

"The court in Torun was simply a part of the rules in Poland, a part of the State — another part, a more important (one) stood before it as the accused," Strzelecka told the crowd of about 30.

Strzelecka, who came to the United States a year and a half ago, said the Western press ignored the basic fundamental principle of the state controlling trials and tried to give the impression that the Prosecutor was actually trying to find Capt. Grzegorz Piotrowski, Lt. Leszek Pekala, Lt. Waldemar Chmielewski, and Col. Adam Pietruszka guilty of murder while at the same time trying to find out who gave the orders to murder one of the most popular priests in Poland.

"Trials in Poland are directed by the court. This is not a trial system where accuser and defendant set out their arguments to the best of their abilities while the judges guard the rights of both sides, evaluate them and issue a judgement.

"The Polish court decides who could be a witness and who (could) not, what evidence will be admitted...what form the trial will take," Strzelecka said.

Popieluszko was kidnapped along with another priest in Poland on Oct. 19, 1984. Ten days later his slain body was found in a river. Following an investigation, spurred by public indignation over the killing, the Polish government arrested four members of its secret police.

They were tried and convicted in February of murder.

The news of Popieluszko's abduction "shattered" Poland. The day after news spread throughout Poland of his kidnapping "the country was on the verge of an explosion," and the government had to appease the public by giving the appearance that it was fully investigating the murder, Strzelecka said.

Canada inactive on acid rain

QUEBEC (AP) — In the fight against acid rain, Canada has relied more on rhetoric than action, New Hampshire Gov. John Sununu said yesterday.

"Canada has been talking a great game. Canada has done nothing," Sununu told reporters after addressing a conference on acid rain attended by officials from 15 U.S. states and six Canadian provinces.

Sununu, a Republican, said he supports immediate action in the United States to cut back on the air pollution believed to cause acid rain, but thought it important to dispell the "legend that has been propagated" that Canada is far ahead in its clean-up program.

"Your emissions per capita are twice as large as ours and emissions per unit of industrial output three times as large," Sununu said, speaking to the Canadians in the conference room.

"We must make a choice whether we will move toward international agreement or remain stalemated through international rhetoric," he said.

The New Hampshire governor said he believed the U.S. Clean Air Act "deserves some credit" for cutting sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions in the 1970s.

He said the commitment made earlier this year by the Conservative government of Prime Minister Brian Mulroney to cut acid rain-causing emissions in half by 1994 is "long overdue" and will merely bring Canada up to U.S. performance.

"We should work together rather than merely posture," Sununu said.

In an earlier speech, Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts compared acid rain to the pesticide threat described in Rachel Carson's landmark book, "The Silent Spring."

Israel pulls back in Lebanon

NABATIYEH, Lebanon (AP) — The Israeli army withdrew yesterday, from this market town and the hostile Shiite Moslem villages around it, and hundreds of Lebanese streamed into the streets to celebrate an end to nearly three years of Israeli occupation.

"We are celebrating freedom," Mohammed Mrouweh shouted over the din of chanting neighbors and honking horns on the town's main square. "We want to tell the whole world that Lebanon belongs to the Lebanese alone."

In the pullback, Israel relinquished control over about 115 square miles of territory and between 60,000 and 70,000 people, the military command in Tel Aviv said. About 772 square miles of south Lebanon - a fifth of the country - still are occupied by Israeli soldiers, who invaded Lebanon in June 1982.

Israeli military sources who spoke on condition they not be identified said the pullback meant some Israeli border settlements would again be within range of guerrilla rockets.

The withdrawal was the second in a series that began Feb. 16, when the Israelis left the southern Lebanese port of Sidon.

Nabatiyeh became a hotbed of resistance after Oct. 16, 1983, when an Israeli patrol drove into town during a Shiite holy feast, an act that touched off a riot.

Communist leader dies at 76

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Enver Hoxha of Albania, who fashioned a tiny fortress of Stalinism in a world he viewed as hostile, died yesterday at age 76. He ruled for 42 years, longer than any other communist leader.

Hoxha died of complications resulting from heart failure that occurred on Tuesday, the official Albanian news agency ATA reported. It said in a medical bulletin that the Communist Party chief had suffered from diabetes since 1948.

A period of mourning was decreed until April 18 and Ramiz Alia, official head of state and Hoxha's likely successor, was designated chairman of the commission to arrange the funeral. It will be held Monday in Skanderbeg Square in the center of Tirana, capital of the Balkan nation.

Alia, 59, is said to have been a close associate of Hoxha since the 1960s.

Hoxha gained power in 1943 as leader of the Albanian partisans fighting Italian and German occupation troops.

Silent child frees dad of charge

NORTHAMPTON, (AP) - A 41-year-old man was found innocent yesterday of raping his 4-year-old daughter after the child was unable to answer any questions as a witness at his trial.

The child sat on the court clerk's lap on the witness stand, nodded that she promised God to tell the truth, but made no response to queries from Superior Court Judge John F. Moriarty, who had decided the girl was competent to testify.

Less than 30 minutes after abandoning efforts to elicit testimony from the girl, Moriarty recessed the court and found George E. Pitsiladis, 41, of Longmeadow, innocent of statutory rape.

The acquittal came on the second day of the trial of the plumber, who formerly lived in South Hadley.

Cheerleading squad attracts candidates despite hardship

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

It was a very cold day when the University of Massachusetts football team squared off against New Hampshire last November. The snow was swirling about Alumni Stadium and the wind was nippy.

The UMass cheerleaders were there trying to get the crowd enthused about the game. The women were wearing skirts, not sweats, in the 32 below temperature while the men of the squad were fully dressed.

Such is life for the student-run UMass cheerleading club, a group that doesn't get much respect or attention.

But, that didn't stop more than 50 women from trying out for the squad this week at Boyden Gymnasium. Final cuts for the seven women positions were made last night.

For the eight men's position available, there were no cuts. There weren't even enough men to try out, but the team is desperately looking for males to compete, team captain Lisa Fajnor said. The team has six men on the squad and is looking for at least two more.

Despite problems, including no adviser, and a lack of money for transportation to away games, the cheerleaders have a lot of fun.

"We're born cheerleaders," Kim Fastino, a sophomore polisci major joked. "It's just a lot of fun. You have to love it."

"We have some great times," Scott Young, one of the male cheerleaders recruited off-the-street, said. Young's father was a cheerleader for Michigan State.

"It takes a lot of guts to expose yourself in front of 2000 people," Young said. "It takes a lot of guts to be at the top of a pyramid. There's also a lot of trust involved. It's a lot harder than it looks."

Potential cheerleaders, each having to try out again the following year, are rated on enthusiasm, coordination, flexibility and the ability to do cart wheels, splits and other gymnastic moves.

Lack-of-respect doesn't faze the cheerleaders.

"As far as any organization goes," Young said, "we don't get a hell-of-a-lot of respect. It bothers me but I don't lose sleep over it."

Some cheerleaders did say that the football team and fans really didn't care too much about them but the basketball team and fans were different.

"The basketball team really appreciated our efforts," Fajnor said., "and we got really involved with the crowd. In football, you're just there."

Basketball coach Ron Gerlufsen wanted the cheerleaders at the game and brought them on the bus to an away game in Hartford.

Still,it is the thrill of cheering that attracts most women to the sport. "I cheered all through high school," freshman candidate Kristen Hawes said. "I like to keep up with sports and go the the games and cheer. It's a lot of fun."

In the end, the recognition would be great, but it's the chance to cheer that keeps these men and women cheering for the University of Massachusetts.

Failure to repay student loans could endanger credit

"Loans are like a disease; people ignore them until it's too late."
— Arthur Jackson, director of financial aid

By JOHN BEAN
Colllegian Correspondent

Representatives from the Financial Aid office and two local banks warned that failure to repay a student loan would make it difficult to obtain credit in the future.

The Financial Aid Office organized the speakers for the Debt Management Seminar held yesterday in the Student Union Ballroom to help educate students on how to repay loans.

Despite the wealth of information presented and its value to most UMass students, the turnout of approximately 20 students was disappointingly low, said Arthur Jackson, director of financial aid.

"We're trying to bridge the gap between students and the Financial Aid Office," Judy Morales, an Undergraduate Peer Councilor at the Financial Aid Office said. "Today was only the first stop and despite the low turnout we will make more efforts."

The seminar was opened by Jackson, who stressed the importance of giving the repayment of loans a high priority upon graduation.

"Students have a right and responsibility to know about debt management before it becomes a problem," he said.

Betsy Reardon, collections officer at the Bursars Office, who discussed the penalties for defaulting on a loan and about deferments said graduates will be granted a grace period of either six or nine months during which they will not be required to make any payments.

At some point during the grace period, Reardon said, the student will receive a letter from their lender informing them of their payment schedule. Two missed payments will constitute a default and the balance of the loan will be due immediately.

If a student faces financial hardship due to a lack of work or temporary disability a forebearance may be granted, Reardon said. If you can demonstrate that you are willing but unable to pay the loan, deferment periods of six months may be granted for up to two years where only the interest on the loan must be paid.

Therese Fournier, representative for the Massachusetts Higher Education Authority Corporation, encouraged students to stay in touch with their lender and work out any payment problems with them.

"If you find that your payments are too high or too low, get in touch with your lender during the grace period and work something out," Fournier said. "The most important thing is to keep in touch. It's your responsibility."

Darreen Wentworth, the assistant vice-president of Heritage Bank, said that banks look closely at student loans when a graduate applies for a consumer loan.

"A student loan is usually the first loan a student makes in their life," Wentworth said. "It gives the bank a good indication of the applicants payment habits. A poor payment record will hurt your chances of getting credit in the future."

Policies fight discrimination

Editor's note: This is the fifth in a five-part series on gays, lesbians and bisexuals at UMass. Today's story focuses on discrimination procedures.

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

While there is no state or federal law protecting the rights of gays, lesbians or bisexuals, this is not reflected at the University of Massachusetts which prohibits discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

In June 1984, the UMass affirmative action/non-discrimination policy statement was amended to include "discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation" among the range of unacceptable behaviors.

This policy change was in response to a report of the UMass Committee on Issues of Sexual Orientation, composed of member of the Office of Human Relations, staff and students, which called for the amendment as "an action which is timely, needed, and essential to carrying out our mission as an educational institution."

According to the report, "the primary intent of this change is to create a climate in which gay men and lesbians on campus can more fully utilize the opportunities of our University without fear of harassment."

Grant Ingle, process consultant in the Office of Human Relations and member of the committee, said "two of the five unions on campus at the time already prohibited discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation but we made it campus wide."

Lesbian, gay or bisexual students who feel they have been discriminated against because of their sexuality - in being denied a work/study position or RA position, for example - should "come into the affirmative action office and file a complaint," Ron Sinacore, Coordinator of the Office of Affirmative Action, said.

Student guilty of prostitution

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts student was found guilty yesterday on one count of prostitution while a charge of larceny under $100 was dropped in connection with an incident in the Campus Center last December.

Brian Stacey, a 27-year-old senior from Worcester, will appeal the ruling April 22.

Hampshire District Court Judge Ann Gibbons adopted the recommendation of the prosecutor, Assistant District Attorney Howard Safford, to dismiss the larceny charge and continue the prostitution, payment for sex matter with one year's probation and a $140 fine after Stacey submitted to the facts. Stacey's attorney, Meade Burrows of Northampton, had recommended that the matter be continued without a guilty finding for a year and that Stacey receive counseling.

Stacey was arrested on Dec. 16, 1984 in the Campus Center on outstanding traffic warrants and was also charged with larceny under $100 and promoting child prostitution. That charge was dropped at the request of Assistant District Attorney Rosemay Tarantino Jan. 30 and Stacey was arraigned on a charge of prostitution, payment for sex.

According to the police report of the incident, which Safford summarized, Stacey had approached a 16-year-old youth in the Campus Center and offered him payment for oral sex. The youth then fled and returned with three friends, described as "punk rockers," who chased Stacey until he called the police for an escort home. The police then located the youths, who claimed Stacey had stolen a wallet. They later admitted that charge was false, the report said.

After Stacey was arrested on the traffic warrants, he was read his rights and then told police that the chasing incident with the youths began when he "did offer money for the Campus Center performance of a sex act," Safford said.

"Mr. Stacey didn't believe he had done anything wrong because he had called the police himself," Burrows told the judge.

South Korean oppression explained

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Accusations of being a communist and distributing North Korean propaganda has been directed at a South Korean woman after she was mistakenly identified by the Collegian as a North Korean immigrant.

But Chong Yu, co- ordinator of the Third World Women's Program at the EveryWoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts and the woman who was mis-identified said the error and subsequent accusations has made her come into closer view of the political oppression in her country.

The misprint has endangered, "my work life and my personal life (because) I work for and with the community," Yu said.

"That's what the KCIA (Korean Central Intelligency Allgency) would do to bury me," Yu explained. "Often times activists and progressive people are framed as communists or agents from North Korea with either evidence needed to convict those people or none," she said. Yu added, the KCIA also creates false confession statements from those arrested who are tortured and intimidated.

If convicted, the sentence can run anywhere from 15 years to death. "It's (convicted) a well-known fact," in South Korea, Yu said.

Part of the Korean Peninsula, North and South Korea were divided by the United States after the Korean War in 1945. A capitalist economy was established in the South while a socialist economy was set up in the North. There are no diplomatic relations between North Korea and the United States due to North Korea's socialist ideologies.

"It is a strategy of political repression," Yu added the ramifications of the set-up by the KCIA also affects the family and friends who are ostracized.

Although the Korean government has no jurisdiction over Yu as an American citizen, she said the misprint could isolate her from the Korean American and Asian-American communities. In addition, if she returns to her native South Korea, "I stand a great risk of getting arrested."

South Korean's political repression has been indirectly supported by the United States through its backing of dictators. Syngman Rhee from 1948 to his overthrow in 1960; Park Chung Hee in a 1961 military coup to 1979 when he was assassinated and Chun Doo Hwan took power in 1980 through a military coup.

These changes in the political structure, as well as the American military presence and crippling economics are factors generating strong reactions. For example, in the Kwangju uprising of May 1980, the people of Kwang-ju fought martial law and Chun's coup, following Park's assasination.

Approximately 3,000 people were killed, including women and children. The media was also banned to not let the rest of the country what was going on.

Despite the fact that the Foreign Assistance Act prohibits military aid to governments violating human rights, military aid to South Korea has been increasing. In 1980, they received $131.5 million and the amount doubled in 1981 to $162.1. In 1983, South Korea received 210 million dollars.

The U.S. also has nine major bases scattered across South Korea with approximately 40,000 troops. Yu said farmers and Korean women are the ones most affected by their presence.

Because the South Korean government is pressured into buying grain from the U.S. during the South Korean harvest season, the grain pours into the country and is added to national stock, therefore lowering its price.

In light of this, she explained, the farmer's children are forced to seek factory work in the cities to make extra money. Because grain, especially rice, is South Korea's major food staple, South Koreans are not allowed to recover their expenses "let alone make any profit to the next year's harvest," Yu said.

But she said South Korean women suffer a special case of exploitation. In addition to receiving 67 cents per hour and working 59 hours a week, the longest working hours in the world, they are suppressed, fired and blacklisted when they rebel against their poor working conditions.

Thus, they are left with no other choice in order to survive and support their families but to go to the military bases. She said women are raped and forced to become prostitutes. But, other reasons for them to turn to the life include economic depression. Reports estimate that 10,000 Korean prostitutes work near the bases.

Yu said the U.S. also deployed nuclear tactical weapons in South Korea. There are 600 tactical weapons built by the United States in South Korea. In addition, F-16 jets and F-4 Phantom fighter bombers have been deployed in the Northeast Asian country, each of which are capable to deliver nuclear weapons.

The United States is building a nuclear arsenal in South Korea as a deterrent against similar armed opponents. But the U.S. is not faced by an adversary in South Korea having nuclear weapons.

North Korea, the other half of the peninsula divided in 1945 by the U.S. and the Soviet Union, has no nuclear weapons, thus making the deterrence issue a fallacy, and justifying their political objective, Yu said.

Experts say this build-up is forcing North Korea to arm itself. They've added a nuclear war may spark as a regional conflict in the form of a conventional war, which can escalate to World War III.

Because of South Korea's strategic position between the U.S.S.R., China and Japan, one of the Pentagon's objectives is to maintain its military bases guarding against so-called Soviet expansion. At the same time, they protect American multinational corporations and American interest, Yu said.

A Pentagon's five-year plan in South Korea suggest that if the U.S. went to war with the Soviet Union over Persian Gulf oil, they might attack South Korea directly to upset the Soviets. This could be the start of World War III, because America's use of nuclear weapons in South Korea would be easier than in Europe because it requires less consultation from the U.S.

Yu compared the South Korean situation to "a Central America in Asia. El Salvador in Asia," She pleaded for the American people to take the time and "demand the (U.S.) government to withdraw U.S. troops and from South Korea.

"What our people want is to be free from foreign domination so they can be able to self-determine their lives based on the need of our people and not for the interest of other country."

Paintings reflect nightmares

By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL
Collegian Staff

Today is the last opportunity the University of Massachusetts community has to see one of the most exceptional art works on campus. The graduate thesis show of paintings and sculpture by Orlando Cardona must be seen to experience the "Triste Verdad" (sad truth) he projects in his work.

The subjects of Cardona's paintings is the macabre, the ugly, the horrible. As nightmarish the themes may be, it is not a private nightmare, but a public one: the imagery of war and death.

If only it was only a bad dream and we could wake up to a world without war? If these works are in one sense imagined, then, it is an imagination haunted by reality, what the artist refers to as "Sad Truth."

Dismembered bodies, ghoulish mercenaries, civilian casualties, bombs exploding, buildings in flames, needles and weapons. All confronting the viewer, if not assaulting us, daring us to turn away, making us uncomfortable, making us think.

Although there are some technical problems with many of the artist's paintings, the larger ones are superior, showing Cardona's overwhelming power and singular talent. In fact the larger sized canvas seem to be more accomodating to Cardona's style, reminding me of Orozsco.

There are also two sculptures, one in wood, the other in bronze, which show great promise. Too little to really get a sense of where Cardona is at with sculpture, but two distinctly beautiful pieces with very strong ideas.

Remember, today is the last opportunity to see these exceptional works. the gallery is open from 11 to 4.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Judging people by color obliterates diversity

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Categorizing people on the basis of their skin color rather than their ethnicity has been a tactic used in the United States to obliterate their cultural diversity, according to panelists who spoke yesterday on black and Latino relations at the University of Massachusetts.

Cuba has eliminated racism by calling itself an "Afro-Latino" nation and embracing every citizen with no preference of color. On the other hand, Puerto Ricans tend to ignore their African descents, and in the United States they are only seen on the basis of their skin color rather than their ethnicity, the panelists said.

Sonia Nieto, professor of bilingual and multi-cultural education at UMass said categorizing people of Latin American background into a group such as Hispanic negates the differences and hides the stark realities, such as the 10 percent literacy rate in Mexico, and the fact that Cubans have the highest per capita income of Latinos in the U.S.

"You can identify with the Latino brother and sister as long as you recognize the difference," she said, adding that Puerto Ricans must re-establish their relationship with Latin Americans. She said this connection was lost with the U.S. presence in the island. American colonization of the island has also reinforced racist attitudes in Puerto Ricans, she said.

Irma McClaurin-Allen, literature professor and assistant dean in the School of Arts and Sciences, said "In Chicago, my windows were opened, yet when I looked out I saw no 'others.' There were no Asians, no Puerto Ricans, no Indians. There were only blacks and whites and the latter two did not mix."

"I now realize that in this country, we have relegated people to two simple racial designations: one is either black or white. We have taken two unreal skin colors and created an entire system for defining people," she said.

McCaurin-Allen calls this system and world-view "pathological." "The categories don't exist. 'White' people don't truly exist, except as a rationale for oppressing people. 'Black' people range in colors from white to black, although most of us are chocolate, mocha, ecru, etcetera."

But, compressing peoples of dark skin into one category exists as "a convenient vehicle to explain the existence of 'white' and people to rationalize the oppression of people of color," she said.

Led by curiosity, McClaurin-Allen traveled to Cuba in 1976 to study the relationship between blacks and Latinos. It was then that she saw that Cuba did not emphasize color, she said.

"Perhaps some solution can be taken from the Cuban example where institutional racism has been eliminated, making such categories as black and white superfluous," she said.

Nieto said although many Puerto Ricans negate their African descent, if the melting pot theory is in fact true, it has occurred more in the Caribbean than anywhere else.

"In Puerto Rice you see everything under the sun" from a person with nappy hair and freckles to one with dark skin and straight hair. "We have to come to grips with ourselves on who our (ancestors) are," she said.

Sonia Nieto and Irma McClaurin-Allen discussing black and Latino relations yesterday in the Campus Center at the University of Massachusetts.

Puerto Ricans are well aware of the "hard-hitting impact" of terms such as negro (which in Spanish means black) and use other words referring to Americans of African descent, she said.

In spite of this understanding, the terminology used is very contradictory, she said. For example, the term "negrito" (blackie) is used in a loving way as opposed to the term "blanquito" (whitie) which refers to a braggart.

McClaurin-Allen, quoting Jose Marti, Cuban patriot and poet said, "Cubans are more than white, more than mulatoes, more than black. Perhaps one day we can move to the same point that America is more than white, more than black, more than Asian, more than Latino."

But this step "calls for a recognition of and affirmation of each of these groups' right to maintain their culture and heritage."

The discussion was sponsored by the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy and Residential Education East.

Collegian should follow the lead

The struggle in this country to obtain the right to identify ourselves as we wish to be identified has been a long and difficult one for Americans of African descent. And, it continues. Others have decided and insisted upon how we are to be identified, ignoring our own wishes, imposing upon us designations that conform to a perception they have of us — most often inaccurate and insulting.

We are Americans and, sometimes regretfully, we identify ourselves as Americans. If this were the democratic and just society some claim it to be, the matter would end there. There would be no need for further, more precise designation. But, so long as this country tolerates and attempts to justify institutional, systemic racism based on color the victims of that racism have the right, even the duty to challenge and attack that racism in its every expression. The most all-embracing expression of that racism is the denial to us of our right to determine how we designate ourselves, and consequently how we should be designated by others. The designated "Black American" or "Blacks," that emerged out of the Black Power Movement of the 1960s, was a consciously deliberate choice. It asserts — because it is necessary to assert — that aspect of our ethnic identity most apparent, most maligned, and, at the same time least relevant to our identity as human beings, but made central to our existence as Americans by the very pervasiveness of racism based on color. Surely, such a particularization makes "Black" used in this sense a proper noun rather than an adjective.

Language is a living, ever changing phenomenon; not a static absolute imposed by an AP Style Book. I don't expect the AP to understand the dynamics of the term Black American. But the editor of the Black Affairs page understands those dynamics and is justified in insisting on her right to capitalize Black American. This is, after all, the choice of most Black Americans. The Collegian could make a major positive contribution to the struggle against racism by following her lead.

Baird: 'Stained with the blood of children'

Bill Baird is coming to the University of Massachusetts Tuesday, oh joy. Is there a man alive who better symbolizes the abortion business? I think not.

Baird has made untold millions of dollars destroying unwanted children. However, Baird may best be remembered for filing a suit in court that would have prevented Pope John Paul II from celebrating Mass on the Boston Common. Whether he did it because he could not get tickets himself, or because he disagreed with His Holiness is not the point. The point is that he was willing to deny John Paul a right in the United States that has been granted in both Poland and Nicaragua.

When he does speak, Baird will play up the "personal freedom" side of the abortion issues. This is not unlike the pimp who preaches "free enterprise;" the Mafia which preaches "justice;" or the slave owner who preaches "states rights."

During the Lincoln-Douglas debates the issue of slavery came up often. This being two years before the Civil War. On slavery Douglas expressed a view echoed by his fellow Democrats today. While he himself was opposed to slavery, he felt that he did not have the right to decide something that should be left to the individual states.

Lincoln instead asked Douglas and the nation: Do you know the difference between right and wrong? Do you care?

The Bairds of this world have always been with us. They will never go away. But why must we bring this butcher to UMass? Is this civility? Baird's hands are stained with the blood of children, and his defense of freedom mocks us all.

Business calls the shots

This is the second part of a two-part series.

Sal Assad

All the major foreign interventions committed by the United States in the 20th century happened under Democratic presidents such as in WWI, WWII, the Korean War, the Vietnam War and the invasion of the Dominican Republic.

Perhaps our great Democratic professors, with their peculiar intellectual sterility will claim: Those Democrats took those steps because "it was the popular thing to do."

What a delightful and convenient way to understand history. According to this warped liberal logic, 5.5 million Jews were murdered in Germany simply because it was popular to do so. The U.S. carpet-bombed Vietnam into the stone age because it was the "popular thing to do."

All crimes could be justified in this manner. Unfortunately, this shallow line of thinking fails to really explain anything. Although I must say, our liberal professors will not lose any sleep over this. Their role is not to understand the crimes of the establishment but to justify them and to eagerly look for the "lesser evil" to thank God that "at least we are not Communists."

At the root of all this gibberish is the widely-held myth that America is a democracy. The latter is a most vivid example of Orwellian Doublethink. However, today the rules of the game are changing. The liberals who have been content with the status quo in the last 50 years (called the era of the New Deal) are becoming more and more outdated. Not because "people are getting smarter and finding better solutions," as the Republican idiots and their "thinkers" would have us believe, but because the economic crisis has been getting out of hand since the early 1970s. While 4 percent unemployment was considered outrageously high in the '40s, '50s and '60s, now the politicians of both parties ramble upon Reagan's "success" in bringing unemployment down to 7.5 percent. Today in the business press, there is talk about an imminent slump which will be far worse because of the highest government deficit in history.

Liberalism has become anachronistic and outdated for one simple reason: Big Business does not see liberalism as a viable means of ruling our society. Why? Because liberalism belonged to the time when business could guarantee the working people an ever-increasing standard of living. Today, faced with acute economic crises, big business and its allies in the White House are trying hard to keep their high profit margin. They cut corporate taxes, cut social programs and wage a war against labor and the poor. That's precisely why under Reagan, the rich are getting richer and the poor poorer. To insure this continues, our government is becoming more authoritarian. The Reagan years have brought the rise of the most reactionary and backward elements in this society.

Reaganism is the reactionary nostalgia of Big Business to go back to the "Good Old Days." When corporate owners and dynasties made huge profits. To this end, they seem to be willing to sacrifice all on the altar of Golden Calf. They are certainly most generous in sacrificing social programs originally meant to protect the poor, workers' wages, and 19 year-old kids as gun power for their expansionist, imperialist plans (as in the case of Lebanon).

Whether they will be able to carry out their vicious plans, we do not know yet. What we definitely do know is that neither the New Right nor the liberals can go on fooling all of the people all of the time (Amen).

Of Coors and conspiracy

Stephen C. Erickson

After a long hard day yesterday, I decided to relax with a beer at the TOC. Nestled in my usual spot, I couldn't help but notice three well dressed and distinguished looking gentlemen engaged in conversation at the table next to mine. I immediately recognized one of them as Chancellor Joe Duffey. I pricked up my ears hopeful of listening in on what proved to be an amazing exchange.

"To our mutual health and success" said a familiar looking man with a strange accent sitting next to Duffey, as he raised what appeared to be a Bloody Mary in a toast. Studying his face, I realized that I had seen this man on Nightline a few weeks ago when they did their South Africa special. He was none other than South African Minister Botha. Now I was really interested, so I paid close attention.

Joe Duffey, who was drinking a Pink Lady, raised his glass, along with the third fellow whose back was to me and who had a can of Budweiser in his hand. This gentleman kept hiding his can under the table whenever the waitress walked by. I heard him explain that he always brought his own instead of being served by a leftist unionized establishment. "Besides," he said, "this way I can keep the nickle on the deposit and contribute it to the John Birch Society." Botha's eyes gleamed. It occurred to me that this third gentleman was none other than Adolph Coors, oppressor of the masses, whose beer was now being sold on campus. I knew then and there that I was witnessing big stuff.

"We'll start getting real money," Duffey chirped in, "when my University Resource Fee goes through." Botha and Coors laughed menacingly. "With more cash we can bribe congressmen into voting against divestment in South Africa," Duffey continued.

"Not to mention fund the Heritage Foundation, the American Nazi Party, and the UMass Republican Club" added Coors with a note of distinct pleasure.

Looking out from high atop the Campus Center, the South African scanned the campus grounds, Botha said "I think the New Africa House and the Malcolm X Center will make fine homelands for your third world community, Chancellor."

"Not only that," replied Duffey, "but I'm going to establish a third homeland in the SCERA office while all of the full time paid staff are over protesting at Whitmore."

"Good thinking," said Botha. "A pass system might be helpful when carding the students for alcohol in their dorms. Of course if they were drinking Coors we might let it slide," suggested Botha smiling at Adolph Coors.

Duffey agreed the idea had merit.

Coors then explained that he was planning to put up sexist beer posters all over campus and provide enough funds from his profits to make sure the ERA never passed.

Joe Duffey chuckled at the thought of finally getting even with his wife, Geraldine Ferarro, and all of those uppity feminists. "To resource fees, apartheid, and Coors beer," the UMass Chancellor toasted. They all drank eagerly.

Not bothering to finish my drink, I got up astounded, headed for the elevators and straight down to the Collegian office to write this column. I think the student body should know of the reality of the situation that confronts us. The Chancellor of our university, the government of South Africa, and Coors, Inc. are all in league together to oppress UMass students. Thank goodness our student government is already circulating fliers to make us aware of this fact. At least I know if there is anyone capable of fighting this menace, it is our student government.

The price of boredom

David McNair

"Reading the dictionary is boring, Hugh," I said.

"Yes, but wouldn't it be wonderful to know the meaning of every word in it?" Hugh grinned.

My assumption and Hugh's question raise a question — Is boredom the price you pay for knowledge? Hugh says you force yourself to listen and think about a boring subject to make your mind stronger. It's like taking your brain to the gym and making it do bench presses; no pain, no gain, says Hugh.

Hugh also says boredom arises out of ignorance, and that the reason you become bored with a subject is because you are stupid and know nothing about it. Hugh says it is a general belief that people who are always bored have not imagination and no intelligence. Hugh has sat through many long lectures and read many long books, believing the more bored he was the more he was learning. Like the brain presses, Hugh says, you keep increasing the weight.

For Hugh, learning is a noble and continuous act of suffering. Any joy, satisfaction, or interest in learning seems to him a lapse in intellectual gain. He always keeps some unanswerable question at hand, positioning it like a hot poker against his butt to keep himself lurching forward into the unknown.

I have great respect for Hugh. He represents that academic standard beyond reach; a standard that never allows a student to presume he or she knows anything, and keeps every professor in a commanding position. Hugh is an important force behind the academic-economic balance: the one that keeps knowledge in demand yet slightly out of reach. You see, Hugh never presumes there could be something that he could not be taught.

I have tried to follow Hugh's example of subordination, subjecting myself to the classroom grind. But one thing disturbed all this, threw the entire balance out of whack — I began to like school. There was a joy involved. I become excited writing sentences that made sense, thrilled writing paragraphs that often conveyed an idea, and amazed that books had something to do with life. In effect, I realized learning was something other than a burden, and that it had a direct connection with my growth as a human being. But this revelation also made me lazy. I no longer had patience with the things that bored me, and as Hugh's virtue shone above I began to feel guilty. There was no pain so how could there be gain? How could I be learning if I was enjoying it?

After a discussion with Hugh a solution was found. Every assignment I was given — creative, critical, research — I was to try to answer, directly or indirectly, this question: What is the meaning of the universe? This, Hugh said, would keep me miserable and therefore satisfied that my efforts were worthwhile.

I am now growing more and more bored with my classes (and also with a large portion of my life) but am confident that Hugh would approve.

David McNair is a Collegian Correspondent.

Celebration needs to be remembered

A recent Collegian article may have given the impression that the lenten season is not of importance to Orthodox Christians. Faculty, in particular, should note that in order to fulfill their Holy Week obligations, Orthodox students must travel varying distances (according to their liturgical language) on consecutive evenings. The Orthodox celebration of Easter falls on April 14 this year.

A mad beauty is born

By ANNE CHENEY
Collegian Correspondent

A Fine Line, presented on Friday April 5, at Hampshire College Dance Studio, was an evening of dance choreographed by Rebecca R. Ver Nooy. All three dances -- Personal Boundaries, Introspection, Life of Way A -- were about ways a woman (presumably Ver Nooy) relates to her environment emotionally.

Personal Boundaries, set to music by Meredith Monk and Dr. Hajime Murooka, uses five women to show the people we are to others and the very different people we are to ourselves. The first half of the work has the dancers frantically running around, with their movement relating to each other only by chance. The second half takes place at a social get-together. The women are sitting around gossiping, when the voices are turned off and the central character, Ver Nooy, begins a somber dance that contrasts strikingly with the happy chatter of moments before. The sound returns, and all are talking away as before. Again the sound stops, and Ver Nooy returns to her own world. Finally, all the dancers enter into that other world, but they no longer seem to see each other, and convey the mood of an episode of The Twilight Zone.

Introspection, danced by Ver Nooy and Conley Dixon, is set to a poem of the same name by Nikki Giovanni with sound by Charles Nieland. The poem is about a lonely, frustrated woman who has cut herself off from the world. Dixon enacts the piece (example: 'Stacking dishes,' she mimes) while Ver Nooy shows the feelings behind the words (example: frustration with life). One ends with a deeper understanding of the poem: that its language is as monotonous as the life it describes, trapped in a circle of its own making.

Life of Way A is danced by Ver Nooy under the alias 'Methilda VN.' This shows a totally new side of Ver Nooy, the other side to the coin if your will. After the baggy-clothed, modern-dancing introvertedness of the first two dances, VN. is now wearing revealing ballet clothes, and she frolics about in the most extroverted of ways. She is quick to show all her imperfections, and is funny and endearing because of this openness.

The evening showed both sides of the fine line between genius and insanity: The dances o e about insanity, and the choreography is pure genius.

Rossini's "The Barber of Seville" will be performed by the Texas Opera Theater at 8 p.m. on Wednesday at the Fine Arts Center.

An early look at summer ...

Now that all the campus animals are in heat, and we're cruising down to spring, it might be a good idea to take a quick look at what's in store for the summer season.

On top of any kid's list for this summer should be Return to Oz and The Black Cauldron, two productions from Disney studios. The first is a sequel to Wizard of Oz, which is incidentally showing this weekend at the Mt. Farm Theatres, and the second is a full-length animated feature in the tradition of the golden days of the Disney Empire.

Steven Spielberg and summer are almost synonymous. The enfant celebre of Hollywood produces two fantasies, Back to the Future, a time travel tale with Eric Stoltz of Mask fame, and Goonies, another creature feature about big giant gummy bears. (kidding, kidding)

My favorite pick of the season is The Kiss of the Spider Woman. Not only does the name sound extremely appealing, but the stars, William Hurt and Sonia Braga are a sure guarantee for the success of this prison tale. Brewster's Millions, a Richard Pryor and John Candy film directed by Walter Hill could be the Beverly Hills Cop of the summer. Also Sting and Jennifer Beals will be finally doing their thing in The Bride, (of Frankenstein) another bizarre flick to look forward to on a hot summer afternoon.

Drew Barrymore climbs a tree in Cat's Eye, premiering today at Mt. Farm Theater.

Like brother, like brother. Bill Murray's brother stars in another senseless comedy; Moving Violations.

Thank God Ronnie Howard of Andy Griffith Show and Happy Days fame grew up to be a fine director. His next project after Splash, Cocoon is all set for an early summer release. Maureen Stapleton, Steve Guttenberg, and Jessica Tandy are some of the dandy stars of this film which is an account of a close encounter between a group of elderly humans and friendly aliens, kind of an E.T. a la Golden Pond.

Finally two old favorites of the screen, Clint Eastwood and Roger Moore will be starring in their own films this season. Clint, under his own direction finished Pale Rider, a tough tale of the California gold rush. The latest James Bond adventure, A View to a Kill is the fourteenth in the series and will also star Christopher Walken and Grace Jones as the villains. If these two movies don't entertain you, you're better off watching the boys of summer. We'll look at the rest of the summer material next week. This week, however, there are a lot of great films showing in the area, so here we go...

Weekend winners: I am proud to announce to arrival of the leading mistress of the music scene to the Happy Valley. Yes, you can finally see Madonna in the critically acclaimed Desperately Seeking Susan. We're talking super material girl material. No, really Rosanna Arquette is also supposed to be great in this story of mistaken identity in plastic New York. So, grab your material loved one and have a real materialistic night out at the Mt. Farm Theatre.

Also at the Mall, premiers Cat's Eye, a film written by our own UMass distinguished visitor Stephen King. Too bad that monster Drew Barrymore stars. Otherwise it could be a good time for a good Kingly scare.

The list of weekend best continues with a sneak preview of Blood Simple tonight and tomorrow night at the Pleasant Street Theatre. I saw this a couple of months ago, and boy is this a dark thriller. When it was released across the country, critics compared it to some of the Hitchcock classics.

LadyHawke, the medieval fantasy I talked about a month ago is finally released and will be playing at the Hampshire Mall. Matthew Broderick is dynamite in this flick. Nastassja Kinski, our own Cinemascoop regular, still shines on in Paris, Texas at the Academy of Music in Northampton.

Finally, if you're in school and still haven't seen Harold and Maude and King of Hearts, rush to the Amherst Cinema and catch these timeless capsules of idealism. Which reminds me, according to Doctor Helen Caldicott, thanks to probability, nuclear nasties and computer error, we might only have up to ten years to enjoy ourselves. If I were you, I would see as many classics as possible.

Killer Question: A glossy picture of Vanity will be awarded to the clever colleague who can tell me the name of the group who sings about one of the actresses in Desperately Seeking Susan. Thus ends another edition of Cinemascoop.

$4,700 stolen from store

The Southwest Munchy's store was closed yesterday after more than $4,700 was reported stolen from a safe in Hampden Dining Commons early Wednesday morning, University of Massachusetts police said.

The money was from sales in the Munchy's store. Police said there was no sign of forced entry into the safe. The list of suspects who have access to the safe has been narrowed down and an arrest will be made soon, police said.

In other police news:

- A smoldering fire was put out Wednesday morning in a University dairy farm barn in South Deerfield. A passing motorist reported smoke coming from the back of the barn to South Deerfield police.

Police said the fire was started by the careless discharge of smoking materials. The fire did not cause any structural damage to the barn.

In Amherst, six Hampshire Gazette newspaper boxes on Southeast Street were destroyed Wednesday night. Four of them set ablaze, Amherst Police said. There are no suspects.

- Two television sets were reported stolen Wednesday, one from Alpha Delta Psi fraternity, another from a private residence on West Street. Police said the burglar gained entry through a basement door in the home and made off with a Toshiba television valued at $1000.

Lesbian rights probed

As part of the University's Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week, the Everywomen's Center's Resource and Referral Program sponsored a workshop on the legal rights of lesbians in the Campus Center last night.

Springfield attorney Donna Mages said that legal rights for lesbians is "a very large topic since law touches every aspect of lesbians' lives." The laws differ on the federal, state and local levels, she said.

Mages also talked about military law, calling it "a totally separate institution of law," where one has "absolutely no right" to be a practicing homosexual.

Mages said that "law is not a leader of social change. Law responds to social change, often very slowly. Since the gay rights movement began in about 1970, the law has had little time to change in 15 years."

Mages said that being gay is a crime in Massachusetts and that co-habitating couples could "conceivably" use the right to privacy as a defense in court, but this premise could only be used when one has been charged with homosexuality as a "criminal act."

She also said that in this state a minor cannot be removed from his or her mother just because the mother is a lesbian. Mages also cited the Massachusetts equal rights amendment as a "tool that has not been used often enough by lesbians and gay men."

Robin Moulds of the Everywomen's Center said the workshop was meant to "provide a chance for women to talk to a lawyer that is sensitive to the legal problems facing lebians."

hirers," Furman said. Minority workers make up 20 percent of the brewery workers, he said.

Representatives of the company distributing Coors beer to UMass, Burke's Beverage,of Chicopee, were at the meeting to back Coors. Thomas Burke, Sr., owner of Burke's Beverage said the company will fold if UMass stops selling Coors beer and 40 union employees will lose their jobs.

Albert Tardy, President of the local Teamsters Union, representing Burke's Beverage employees, said "I'm not trying to defend Coors in western Mass."

"I'm totally in support of the board's decision,"BOG treasurer Fran Hegeler said. Hegeler suggested organizing a forum that would educate the student body on the issues involved in their decision to recommend the discontinued sales of Coors on campus. "I think that all of us (the board) are going to have to take responsibility for this decision, by informing the students," Hegeler said.

"We'll investigate it at every level," he said, adding that if violations were found the sanctions imposed would "depend a lot on the situation."

He said that "measures could be taken up to and including firing a supervisor," but most sanctions operated around the concept of what it takes to make the victim "whole again," he said.

A student who wishes to bring a complaint against another student, may do so under section 2B1 of the student code of conduct, said Charmaine Wijeyesinghe, judicial liaison for the Dean of Students Office.

Under this section, a special note on respecting the rights of others in an academic community prohibits harassment, intimidation, or denying another person's right to equal treatment on the basis of "sexual preference."

Harassment is taken to include "verbal and/or written invasion or violation of an individual's rights through graffiti, obscene telephone calls or any other means."

According to Wijeyesinghe, in student-student complaints informal resolution is first sought either through the victim's residence director, if the student lives on campus, or through the Dean of Students Office.

In this "pre-hearing" the student accused of harassment is presented with the allegations and if found guilty will be subjected to such sanctions as "educational sessions on gay and lesbian issues or made to arrange a homophobia/heterosexism workshop on their floor," said Wijeyesinghe.

If the sanctions are refused or the charge is contested, the student has a right to a closed hearing before the Student Judicial Board. The Board's decision may be appealed either to the Residential Appeals Board of the University Discipline Board.

According to Wijeyesinghe, "there have been zero cases of harassment because a student has been gay or lesbian," for the period of Fall 1983/Spring 1984, but this "inaccurately" reflects the true incidence, she said.

She commented that the number of reported incidents was low because many cases are resolved informally and because gay and lesbian students often feel there are no channels for them to get their problems addressed.

In addition, she remarked that students harasseed on the basis of their sexuality are often intimidated from coming forward because they may not be "out."

Because he was originally charged with promoting child prostitution, which carries a minimum three-year state prison sentence, the incident's media play implied there was "some kind of child prostitution ring at UMass," and Stacey "has been punished to a greater extent than a conviction could ever punish him," Burrows said.

Safford called the verdict "reasonable" and said the Commonwealth was not asking for a jail sentence, which he said could have been requested because Stacey has a prior criminal record for trespassing and receiving stolen property. In court, however, Burrows said the trespassing charges were a result of a landlord/tenant dispute and the stolen property charge resulted from property Stacey bought from a cab driver that turned out to be stolen.

Stacey said, "I would have been better off to have just stood there and let four kids beat me up, steal my money or what not than go through what I've been through" in the case.

Fair will present global flavor

A taste of about 30 countries can be sampled tomorrow when the International Students Organization presents its annual fair.

With the help of the Foreign Students Office, which offered $300 of the $1,500 required to fund the fair, food samples, crafts, clothing and customs can be experienced from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Each country involved in the fair will feature its native flag on the ceiling and a few of the international students will perform music and dance that is practiced in their native land.

"Thirty countries are signed up to be represented so far. Both undergraduates and graduate students on campus will represent the major areas of the world and share their culture by setting up booths arranged in the Campus Center auditorium," said Harald Prytz, a member of the ISO and coordinator of the fair.

Among the nationalities to be included are Scandanavians, Pakistani, Africans, Arabians, Spanish, Asians, Native Americans and Armenians. The Armenians will present belly dancers. Arabia wil be represented by a male dancer. A major attraction of the fair will be a fashion show which will be put on by people representing Pakistan.

Members of the ISO have carefully monitored the news to try and prevent any scandal between countries present at the fair. The fair's policy is that no religious or policial displays will be allowed or tolerated.

After the fair there will be a dance at 9 p.m. featuring rack-a-disc entertainment and a cash bar. Admission for the dance is $2.00.

Parents to visit UM programs

By NANCY A. BUKAR
Collegian Staff

The parents of Dean's List students will receive some hands-on experience in fields ranging from floral culture to robotics when they venture to the University of Massachusetts tomorrow and Sunday to take part in Parents Weekend.

About 500 parents paid a $10 registration fee and another $10 to $13 for a banquet and to participate in other activities that will include a broad range of workshops and tours that will give them a chance to see what it's like to be a student.

"I wanted to do something different," Valerie Falk, assistant director of alumni affairs and coordinator of the event, said as compared to last semester's Parents Weekend that entailed offering parents the classroom and lecture-type experience.

Falk said most of the 20 workshops have been organized into small groups of about 10 parents so that they "could see special things and talk to each other and interact with professors."

WE'LL PAY BACK YOUR LOAN, BUT THERE'S A HITCH.

You'll like it, though.

Because every year you serve with us, we reduce your college debt by one-third or $1,500, whichever is greater. Greater still, after three years your loan's repaid in full.

You'll also like the satisfaction and pride you'll feel as you learn a valuable skill. One you use to serve yourself as well as your country.

It's all a part of the Loan Repayment Program. To qualify, you ust have taken out a National Direct, Guaranteed or Federally Insured Student Loan after October 1, 1975. And your loan can't be in default.

So if you'd like Uncle Sam to pay off your college loan, pay your local Army Recruiter a visit today. Or call.

Softball splits doubleheader with Penn State

Errors hurt Minutewomen

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team won its third straight Atlantic 10 conference ball game, holding off Penn State 3-1 in the opening game of yesterday's doubleheader at NOPE.

But it could have been two wins. UMass played well enough, but errors in the second game proved to be the Minutewomen's undoing as the Nittany Lions won the second game, 3-0 to earn a split.

The split left UMass still under .500 with an 11-12-1 slate and a 4-3 A-10 record that makes this weekend's doubleheaders at St. Joseph's tomorrow and at Temple on Sunday crucial to UMass A-10 playoff chances.

"We are a better team than a split," coach Elaine Sortino said. "I really believe that. It's just a matter of time with us--but time is moving on."

Hurler Lynn Stockley, who had lost the five previous games in which the opposition scored a run, gave up eight hits but worked herself out of jams to up her record to 6-5.

Freshman Lisa Rever looked good but fell victim to a defense made a few crucial mistakes.

In the opener, UMass took a quick 1-0 lead on Martha Jamieson's RBI single, knocking in co-captain Beth Talbott. The Minutewomen increased the lead to 3-0 in the second inning on Talbott's two RBI double that brought Debbie Cole (some great grabs at third) all the way from first and Chris Ciepela home.

Penn State, meanwhile, left nine runners on base, five in scoring position. The Lions, 17-7, had eight hits.

UMass' bats fell silent after that and UMass got only one more hit in the opener (a single by Jamieson) and just three scattered hits in the nightcap.

In the second game, Penn State grabbbed a 1-0 second inning lead on a sacrifice fly but the runner got on base due an Alisa Fila error.

It remained 1-0 until the seventh when PSU got two more runs on a double steal where Carol Frattaroli dropped the ball and on a play where Talbott fired the ball to third to pick off the runner and no one covered the bay. The ball sailed into left field.

It was a shame because these same players made outstanding grabs earlier. Fila made several tough stops, Frattaroli made a diving catch in foul territory and Talbott gunned down a runner.

It just makes the job tougher this weekend where Sortino said UMass needs all four games to stay in the A-10 race. After this weekend, UMass has one A-10 game left with Rhode Island.

Relief is in sight : Lax should regain winning touch against BC

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, mired in a three-game losing streak, finally catches a break in its schedule on Saturday when it hosts Boston College at Boyden Field.

The Gorillas, 1-3, were once ranked 13th in the nation after opening the season with an overtime victory over Delaware, but have since slumped with losses to Cornell, Rutgers and Brown.

Boston College is one of lesser teams in New England with a 2-5 record. The Gorillas administered a 20-4 beating to the Eagles last season.

"They aren't the best team on our schedule, but they're the most-improved team in New England," UMass coach Dick Garber said. "Their offense has improved and they've been scoring a lot of goals."

UMass will be looking to re-establish its offense after Wednesday's 13-6 loss to Brown during which the Gorillas managed only one second half goal. Sophomore Tom Carmean (eight goals, nine assists) is UM's leading scorer. Greg Fisk (four goals, two assists) and Karl Hatton (three goals, three assists) have also had good moments, but overall the Gorillas haven't put together a strong offensive performance since the Delaware game.

Defensively, UMass has been getting consistent play from close defensemen Tom Aldrich and Mark Stratton, but the defensive midfielders have been giving opponents unmolested shots from the perimeter. Freshman goalie Paul McCarty has played well in two games for injured (separated shoulder) starter Gerry Moreau. Garber said Moreau could be back for the Eagles.

Boston College is led by attackman Billy Gahan and has abandoned its once undisciplined style of offense.

On Monday, it will be father and son confrontation in New Hampshire when the Gorillas take on the Ted Garber coached Wildcats in Durham.

UMass beat UNH 12-6 last season. The Wildcats are led by junior attackman Tom Snow.

"If we win these two games, we'll be right back in things and be able to build our record back up," Garber said. "It's important for us to win these two and I hope we'll go out there and put out some kind of effort."

GORILLA GRUMBLINGS: Moreau is the only Gorilla that is on the injured list. Garber said his condition was on a day-to-day basis. Saturday is the last game in a five-game homestand. UMass goes on the road for five before returning home to face Dartmouth May 1.

Track team preps for UMass relays

The biggest and most competitive track meet of the year to be held at the University of Massachusetts will be the UMass Relays, tomorrow, running from 10:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the Derby Track.

The meet is being sponsored by the UMass men's and women's track team and will include 47 events, mostly on the track. Teams from all over the East Coast and New England have been invited to the meet.

Top UMass athletes to watch will include Rawley Crichlon in the 100 and 200 meter runs and Wayne Levy in the long distance events. Ferdie Adoboe will be contender for Ken O'Brien's squad in the triple jump and long jump.

Kalekeni Banda's women's squad is led by Kayla Morrison, Leah Loftis, Sue Goldstein and Barbara Cullinan. Banda hasn't announced what events the women will run in. The women lost their season opener to Springfield on Tuesday.

Baseball goes on a Bear hunt

Knopf, Allard to battle NCAA powerhouse

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

Collegian photo by Andy Reller

UMass righthander Jim Knopf puts his 2-1 record on the line in the first game of a doubleheader against Maine, New England's top-ranked team today at 2 p.m. at Lorden Field.

Call it the Maine Mystique.

In Orono, Maine, there is a phenomenon unique in Eastern collegiate athletic circles: The hottest sports attraction on campus is the baseball team.

And for good reason. For four consecutive seasons coach John Winkin has directed his University of Maine Black Bears to the College World Series in Omaha, Nebraska. Three weeks ago, in a game televised by ESPN, Maine stunned the then number one ranked University of Miami, 3-2, on the Hurricanes home field in Coral Gables, Florida.

If you think that was only a fluke, be reminded that last year the Black Bears swept Miami in a doubleheader at Orono.

Today, Maine invades Earl Lorden Field to take on the University of Massachusetts in a doubleheader starting at 1 p.m. Maine features six .300 hitters, lead by Rick Bernando (.372, four home runs, 25 runs batted in), Dan Kain (.370) and Billy McInnis (.327, 25 RBI).

"Scholarships are the difference for them," UMass coach Dick Bergquist said after yesterday's 10-7 victory over AIC. "They also have the great pitching depth to go along with it. They also have a very good coach and very supportive fans. Maine simply has a good program, because they do a good job."

That pitching depth will be tested against a UMass squad that banged out 12 hits, including four home runs, in the triumph over the Yellow Jackets. First baseman Jeff Cimini (.375, 3 HR, 15 RBI) had two of the homers. Designated hitter Todd Comeau (.380, 3 HR, 21 RBI) also smacked a homer, but was forced to leave yesterday's game in the seventh inning after suffering a muscle pull and is questionable for today's games.

Mike Ballou (2-3, 6.97 earned run average) will hurl the opener for Maine with Steve Loubier (3-0, 6.37) scheduled to pitch the nightcap. Jim Knopf (2-1, 1.16 ERA) is penciled in to pitch the opener for UMass. However, Knopf has lost nine pounds this week due to the flu and may not be ready. If he isn't, freshman Matt Sheran (2-0, 1.50) will get the call. Sophomore lefty Steve Allard (1-1, 5.40) will take the mound for the second game.

The Black Bears' reputation on the national college baseball scene has reached such a degree that the program was featured in a USA Today cover story. Winkin routinely receives letters of inquiry about UMaine from as far away as California.

However, Winkin has not achieved parity with the big boys of college baseball by traveling the nation trying to convince high school phenoms to spend four years in Northern Maine. Instead, he concentrates on recruiting in-state players. Thus, nearly three-quarters of the roster is Maine born and bred. Billy Swift, probably the greatest player ever to play for Maine, and a member of the 1984 Olympic team is from Waterville.

Rebounding from a 3-6 trip to Florida, UMass is 7-2 since coming north. They are in first place in the Atlantic 10 with a 5-1 record. The Minutemen have received key contributions from several freshman, including Sheran, Steve Allen, and Darrin O'Connor and good hitting from veteran players.

"We've been waiting for Maine all year," said Cimini. "If we could beat Maine twice that would make our season."

On Monday, the Minutemen host the University of Vermont at home for a doubleheader at 1 p.m.

UMass vs. Maine

Where: Lorden Field, 2 p.m.
Starting Pitchers: Game 1: UM: Jim Knopf (2-1, 1.16) vs. Mike Ballou (2-3, 6.97) Game 2: UM Steve Allard (1-1, 5.40) vs. Steve Loubier (3-0, 6.37)

Women's lax stakes its claim, 6-3

Seventh-ranked Harvard beaten by undefeated Gazelles, Moryl stars

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

Facing their toughest challenge to-date, the fifth-ranked University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team used a balanced offensive attack and some strong defense to defeat Harvard University 6-3 yesterday at NOPE field.

"It was a great team effort," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "We played super at both ends of the field. I was very pleased."

Statistically, the contest was close with the Gazelles, 5-0, out shooting Harvard, 5-4, 27-23. The seventh ranked Crimson's All-American goal keeper Krickitt Johnson saved eleven shots while UMass' keeper Debbie DeJesus stopped nine attempts, several coming on one-on-one situations. But it was a tough team effort that made the difference.

"We played a good, steady game," Hixon said. "We got some good performances in the goal and the midfield positions. Everyone did the jobs they were supposed to. I would say that we were very disciplined going both ways."

Harvard posed the first real scoring threat of the game but Bambi Taylor failed to capitalize on a penalty shot with 18:30 to go in the first half. Minutes later Harvard had another chance but UMass defender Andrea Muccini broke up a two-on-one situation.

"We are a very young team with freshmen on the front line so we're prone to mistakes like those," Harvard coach Carole Kleinfelder said of the missed scoring opportunities.

UMass broke up the deadlock at 11:14 when Bunny Forbes bounced a shot past Johnson on a penalty shot opportunity. UMass won the ensuing face off and brought the ball right back at Johnson. Gazelle freshman forward Ginny Armstrong was fouled on a drive and took the penalty shot, putting the ball in the upper right corner of the goal for a 2-0 advantage.

Harvard finally got on the board at 5:04 when midfielder Jennifer Greeley scored after a strong drive to the net through several UMass defenders. Harvard put another shot into the net with a minute to play but an offensive penalty negated the effort.

In the second half, it took UMass fewer than two minutes to increase its lead. As Forbes worked the ball around the Harvard goal she spotted Moryl cutting in front of the net and passed to the All-American who rifled the ball past Johnson.

Again the Crimson came right back to challenge the Gazelle defense. Harvard worked their offense well, creating a one-on-one situation against DeJesus but the UMass' keeper came out of the net to ruin yet another Harvard attempt.

With 19:00 left, Harvard managed to make it a 3-2 game as Harvard's leading scorer Lisa Black drove the net, spun around a UMass defender and shoveled in a shot. After the Black score, Harvard entered a period of stagnation which UMass took advantage of.

Moryl won the following face off, drove from the half field mark deep into Harvard territory, and dished the ball to a waiting Becky Bekampis who beat a defender one-on-one to make the score 4-2.

One minute later, Moryl again used her exceptional speed to leave a faltering Harvard midfield behind as she drove half the field to team up with Bekampis and Armstrong in a three-on-two situation. Moryl then passed the ball to Armstrong who spun away from one defender and scored on a backhand shovel shot.

Liz Schueler scored UMass' final goal with ten minutes to go in the contest to put the Gazelles up 6-2. From then on the UMass defense held tough, repelling several Harvard challenges. The Crimson got their final goal with a minute to play on a Liz Faecher penalty shot.

"Match-ups are the key," Hixon said. "We were just matching our strengths against theirs and trying to have every body play their best game.

"This win is a morale booster: it makes us want to be better. It makes us want to improve and makes us eager to see what we can accomplish. We beat a very skilled team with team work at both ends of the field."

"This was our first real test and we controlled the game," Moryl said. "I think it shows future promise. UMass will have to be reckoned with on the national level. Others are going to have to look out. We're not push-overs, we'll get some more respect."

Minutemen step on pesky Yellow Jackets, 10-7

Cimini leads UMass homer barrage, Kostro, Subocz combine for victory

By JOHN NOLAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team took advantage of mediocre pitching and a strong wind blowing from behind home plate to club American International College 10-7 yesterday at Lorden Field.

UMass' designated hitter Jeff Cimini led the attack with two home runs and a double to drive in three runs while leadoff batter Bruce Kingman and first baseman Todd Comeau each added one.

The Minutemen spent much of the day congratulating runners at the plate and while the offensive production was well received, UMass head coach Dick Bergquist wasn't happy with his team's defensive performance.

"I wasn't entirely pleased with our performance," Bergquist said. "I think we played very poorly on the field, especially in the fifth inning."

It was the fifth inning that saw the Minutemen give up five unearned runs thanks to some shoddy fielding which allowed the Yellow Jackets to climb back into the game after being down 8-0.

As far as UMass was concerned, the game was over after the first inning when the Minutemen grabbed a 6-0 lead, feasting on Yellow Jacket starter Jim Hart.

Kingman lined Hart's third pitch over the 330-foot sign in left-field. Freshman rightfielder Matt Sheran laid down a bunt single down the third base line before scoring on Todd Comeau's towering home run over the left-centerfield fence.

After Cimini grounded out, shortstop Angelo Salustri walked and catcher Dan Clifford singled. The two combined on a double steal to place runners at second and third before centerfielder Steve Messina walked to load the bases. Third baseman Steve Allen forced Messina at second, scoring Salustri, before second baseman Darrin O'Connor, the number nine batter, tripled into the right-centerfielder gap scoring Clifford and Allen.

The Minutemen added solo runs in the second and third innings as Cimini belted his first homer of the game and Messina scored on a weak grounder by O'Connor.

With UMass starter Bob Kostro (1-0) working on a no-hitter through four innings, the Yellow Jackets struck for their big inning scoring five runs on three weak singles, a Salustri error, and a bases-clearing double by right fielder Mark Cuoco. The Yellow Jackets got another run in the sixth on a home run by first baseman Kevin Vasquez to cut the UMass lead to 8-6.

Cimini put an end to matters, lacing 410-foot homer over the centerfield fence scoring Comeau, who had singled.

Nazi victims remembered starting today

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Staff

If you had lived in Nazi Germany during World War II, you might have been among the millions who were killed and burned in the ovens by a madman named Adolph Hitler.

National Holocaust Week begins today, an event that honors the many different ethnic groups that were massacred during the Hitler era. At the University of Massachusetts, various events and informational sessions will be held to make people more aware of the atrocities that took place, Naomi Arin, media campaign manager for the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy said. Buttons will also be handed out in the residence halls and at a table in the Campus Center, she said.

The theme of the week is the "Courage to Care," Arin said. The theme was chosen to address apathy. "It's easy to be apathetic. One must have the courage to stand up for an injustice," she said. If more people would've stood up in Germany, the holocaust might not have happened.

Holocaust Week is the second for the University. Last year, it was only a one day event, but it has been expanded "because there was a really big reaction to it," Arin said. This year, the approach is on all the groups affected, as well as the Jews, she said. It was difficult, she said, because "the information available is mainly about Jews."

There were breakthoughs, Lisa Horowitz, a Holocaust Week committee member added. "There were people on the committee that aren't Jewish. We wanted everyone to think how the world was affected," she said.

The main thing to remember she said, is to educate oneself about what's going on and then do something about it. "People in power capitalize on apathy," Arin added.

Arin said the committee tried to stress the fact that not only Jews were affected. "Hitler's philosophies cause harm to a lot of people, not just Jews," Arin said. Gypsies, Catholics and homosexuals were among the minorities persecuted, she said.

Events will be held all week on numerous topics with emphasis on the message of caring about humanity, Arin said. Beginning at noon Thursday, there will be a 12-hour vigil by the campus pond to honor the people who died during the holocaust that haven't been honored before, Devra Feshbach, a member of the vigil committee said. Names of people killed in the holocaust will be read throughout the vigil, she said. The vigil will begin with a proclamation from Governor Michael S. Dukakis, which will be read by Stacey Roth, Student Government Association co-president elect. Other events during the week include:

- Meaning of the holocaust: a student panel. 2:30-5 p.m., Tuesday, Campus Center Rm. a1a74-176.
- The Role of the University during the holocaust: a faculty panel. 4-6 p.m., Wednesday in Campus Center Rm. 165-169.
- The White Rose, film 3 and 8 p.m., Sunday Campus Center Rm. 101.
- Memorial Services at the Newman Center will be held Sunday, times to be announced.

Prof keys parents in on proposed cuts

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Proposed financial aid cuts by the Reagan Administration threaten the future of public higher education nationwide, a University of Massachusetts professor told over 500 parents of Dean's List students at a dinner Saturday.

"We have a history and tradition of higher education support. Society has nutured all of this. I say we have had a society (that has supported higher education) and it is my hope we will maintain that support," said Jules Chametzky, UMass professor and director of the Institute for Advanced Study in the Humanities.

Chametzky said the history of support for public education is in jeopardy because the Reagan Administration does not understand that it is not easy to finance an education.

"Being a parent who had, at one time, three children in college, I know I could not have (put them through) unaided. If you see a dig in Ronald Reagan and (in Secretary of Education William) Bennett in that statement, then you're right.

"We all know financing education is a struggle. We all know it's worth it," Chametzky said.

People have always supported higher education because they know the faith they put in the system "will all come back to us." Education is a way of "enriching the wider community," he said.

Society will always be held back unless "the best potential of the individual self is liberated and (allowed) to flourish." Education is the best vehicle for that potential to be utilized, he said.

Baird 'excited' about UMass return

Pro-choice activist to speak on abortion clinic firebombings

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

When Bill Baird, a pro-choice activist for more than 20 years, speaks tonight at the University of Massachusetts, the circumstances will be different than when he last visited 17 years ago.

In 1968, when Baird came to the UMass campus, he was facing a possible 10-year prison term for displaying birth control pills to Boston University students the year before.

"In 1967, 800 Boston University students signed a petition and said 'Bill Baird, come and help us fight the Massachusetts Crimes against Chastity law'," Baird recalled in a recent telephone interview.

According to Baird, the 'Crimes against Chastity' laws in effect in Massachusetts at the time prohibited the exhibiting, selling and teaching of birth control to single women and allowed only married women to use contraceptives or have abortions.

Baird, who had already been imprisoned twice for teaching birth control to poor women in New York and New Jersey, believed that changing the law meant challenging it and bringing it to the courts. So, he stood up before 2,000 Boston University students, demonstrating and distributing contraceptives and was arrested.

The following year, while his sentence was being appealed, Baird came to UMass to fight another round in his battle against the law.

Baird recalled that while at UMass he "arranged for a nineteen-year-old female student to buy a can of Emko contraceptive foam from Zayre's," a now defunct department store in Hadley.

Although the manager of Zayre's had committed a "crime against chastity" in selling contraception to an unmarried woman, no police action was taken which Baird saw as evidence of the "double standard" of the law.

According to the Collegian at the time, "Baird is currently facing a prison term for displaying a birth control pill but a multi-million dollar department store is able to sell contraceptives without retribution."

UMass students at the time rallied, demonstrated and petitioned in his support and today Baird speaks of their "incredible love, support and devotion."

"The UMass student senate," he said, "was the only student senate in New England to pass a resolution to support me."

Baird's effort to challenge restrictive birth control and abortion laws have resulted not only in his imprisonment eight times in five different states, but in a number of landmark court victories.

Heart patient has bleeding problems

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) - Jack C. Burcham was rushed back into surgery yesterday where doctors stopped the bleeding in his left chest cavity after he lost at least 21 pints of blood during his first night with an artificial heart.

Blood had seeped from stitches in synthetic fabric that binds the aorta with the Jarvik-7 pump in Burcham's chest cavity, said Dr. Allan Lansing, spokesman for the artificial heart implant team at Humana Hospital Audubon.

The power of the Jarvik-7 pump may have strained the sutures, forcing a loss of at least 21 pints of blood during the night, Lansing said.

Earlier, he said the stitches were strained during Sunday's struggle to implant the Jarvik-7 pump in Burcham's chest cavity, which was smaller than doctors had expected.

Chief surgeon William C. DeVries opted for a new incision in Burcham's chest, rather than reopening the incision he cut in implanting the device on Sunday, and that allowed a different angle of the mechanical heart, Lansing said.

It also gave DeVries a clear view of the rear of Burcham's aorta, and blood could be seen seeping through stitches at the rear of the aorta, Lansing said.

"Every little needle hole showed a tiny little leak through it," Lansing said. "The amount of blood coming out per beat was minimal but at 50 beats a minute, going on minute after minute after minute, this led to a significant amount of bleeding."

The leak was repaired and Teflon felt was used to reinforce the new stitches, he said.

Burcham, 62, the world's fifth and oldest implant recipient, was reported in critical but stable condition after leaving the operating room.

The incident was "a setback, but barring an infection, then I don't think this will change his recovery," Lansing said.

Sex law repeal possible in Africa

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) - The government said yesterday it will repeal laws prohibiting sex and marriage between whites and people of other races - two pillars of the apartheid system aimed at preserving white racial purity.

Anti-apartheid forces quickly called the announcement "window dressing" and declared the laws unimportant compared with the primary goal of winning the right to vote for South Africa's black majority - 22 million people.

Whites on both sides took the move seriously. The Conservative Party said the repeal would endanger "our national identity," and Louis Stofberg, spokesman for the far-right Herstigte Nasionale Party said, "The government has let loose a tiger that it won't be able to control."

The announcement by Home Affairs Minister F.W. de Klerk to Parliament was the most dramatic of a series of moves by white-minority government in recent months toward social change and easing of apartheid, the official policy of racial separation.

Repeal of the sex and marriage laws strikes at the foundations of apartheid, which guarantees such white privileges as separate residential neighborhoods, schools and hospitals.

De Klerk told Parliament the government believes legalization of sex across the color line will create social problems, but feels it is time to remove the issue "from the political arena."

Repeal of the 36-year-old Prohibition of Mixed Marriages Act and the 28-year-old Section 16 of the Immorality Act, expected this year, will allow whites legally to have sexual relations with blacks, Asians and people of mixed race - called coloreds in South Africa. There has been no prohibition on relations among the non-white groups.

The laws were strictly enforced in most parts of the country, but have been increasingly ignored in the large cities - Johannesburg, Durban and Cape Town - where hundreds of whites and non-whites lived together with the sufferance of authorities. About 200 people have been persecuted under the laws each year.

Mass. boating accident kills one, injures two

BOSTON (AP)—One man died and two were rescued yesterday after a 14-foot outboard motorboat capsized one mile offshore in Hingham Bay, U.S. Coast Guard officials said.

The survivors were in the water for 40 minutes before a passing boat spotted them and brought them on board, said Petty Officer Lance Jones.

The rescuing boat did not have a radio, so the crew sped to the closest Coast Guard station, Jones said. Five rescue boats and one helicopter were dispatched to the area between Sheep and Bumpkin islands, where the boat capsized, and the body of a third man was quickly found.

Jones identified the survivors as Jeff Ledger, 20 of Waltham, and Ken Houle, 20, of West Newton. They were treated for hypothermia at South Shore Hospital, Jones said.

Jones withheld the name of the dead man pending notification of his family. The cause of death was being determined by the medical examiner.

Inmates take over Alabama prison

ODENVILLE, Ala. (AP) - Hundreds of inmates took control of a section of a state prison yesterday, holding the warden and 21 other people hostage for more than 10 hours before releasing all the captives unharmed, officials said.

Five employees were injured, officials said.

Shots were fired when about 200 inmates took over a central records office at the 1,000-prisoner St. Clair County Correctional Facility yesterday morning, initially trapping about 40 guards and employees, officials said.

Some employees were able to get out, but Warden Larry Spears and 21 others, including 10 women, were trapped, said Prison Commissioner Fred Smith.

The inmates demanded changes in operations at the medium-and maximum-security facility, said Billy Joe Camp, press secretary to Gov. George C. Wallace.

Smith said he and FBI negotiators were in contact with the inmates through prison radio and television hookups.

"We do have a list of demands," Smith said. "We are working with the inmates right now."

He declined to gave any specifics about the demands, but said about 200 prisonsers were involved in the uprising, which erupted about 9:20 a.m. central standard time.

Camp said the inmates "told prison officials they were demanding a number of changes in the operations at the prison." They also demanded that some inmates held in isolation cells be released to the general prison population, he said.

Another demand was to segregate the predominantly black institution, said an official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The situation appeared to have "cooled down" by early afternoon and FBI agents arrived to assist in negotiations, said St. Clair County Commission Chairman Shirley Saterfield.

Camp, reached at the Capitol in Montgomery, said word on the number of hostages came from prison officials who had made contact with the rebel inmates at the facility about 25 miles east of Birmingham.

Grand jury indicts 23; all part of neo-Nazis

SEATTLE (AP)—A grand jury has indicted 23 people on racketeering and conspiracy charges for involvement in a neo-Nazi group, and accused four of them of participating in the slaying of a Jewish radio personality, officials said yesterday.

The indictment also alleged that members of The Order participated in the killing of a reputed member of the group and armored-car holdups that netted more than $4 million.

In Ridgedale, Mo., a man stopped by the Highway Patrol for a random traffic inspection yesterday opened fire, killing one trooper and wounding another. Authorities said the assailant may have been one of those indicted here.

When pulled over, the gunman gave an alias that has been used by David C. Tate, who was accused along with five others of killing a member of The Order who disappeared, said Max Geiman, a spokesman for the FBI in Kansas City.

Sixteen of those indicted are in custody, and the nine-month investigation has effectively neutralized the group, but "our perception is that there may be a lot of sympathizers," said Bill Baker, the FBI's assistant director.

'Baby Doe' rules are made official

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Reagan administration ordered doctors and hospitals yesterday to provide medically necessary treatment for severely handicapped "Baby Doe" infants except in cases where death appears inevitable.

The Department of Health and Human Services released a final regulation covering the so-called "Baby Doe" cases, in which infants with severe or multiple handicaps might be denied necessary medical treatment and allowed to die.

Soviet trade market is good, says expert at conference

By ANNE MCCRORY
Collegian Staff

Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev sees four major areas in which trade can be expanded with the United States, but increased trade cannot begin until trade restrictions are lifted and the issue becomes less politicized, according to a Soviet trade expert who spoke at the University of Massachusetts Friday.

James H. Giffen, the president of the U.S.-USSR Trade and Economic Council, Inc., addressed the international business conference at its closing luncheon in the Campus Center. Giffen is also the president of the Mercator Corp. in New York and an adjunct professor at the Columbia University graduate schools of business and international affairs. He has traveled extensively in the Soviet Union and been involved in numerous trade contracts with Soviet agencies.

Giffen met with Gorbachev for one hour and 40 minutes last December in the Kremlin. He said Gorbachev then expressed interest in expanding trade in the areas of energy, agro-business, and consumer goods and was seeking to modernize Soviet industry.

While U.S. exports once constituted 75 percent of Soviet agricultural imports, that amount ($2.8 billion in 1984) is now about 25 percent since business went to other nations during President Carter's grain embargo, Giffen said. Of the $4 million to $5 million the Soviets imported in machinery and equipment last year, only $110 million came from the United States, he said.

"With a positive balance of hard currency trade over the last two years and an estimated positive balance in 1984, the Soviets are well positioned to commence large purchases of equipment and machinery from the United States if and when we become seriously interested in such trade with the Soviet Union," he said. "The opportunities are clearly there."

But legislative restrictions on exports that force the Soviets to pay higher duties on their exports to the U.S. than they pay on those to other countries, as well as sanctions restricting export-import banking, inhibit U.S.-Soviet trade, Giffen said.

In addition, the Soviets perceive arms control, political and trade and economic issues to be inter-related and believe progress should be made simultaneously on all of them.

Scholarly discussion marks 10th anniversary

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

A capacity crowd packed into Memorial Hall last Friday to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the University of Massachusetts Women's Studies Program, and listened as three prominent feminist scholars discussed "Women's Studies in an International Context: The Decade Past, Visions for the Next Ten Years."

Johnetta Cole, professor of anthropology at Hunter College and former associate provost at UMass, kicked-off the discussion by emphasising that Women's studies programs in the United States still have much to learn by examining the "national context."

"Women's studies began here by saying it spoke for us all," she recalled, adding "but only some voices came through."

As an example, Cole suggested that at the beginning of women's studies, courses on "the history of American women only dealt with some women," ignoring the voices of others, she said. Among these voices, Cole included poor, Jewish, older, rural and less able women, as well as women of color.

"These voices were always there," she said, "but they weren't heard."

Cole said that the present challenge for women's studies is to analyze and incorporate this diversity of voices by "addressing the conditions of every woman in the curriculum and in research, as well as through faculty and students," she said.

"If we meet this challenge, ten years from now I will not come and give this same speach," she concluded.

Marysa Navarro, professor of history at Dartmouth College, spoke on feminism in Latin America, recalling that in 1979 when she was asked to review Latin American feminist literature,she discovered it did not exist.

But Navarro stressed that the last six years have seen such dramatic changes that now she does not know any "social scientist in Latin America who denies feminism and the number who proclaim it have grown enormously," she said.

She said that although the feminist perspective is beginning to infiltrate the universities in the form of "mini-mini-mini women's studies programs," most of the analysis comes out of research centers created by feminists in such countries as Peru, Columbia, Chile, Costa Rica, Bolivia and Argentina.

"The feminist movement in Latin America began late, but now the movement is of continental proportions," she said.

New policy position open in Whitmore

By GREG BROWN
and LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

A new high-level administrative position has been created to formulate and implement computing and information systems policy at the University of Massachusetts.

The position of associate vice chancellor for computing and information systems may be filled by July, Fern Johnson, associate provost for undergraduate education, said.

The new associate vice chancellor will report to Executive Vice Chancellor and Provost Richard L. O'Brien. The administrator's responsibilities will include developing and implementing policies related to microcomputers and planning and overseeing the development of new computing networks on campus, Johnson said.

A search committee of 10 faculty and administrators, including chairwoman Johnson, has already received many applications and nominations for the job.

Johnson said the salary will be commensurate with qualifications and experience, but could not give estimate, "because of the extremely broad range of possibilities for salary."

Johnson said the candidate must have both technical and managerial abilities, and be well-versed in state-of-the-art computers.

The new position comes in the wake of an interim report by a task force established to study the role of computing at the University. The task force was created by the provost's office in response to a recommendation by the Faculty Senate Computing Committee last February.

The task force, made several recommendations regarding the use of microcomputers by students and faculty and developed a plan for future computing.

The cost of the proposed plan has been estimated at $20,000,000. Projected annual costs for the plan, including 5,000 student workstations, 600 faculty workstations, 160 department workstations, 40 dean/provost workstations, 300 non-academic workstations and maintenance and training totals $6 million, excluding the cost of campus cabling.

The recommendations made by the task force to improve computer resources include:

- the appointment of an individual to serve as a contact person for computer manufacturers and distributors
- administrative contact with computer manufacturers to discuss discounts and donations
- availability of discounts for both personal and institutional purchase of personal computers.
- the creation of a display center where several computer products could be viewed
- the appointment of an on-campus maintenance service
- the installment of appropriate wiring to allow the networking of computers across campus
- the installation of computer-based library materials
- the equipment of classrooms with devices to allow projection of computer output
- a fiscal year 1987 budget request to include computing project costs.

No telephone directory means no Dean's List

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

The Dean's List for the fall 1984 semester will not be published because the student telephone directory will not be printed this semester, a University official said last week.

Associate Dean of Students Robert N. Brooks explained that the dispute between the directory's publisher and a printing company, which left students without a spring phone book, also left the Dean of Students' Office without a place to publish the Dean's List.

Brooks said the dean's office "does not have the resources" to publish the list of students who achieve a grade-point average of 3.5 or better. However, Brooks said "the achievement is so great, we want to find a new (publishing) format that's done with some style and class."

Brooks said he will present a proposal for a Dean's List brochure to Dean William F. Field later this month. The 5½-by-8½ inch pamphlet would be typeset, instead of the computer printout used in the past.

Brooks estimated the cost of the project at $2,500 to $3,000 per semester, and said the proposal will probably go to the various vice chancellors next month "to find money for it."

The brochure would be a "keepsake, something the students could take home with them," Brooks said. The first brochure listing the Dean's List for this spring would be out in July or August, "but I can't promise anything," he added.

Brooks was hesitant about the possibility of publishing this semester's Dean's List. First, he said, "It's not inconceivable that it may still be possible." He then said, "We would like to be able to do it, but I think we're not."

The proposed pamphlet will be printed at the expense of the University, unlike the student directory. Brooks said the student phone book has been free to students and the University for the past four and a half years but added: "Students shouldn't be surprised if they see a $1 fee at the top of next semester's book."

Women's Forum

Women's forum is a weekly listing of events relating to women's issues. Notices should be sent to the Women's Issues Editor, care of the Collegian, not later than the Friday before the event.

TUESDAY - Bill Baird, a pro-choice activist for more than 20 years will speak on "Firebombing of Abortion Clinics And What We Plan To Do About It," at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

The Asian Women's Issues Group, sponsored by the Third World Women's Program at the Everywoman's Center (EWC), will meet from 7-9 p.m. at the EWC.

WEDNESDAY - There will be a symposium on "Women's History as Women's Education," featuring speakers Joan Scott, Natalie Davis and Lester Little, from 10:00-11:30 a.m. in Wright Hall, Smith College.

The Lesbian Union has formed a new rap group, led by its coordinators, which will meet from 7-9 p.m. in Student Union Building room 406.

The Black Women's Issues Group will meet at the Everywoman's Center from 7-9 p.m.

THURSDAY - A workshop called "Would You Let This Happen To Your Sister?" will be offered from 12-1 p.m. in Campus Center room 811. It is the presentation of a new film from the United Auto Workers concerning sexual harassment, which will be followed by a discussion led by Myra Hindus, coordinator of the Working Women's Program at the Everywoman's Center.

FRIDAY - At 5:30 p.m. a "Take Back the Night: Reclaiming Our Lives" rally will begin in the Student Union Building and will be followed by a march at 7:30 p.m.

Com Stu dept. gets new title approved

In a move designed to better identify itself,the Department of Communication Studies has changed its name to the Department of Communication.

The change was ratified unanimously at the last Faculty Senate meeting.

W. Barnett Pearce, head of the department, said the change was sought, "because the term 'studies' denotes an interdisciplinary unit brought together by a common interest." "Communication is a distinct discipline with a long history and professional associations. This name change identifies ourselves more accurately," he said.

Pearce said the department, the third largest on campus, requested the title in 1975 when the department was created.

"This title makes more explicit our identification with an academic discipline," Pearce said.

Pearce said the number of communication majors in the past 10 years has increased 250 percent. "We have a prestigious department," he said, "a faculty with many laurels, and all the vital signs look good."

Defense to push tower

Representatives of the United States Department of Defense will meet with the Hampshire County Commissioners in Northampton tonight to discuss the Air Force's proposal for a 300-foot radio to be built in the area.

The tower is designed to withstand a nuclear blast and provide communciation between defense posts in the event of a nuclear attack. It is part of a $122 million national system termed "Ground Wave Emergency Network," (GWEN).

Nancy Foster, a member of the No-GWEN Alliance, opponents of the tower, said the Department of Defense "will discuss how GWEN fits into the national defense strategy."

Amherst voted to oppose construction of the tower at the last Town Meeting.

The Department of Defense cancelled a meeting with the commissioners on March 26.

The meeting begins at 7 p.m. at the Hampshire District Court.

Panel talk tonight at 7

Students who have worked in the professional world will share their experiences today as part of a panel discussion held by the Office of Cooperative Education.

The office, which helps students find temporary jobs to gain field experience in their major, will hold a discussion at 7 p.m. in Campus Center room 904 for current students.

"The whole idea is to allow many students to tell them what a campus all about," said Laurie Nye, a publicist at the office. "The student panel will also discuss their experiences, how it has benefitted them and what it's like to work in a professional environment."

Past co-ops have been conducted at IBM headquarters and nearby. Co-ops range from Westinghouse, the Department of Transportation, Walt Disney World, Howard Johnson's, Filene's department stores, and Coca-Cola of New England.

In 1972 he appeared before the U.S. Supreme Court in a case which legalized abortion nationally for single people and overturned his 1967 conviction. The case was also quoted six times in the 1973 decision legalizing abortion.

Asked how he first became involved in the struggle for abortion and birth control rights, Baird recalled an incident that occured when he was a clinical director for a pharmaceutical company in the early 1960s. He was making a call at a hospital when he "heard an agonizing scream and a black woman came running out with an eighteen-inch coat hanger embedded in her uterus. I caught her and she died in my arms," he said.

Baird will be speaking at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom as part of the Distinguished Visitors Program, in a lecture titled "Firebombing of Abortion Clinics and What We Plan to Do About It."

Baird said his talk will focus on the tactics of the anti-abortion movement, the brutality of self-induced and illegal abortions, and what he referred to as "the misconceptions that cause conceptions."

"I can't tell you how excited I am to come back to the campus," he said, adding that he hoped to "fire up a whole new coalition of students to save the law."

"In two or three years we will lose the present abortion and birth control laws and we will lose them by default," he said, noting that on "every campus 99 percent of students support abortion but less than 1 percent ever does anything about it."

"Most students now were raised when abortion and birth control were legal and they don't know what it's like to read 'UMass woman found dead with coat hanger in her uterus'," Baird said.

Nursing students hit the studio to teach refugees health care

Tape to 'bridge gap' between two cultures

By MICHELLE SEGALL
Collegian Staff

For Southeast Asian refugees in the United States, American health care practices are strange and often difficult to understand.

To help bridge the gap between Asian tradition and Western health care, six nursing students at the University of Massachusetts are making a videotape to educate refugees about health care in America.

"The differences are so stark," Jeanine Muldoon, community health care faculty nurse and coordinator of the project, said.

Funded by a $3,000 grant from the Area Health Education Center of the Pioneer Valley, the 15-minute videotape about communicable diseases will show a Cambodian family arriving in the United States.

The tape will focus on kitchen and bathroom scenes illustrating the importance of not sharing the same toothbrushes, towels and pillows and washing dishes in hot, soapy water to stop the spread of disease. The tape will also show the importance of taking prescribed medication in correct doses even though symptoms of disease may disappear.

Muldoon said refugees sometimes think that if they do not have symptoms, they do not need the drug, or they take it all at once to speed recovery. Some refugees in New England have died because of this, she said.

Aside from teaching refugees about American health care, the videotape will show American health care providers some Southeast Asian cultural beliefs. Many providers do not understand Eastern healing practices and have expressed frustration due to the language and cultural differences.

Hellen Stallings, one of the students involved in the project, said Southeast Asians think spirits cause disease, so they use traditional healing practices like cupping or pinching and bruising to release "evil spirits". "These practices don't harm the patient in any way," she said.

The marks may remain on the skin from a couple of days to a couple of months. These marks have been interpreted by health care providers unfamiliar with these practices as child abuse. These traditions are a cultural thing that "should be accepted rather than attacked," Muldoon said.

Muldoon has already been approached by professionals around the country who want copies of the videotape including a volunteer who will be working at a refugee camp in the Philippines during the summer. Muldoon said she will also try to market the videotape through some national conventions.

The group has not yet determined what will happen to profits earned through the sale of the videotape, but Muldoon said "I do want to come back to fund future projects of the kind, that's in the works." For the future, she wants to make videotapes on family planning and mental health depression.

The project has met with some opposition from health care providers who argue that the videotape is discriminatory.

Muldoon said the goal of the project is "to give them (the refugees) the tools they need to be able to live in the way they would like and in a healthy way."

"We don't want to negate their belief, but we do want them to understand why our system works as it does," she said. The tape will be made in two languages, English and Khmer, the Cambodian language.

"We have to educate our health care providers about the cultural differences which sometimes cause us to blame the victims when they don't follow our instructions. After all, if you believe that a bad wind rather than microbes causes disease, it means you won't use hot soapy water to clean your utensils...The cycle of disease will not be broken until both Asians and Americans can be re-educated to understand cultural differences and beliefs," she said.

The most common problems facing refugees are head lice, tuberculosis and intestinal parasites. These problems are a result of unsanitary living conditions at refugee camps. Cambodians, who have settled in the area, see this project as a great help, according to Muldoon, who has talked with some of them.

Susan Barstow, a UMass student working on the project finds it fulfilling because she is involved in something that will be useable. "You don't always feel that way when you're a student," she said.

The videotape is scheduled for completion by graduation.

A few thoughts on Susan

Desperately Seeking Susan directed by Susan Seidelman
Starring Rosanna Arquette and Madonna at the Mountain Farms Cinemas

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

A rock star that tries to make it on the big screen is usually placed under the proverbial microscope and is given careful scrutiny. Such is the case for Madonna's acting debut in Desperately Seeking Susan.

Madonna portrays Susan, a free-wheeling person who likes to have, to put it nicely, quite brief relationships with members of the opposite sex. Although we don't actually see Susan hop from bed to bed, the assumption is not a difficult one to make.

Susan is in a little bit of trouble. It seems that her last "boyfriend" was connected with the mob and stole a pair of valuable earrings. Susan grabbed these earrings upon leaving him, not knowing their value. Enter Roberta (Rosanna Arquette), an unhappy Yuppie housewife whose best advice from her friends is "not to get a job that pays less than $50,000." Roberta likes to read the personals and constantly sees many addressed to Susan. She decides to follow Susan and eventually purchases a jacket that Susan had up for hock. Well, by wearing this jacket she eventually is mistaken for Susan and temporarily "becomes" her when she is stricken with amnesia.

Not wanting to give away any more, the rest of the movie is the struggle to recapture Roberta's identity, the stolen earrings, and Susan's life savings, kept in a sad-looking piece of luggage.

Madonna doesn't say much in the movie, but she doesn't have to. She has a presence on the screen and, in the movie, defines sultry to a tee. She plays a character very similar to herself in real life-- confident, self-assured, aggressive but not in an obnoxious way.

Arquette also plays a believable role as the malcontent rich girl who wants more out of life. She wants to lead the care-free life Susan leads.

Director Susan (is it just concidence?) Seidelman does a fine job in dealing with a plot that can make for confusion among the audience. It is a fun, fast-paced movie that wasn't over-directed. Parts of the film did drag a bit, especially the beginning, and some scenes were unbelieveable, for instance when Roberta finds a personal from Susan in a paper a wino was using for a pillow.

These few instances, however, can be overlooked because of the general fun the movie expresses. Music plays a big factor in the movie, both up front and in the background. Seidelman even puts a couple of jokes in the background, reminiscent of the two Airplane movies.

Overall, the audience seemed to enjoy this movie. Most of the members were Madonna fans and here is where the stipulation sets in. Because Susan is very similar to Madonna, those of you out there who find Madonna nauseating (why is another question) probably won't find this film too pleasurable. Madonna doesn't dominate the screen, but her presence is felt enough to turn away people who aren't her biggest fans.

For the Madonna supporter, Desperately Seeking Susan is a must see. The entire cast does a good enough job to keep the movie up, especially Arquette as Roberta and Adain Quinn as Des, who eventually befriends Roberta.

If you're finding Madonna to be shown a little too much on MTV and want to see her in a different light, this movie is for you. Don't worry, you won't hear Like a Virgin at all.

Ferron's music thrills crowd

By JON STRYMISH
Collegian Staff

Ferron spells her name with the same F that Fender has used for his guitars. Ferron is a nickname that has come to stand for the only feminist hard rock singer performing today. At her concert Saturday at Smith College, Ferron brought out more response in her audience than any other performer I have ever seen.

The audience, composed of 97% women, called Ferron back for two encores, and rushed the stage at the final song. During the two hour show Ferron had asked much of the audience, including singing four part harmonies and clapping to intricate rhyme schemes.

She played biting, guitar driven music, and talked to the audience as if she was in an intimate situation, overall proving that she meant what she was saying. Ferron bills herself as a folk singer from Vancouver, Canada, her folk-rock style reminds me of Bruce Springsteen. After two records she has proven herself to have the most honest and down to earth voice in any kind of music.

The honesty of her lyrics almost seemed an embarrasment to her when it came to singing them live. On one song she sang, "Ferron you are half way pretty, and may you never be alone." For this in concert, she put on a tremelo voice that covered the power of her words.

What Ferron really is is a talker. She told stories, was humble, and generally did anything she could to endear herself to her audience. She started, "so this is Women's Week, why do you have Women's Week in April? What do you do in March?" Though this was a feminist event to most of those who were there, the performance was not based on anything larger or more political than what the emotions are in the lives of the people that Ferron's songs are about.

"Snowing in Brooklyn" is about the simple feeling of wondering what has happened to an old lover, and the emotions on it are personal. She builds personal statements into politics, such as "Fifteen years ago I worked the line./ With a thousand more all doing time./ While a foreman smiled complicit crime./ We were strangers to the plan./ An old woman ran the gears/ she couldn't move/ They said she'd been there forty years/ I think that's rude/ 'cause forty years is forty years/ And I was only 15 then." From the song "Shadows on a Dime".

Ferron played most of the songs from her two records as well as a few others. Playing two sets, she was backed on the second by Novi, a woman from Los Angeles, who played the viola and keyboards. She helped give Ferron the edge she needs to make her songs really come off with a bite. The first set was done solo; for both sets an interpreter for the deaf was present.

Performer Galen Blum.

Blum to appear

By RENEE BACHER
Collegian Staff

Galen Blum is one of those performers who make up a significant part of the whole. She's opened for Dizzy Gillespie, Spyro Gyra, Maynard Ferguson, Harry Chapin, David Brenner, and Pete Seeger, among others.

This Saturday, in Hampden Theatre's Spring Festival of the Arts, Blum will step center-stage and have the whole show to herself. Blum has done t.v., theatre, commercials and cabaret. You might say this entertainer has put in more than her share of ground work. Yes, a real star has come to shine upon those who frequent our own small, theatrical haven in Southwest.

From my understanding, the act itself is sort of a cabaret involving a lot of skillful improvisation. For example; Blum asks the audience for a word or two and then she and her accompanist create a song with them. Recently I heard a tape of Blum's which had a very comical show-tune feel to it. Her musical repertoire is an eclectic combination of blues, jazz, ballads and country/western.

If her face looks familiar, it might be that you recognize her from, "Gabe Kaplan Presents Future Stars," on ABC-TV, or perhaps from a Sominex commercial. At any rate, this show promises to keep its audience awake and allow the personal contact that is often impossible with famous personalities.

Midttun's work 'a slice of life'

By ANDREW BOSETTI
Collegian Correspondent

They stand there and seem to have a dialogue with each other, so alive are they, so vibrant, with so much energy and so much character. Or, then again, each could be seen as lost in his or her own world, wrapped up in what it was that made their ideas so special to them.

Who are they? What am I talking about? I'm speaking about some magnificent metal sculptures by Eric Midttun. The works each stand some eight feet tall and embody characters from life and society which one might encounter in various settings. They are a colorful and expressive group. Each "personage" is unique and provocative. When they stand together in the UMass Foundry they tend to "blow you away" with their presence.

This is no accident. Midttun spoke to me one night about his work, and he was emphatic about each sculpture's need to be a unique and expressive character of some sort. He said he wanted to capture the flavor of individual personalities—people, who, at times, seemed "locked" within themselves or caught up in lifestyles that they either couldn't escape or didn't want to change. He is concerned about this.

Midttun said he wanted his sculpture to challenge the individual who experiences them and maybe cause that person to reflect and consider his or her own position, own life's pattern, in relation to the characters he presents. He wants to raise some questions like: "Is this me?" "Do I need to change?" "Can I change?" "What kind of character am I in the face of these strange presences?"

The artist was clear about his intention. He said that in his own life he was constantly challenging himself and reflecting on the direction he was taking and what meaning that had for him. He notices people, and he's noticed how some people can become locked into a way of life which does not really satisfy them or make them happy. Yet they cannot change. Midttun's sculptures, his metal, glass and plastic characters, directly reflect his concerns with "lost individuality" or the idea of personality locked into a rigid system of social "order."

That's one meaning at least. Of course, there's more. I said that when I looked at his people I thought of Ensor's masks, extremely expressive faces behind which was hidden a multi-dimensional complex personality that perhaps few would ever understand. At that point we also spoke of Giacometti's small people standing in lonesome groups on empty planes of space. Giacometti's figures are small and tiny, hardly colorful and anything but expressive. These works are large, colorful, done in a variety of media and active to the extent that the viewer is taken aback.

There is theatre going on here; each figure is so alive, so bold, so menacing and so intriguing. Each sculpture is complex to the extent that you have to look again to see all its parts as well as the many angles from which it effects you. Each figure has a personality all its own that suggests an evolution, a growth and development, a coming of age.

I've seen the artist working. He works rapidly, bending, cutting and welding pieces of metal to form chest, ribs, arms, legs, a head, etc. Even the painting is done fairly quickly yet not without concern for the result it has on the finished product. If Midttun wants to add a plastic nose or a wooden spike or a rubber hose, he does so. And every other night or so you'll see him take a figure aside and change something on it, add a color or cut a section of metal or graft on an arm. It's funny, it's serious, it's intense and the end result is so exciting and provocative that you've got to see it to really understand what the artist has done.

But there is a dialogue here. The figures are each very much themselves yet have a great ability to "interact" with one another when placed together. It is a slice of life to see them all together. It makes one think about the people we meet in our own lives; you might even spot someone you know here. Midttun really succeeds in making you think about some things. He told me that each work becomes history once it is completed and, although he had no wish to keep them all, he does worry about their fate. Any suggestions? See Eric Midttun, his show Banana Flavored Suit will open on Sunday, April 28.

Your chance to say 'no'

President Reagan has recently begun to realize that the American people will not stand for U.S. military intervention in Central America. The disturbing aspect of this, though, is that he did not decide to stop the war against the people of Nicaragua. Instead, he has proposed that we as a nation support this illegal war with "humanitarian aid" to the contras.

This is just another smokescreen to hide the fact that we are attempting to bring about the overthrow of a duly elected government. Besides being illegal, it adds to the idea that somehow the contras aren't so bad if they need "humanitarian aid". These people have killed over 7500 people in the last 4 years. Every woman captured by them is raped, some as many as 60 times. We as a people must reject this scam presented by the President and tell him we want nothing to do with this war. We must say no to this and all other forms of violence against the people of Central America.

To put this in context, we must remember that our nation has supported political solutions to conflicts wherever it served our purposes. Why can't we, as the "Greatest Nation in the World" negotiate with a tiny underdeveloped nation of about 3 million people? Why must we support the use of napalm and white phosphorus bombs against the civilian population of El Salvador? Why must we send tens of thousands of troops to do maneuvres three kilometers from the Nicaraguan border? The most disturbing thing about this is that it is done in the name of the people of the United States. We have a chance with the upcoming vote in the Congress on this hidden war and with the April 20th march in Washington to say we will no longer passively accept lies, deceptions and dishonesty. We can say no more to a government which does these things without telling us and then claims to act for us.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Remembering the past

Despite a tendency for some people to want to forget about past tragedies, we as a society must not forget the pain that others have endured, nor must we forget why they have endured that pain.

This week at the University of Massachusetts is Holocaust Memorial Week. It is in honor of the six million Jews and countless others slaughtered in Nazi Germany concentration camps.

There are those who want to forget that the holocaust ever existed. These are the same people who will never fully understand the horror of the Holocaust. These are the same people who insult the memory of those who died and those who risked their lives trying to end the killings.

While Hitler was trying to destroy a race of people, there were many world leaders who overlooked the carnage and tried to ignore the ugly reality that was just beyond their field of vision. But there were others who did not overlook the massacre taking place; they were the people who had the "courage to care," which is the theme of this week. In addition to honoring those killed by Adolph Hitler, it is also in recognition of the numerous people who responded to the call for assistance, risking their own lives to save others, that this year's memorial week pays homage to.

No one really wants to think about millions of people dying in the most horrible and inhumane ways known to society, but only through studying the past can we appreciate the pain and suffering others endured. Only through recognizing that horrors do not only occur in the movies can we work to seeing that they are never allowed to occur again.

They've done it again.

Once again the University administration has used students to make themselves look good while forgetting to give them any of the credit.

The weekend is over and the 500 parents who participated in the Parents Weekend for students who made the Dean's List last semester or the one before it, have all gone home. Administrators gloried in the praise they received from parents this weekend about what a fine institution this is and how lucky their sons and daughters are to come to this University where high academic achievement is lauded and recognized.

This weekend was a fantastic publicity stunt on the part of administrators who showed off the campus, the "most sophisticated equipment and the most distinguished professors on campus," according to the brochure which was sent out. Workshops, a cocktail reception and banquet, speakers and tours were planned for the weekend.

But in the excitement of the planning and execution of this great publicity stunt, the ones who made the event possible were forgotten—the students. The students who worked hard all semester to get the grades they got were forgotten; the students who went to the classes, did the homework, studied for the exams and withstood the pressure of exams were forgotten, conveniently so.

Those students were never given the credit. The invitations were sent to the parents, not the students. If one wasn't in contact with his or her parents, the student might never have known about the weekend planned to "honor these students and parents." The parents didn't get the grades and make the list; the students did.

The brochure sent out to the parents with the schedule of the events, stated that students could participate in the weekend activities only if there were space available. How's that for "honoring these students?"

Due to problems with the publisher and the printing company, the phone book which has printed the Dean's List for the past couple of semesters, wasn't published this semester. No effort was made to find an alternative place to print the list. Up until a year ago, the list was printed in the Collegian, where everyone could see the list.

The list isn't that important to parents or even employers, but it is important to the students themselves and their peers. The printed list can be saved and put in a scrapbook or sent home. And yet the students who made the list last semester will have nothing to remind them 10 years from now that they made the list at least once in their college career.

Associate Dean of Students Robert N. Brooks said he will present a proposal to the Dean of Students to have a typeset brochure of the list from this semester, which will cost anywhere from $2500 to $3000. The proposal will be bounced from vice chancellor to vice chancellor to find money for the brochure. We don't know if the money will even be found. Brooks says he "can't promise anything."

In the meantime, those who made the list last semester have been forgotten; they recieved no credit, no invitation and no praise. Many don't even know they made the list. The situation could be compared to the opening of a play in which the students built the theater and the set, wrote the script; the University administrators take the credit and the bows while the parents sit in the audience and clap. In the meantime, the students stand outside in the cold, uninvited and unable to even get tickets for the show.

Living with the Holocaust

Deborah Kutenplon

We would rather avoid looking at events that, by their very nature, must change us and our relation to the world. And we may well sense that seriously studying such an event means being haunted by it from then on, taking on a lifelong burden of responsibility to it.

—Robert Jay Lifton

A friend of mine was only eight years old when her Hebrew school class was shown films of Nazi concentration camps. I too had to learn about the Holocaust when I was growing up because it is part of my history as a Jew. It is perhaps the hardest thing I've ever done. It hurts me deeply to know that I must pass on such knowledge, with all its anguish, to my own children someday.

I read Elie Wiesel's Night when I was 13. Thirteen—let alone eight—is much too young to read about concentration camps and a child's lost faith in humanity. Thirteen is also the coming-of-age time in Jewish tradition. What does it mean to come of age with knowledge like this?

The bitterest lesson of all was that almost no one helped. How can a 13 year-old integrate such knowledge into the view of human nature she is newly formulating? How can anyone integrate such knowledge? On one level it is unknowable, like knowledge of the enormity of slavery or the destruction of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Yet somehow I had to start coming to terms with it, even back in the seventh grade. I like what I did. I could have concluded that people were really evil at heart or at best, selfish and uncaring. Instead, I felt sick for a while, and for a longer while I despaired, quite overwhelmed by our human capacity for cruelty and for indifference.

Gradually, I realized that the inaction may not have come only from a lack of caring. I realized that many thousands of "little Holocausts" were even now occuring all over the world to which I was not responding though I cared deeply.

Even though I cared, I didn't act because other things got in the way—fear, distance. I had my own life to live and its day-to-day concerns. I was only a kid, what could I do? Besides, it was awful to hear about heart-rending occurences and to know that whatever I could do, it would not be nearly enough.

Then I understood how I was, at that very minute, part of the horde that did nothing. I knew it was not from indifference, but from perceived helplessness. I knew that the people who cared but did nothing while the Holocaust happened were not so different from me. What right had I to judge them?

I vowed then that I would never—could never be—part of the quiet crowd for somebody else's Holocaust. I vowed that I would never go on with life as usual, trying not to see, while somebody else's faith in humanity died. Even though whatever I could do would not be nearly enough, I would do what I could. If I couldn't do anything, I would at least let myself see, and feel.

It's getting harder and harder to keep that vow because I am learning that Holocausts are not always dramatic and that faith dies just as completely by slow suffocation than by quick burning. Prejudice, pornography, hunger, dead-end poverty, all are daily "little" deaths we inflict on each other's lives and spirits.

Many Jews have translated our grief about our own history into a commitment that it shall never happen again, to us or to any people, on any scale. Compared to our proportion in the general population, Jews are and have been greatly overrepresented in social service professions and in life-affirming movements of all kinds—the civil rights movement, women's movement, socialist movements, lesbian and gay liberation movement, and the peace movement. Of course not all Jews have come to the same resolution of our history, but I'm proud of how many have. It helps me to live with that history.

Letters to the Editor

All he wanted was to hear a speaker speak

I just wanted to hear a speaker talk. I picked up a pamphlet and read about a vice-president from Citicorp Corp. who was to appear in the Campus Center. From reading the pamphlet I had the impression that this person would be addressing the South Africa issue as well as pertinent business issues. Being a business major, this person has a career interest for me.

I took the elevator—which had some protesters in it. I had no part in this protest nor the alleged politics of this event. I reached the 10th floor and saw a table with various books and pamphlets on it. I figured that this is where one would sign up or pay to hear this speaker. As I walked toward this table, alone, a police officer grabbed me and started pushing me. I told him: "I'm not with these people. I only want to hear what this speaker has to say." He pushed me again and I repeated that I just wanted to hear the speaker. At that point another officer grabbed me and the two police officers threw me into the elevator.

I guess it's a crime to listen to a speaker on this campus.

Holocaust Memorial Week April 16-22

Courage to Care

by RICHARD LEVIN

"To forget is to make oneself an accomplice of the executioner" according to Elie Wiesel, a concentration camp survivor and famous author. This year's theme for Holocaust Memorial Week is "The Courage To Care", a telling reminder that we must be brave and caring enough to learn about the past for the sake of the future. It is hoped that through the varied events of the Week, all of us can begin to gain a better understanding of a very tragic period in world history.

The Nazis accomplished with scientific efficiency the greatest incidence of mass murder in recorded history. About 50 million people died during WW2; all victims of a "calculated and diabolic program of planned torture and extermination" according to one report.

More than six million Jews, including a million and a half children, were systematically murdered, victims of Hitler's plan for "the final solution to the Jewish question in the German sphere of influence in Europe".

Victimized by decree, from 50,000 to 250,000 gays were killed in the concentration camps, along with Jews, political opponents of Nazism, Poles, gypsies, handicapped, Blacks, Catholics, and criminals. Previously gays had felt safe under the Third Reich and gay culture had flowered in Germany, where the world's first gay rights movement was founded.

As students, we are the first generation not to know of the horrors of WW2. But to ignore the revealed and verified facts does not mean they do not exist. It is vital to learn about the past so that we can learn from the past.

There are many situations right now that we can and must do something about. With some dedication, hunger, apartheid, wars, discrimination, and oppression the world over may be alleviated. This is not to say that these major problems will go away entirely, but action must be taken to correct the injustices of the world before it is too late.

The Holocaust provides an excellent example of apathy, misinformation, and poor judgement by many governments, including our own. If people examine the full scope of the Holocaust, a better understanding of the problems we currently face today will be achieved. Therefore it is imperative that we be made aware of the magnitude of the Holocaust, not just for the millions of victims, but for our future -- so that history does not repeat itself.

Holocaust Memorial Week Schedule

Tuesday, April 16

12 - 2 LESBIANS AND GAYS DURING THE HOLOCAUST, presentation/discussion, CC 905-9
Gerry Scoppettuolo will discuss gay culture in the 30's in Berlin and the treatment of gays in the concentration camps. Tziva Gover will discuss lesbians and women of courage in the resistance movement. Followed by a discussion on the significance of this history in our present lives.

2:30 - 5 MEANINGS OF THE HOLOCAUST, student panel, CC 174-176
Students of different denominations and backgrounds will speak about how the Holocaust affects them, drawing parallels to today.

7:30 - 10 IMAGE BEFORE MY EYES, film, Center for Racial Studies - Southwest
This film recreates pre-war life in Poland and provides important information about the contributions of Jews and about a culture on the brink of destruction. Also being shown on Thursday.

Wednesday, April 17

4 - 6 THE POLITICS OF THE HOLOCAUST, faculty panel, CC 165-169
University faculty members will speak about various political and religious aspects of the Holocaust.

8 - 10 CREATING ENEMIES AND VICTIMS: THE PSYCHOLOGICAL BASIS OF GENOCIDE AND WAR AND OF PRO-SOCIAL ALTERNATIVES, lecture by ERWIN STAUB, UMass Dept. of Psychology, Thompson Hall 140.

Thursday, April 18
Holocaust Memorial Day

10 - Noon IMAGE BEFORE MY EYES, film, Cape Cod Lounge, see Tuesday 7:30

10 - 5 PHOTO AND PRESS CLIPPINGS EXHIBIT, Cape Cod Lounge

Noon - Midnight VIGIL, Campus Pond
Brief memorial service and the reading of a Proclamation from Governor Dukakis, followed by continuous reading of names of those murdered during the Holocaust.

2 - 4 A GENERATION APART, film followed by a talk by survivor Louise Munzer, Cape Cod Lounge
This documentary portrays the impact of the Holocaust on concentration camp survivors and their children.

3- 5 and 8 - 10 THE WHITE ROSE, film, CC 101
The White Rose Protest against Nazism was organized by a handful of brave German university students who could not be silent in the face of the Holocaust.

Friday, April 19

10 - Noon DROP IN CONVERSATION HOURS WITH DR. ALAN LIEBERMAN AND MEMBERS OF A CHILDREN OF SURVIVORS GROUP, discussion, CC 802
For those who want to talk informally about how the Holocaust has affected them or learn more about how the Holocaust has affected others.

Noon - 2 THE ARMENIAN CASE, film followed by discussion, CC 803

2- 5 AFTER THE HOLOCAUST: DESPAIR AND EMPOWERMENT, workshop led by Marcia Black from SCERA, Thompson Lounge 6th floor
This workshop, through discussion and guided mediation, will give people a chance to come to terms with feelings of despair and powerlessness stirred up during the Week.

6:30 MEMORIAL SERVICES - HILLEL, Dukes Room Student Union 310
Our usual Friday night service will also include selections about the Holocaust.

Jews hung in Lodz, Poland.

Within 24 hours, each crematorium was able to consume 10,000 bodies.

Electrified fence inside a camp.

No coffins or flowers at this funeral. No tears or well bred sympathy. No music. These naked corpses were hauled into trucks and dumped into a pit.

Transport of women and children arrives in Auschwitz.

All Jews more than 50 years old had been automatically condemned to the gas chamber and crematory, as were the weak and young mothers who refused to leave their children. If the captain did not like the looks of anyone else, they were gassed too. He employed a dramatic flourish of the hand in ordering entire groups taken away to be gassed and cremated -- without questioning or examining them to learn whether they were guilty of any wrong.

Atrocities, Apathy: Then and Now

by Richard Levin

The Nazis assigned very high priority to the annihilation of European Jewry. Locked in a world conflict, in which the very existence of their nation was at stake, Germany's leaders diverted significant amounts of war potential into the genocide program. Mobile killing squad activities absorbed ammunition and able manpower. But the heaviest costs were paid in transportation and labor.

Moving millions of Jews across Europe to the death factories in Poland overloaded a railroad system that was hard put to meet essential transportation of troops and war material. Most important, despite a constant labor shortage, one that reached four million by 1944, the Nazis wiped out a capable work force of two to three million Jews. Even skilled Jews employed in war-related industries were deported to the gas chambers. And this occurred despite the fact that Jewish labor productivity was frequently above the norm, because Jews saw their best hope for survival in making themselves economically valuable.

To kill Jews, the Nazis were willing to weaken their capacity to fight the war. Yet the United States and its allies were willing to attempt almost nothing to save them. Not even the Vatican spoke out for the Jews.

The British and U.S. governments never intended to rescue large numbers of Jews because of the expected influx of refugees into America and Palestine. In fact, The U.S., after tightening immigration procedures, influenced Latin American governments to do the same. Only 21,000 refugees were allowed into the U.S. during the 3½ years we were at war with Germany, a mere 10% of the number who could have been admitted legally under existing immigration quotas.

More than a year passed (mid 1942 to Jan 1944) until the U.S. created the War Refugee Board to help rescue Jews, and even then it was severely underfunded. Nor were the Jews told by Allied radio what the deportation trains really meant. This kind of dangerous political apathy must be avoided in the future to prevent similar tragedies.

One of the worst death traps seen by liberators was a gas chamber disguised as a shower room. It was described as being about 30 by 20 feet square, with 25 rows of perforated overhead pipes. There were no water connections -- the pipes were supplied from the same gas supplies as the cremation chambers.

The doomed prisoners were brought in, provided with towel and soap, and led into the "shower". Through small glass peepholes, the German guards watched the dying agonies of the condemned. The "public baths" were so successful that the output exceeded the crematoria's capacity, and deep pits had to be dug where excess bodies were burned over large fires.

Throughout Europe whole communities of Jews were rounded up into churches and ghettos and then burned alive. Anyone who tried to escape was shot by SS guards.

Those doomed to be hung were often queued up, the next victim having to kick out the chair of the person in front of him. Because they were hung with wire, with no knot, if they did not die within 20 minutes, German guards clubbed them on the head with a mallet. Still others were machine-gunned, sometimes hundreds at once.

To help finance the war effort, gold teeth, jewelry, and money were taken from the victims. Almost 113 tons of crushed bones and loads of women's hair were sold for production of superphosphates. Human ashes were used as fertilizer. Clothes were sent to other camps after fumigation, to be worn by still more victims.

German scientists and professors conducted experiments on healthy persons, including castration, sterilization of women, artificial infection with cancer and malaria germs, tests of the effects of poisons and the destruction of children by injections into the heart of carbolic acid or the simpler method of heaving them into furnaces. Some were given shots of typhus germs, and then their serum was used to cure others who were stricken with the disease.

The killing was done by people, to other people, while still other people stood by. Comparatively few American non-Jews recognized that the plight of the European Jews was their plight too. Most were either unaware, did not care, or saw the European Jewish catastrophe as a Jewish problem, one for Jews to deal with. That explains, in part, why the U.S. did so little to help.

Complicating the problem was the amount of information reaching the outside world. Because the Nazis were so careful to hide the existence of the camps, the mobile killing units, and their plans to exterminate millions, many months went by before people started getting news. But when the stories started leaking out of Europe, they were not believed.

They refused to believe that civilized people would commit such barbaric acts. Two men vouching for the accuracy of the Jewish Labor Bund's report from Poland in July 1942 said that the facts "are so horrifying that one may ask if human beings can be degraded to such a brutality. It is difficult to grasp that a human being could fall so low as has the contemporary German, educated by Hitlerism. It is difficult to believe these facts -- and yet they are true."

A Letter from a Child of Survivors

by Bertha Shear

I was brought up in a very protective and loving environment. My parents were always afraid something would happen to me. I wasn't allowed to do many things or go distances with my friends. I was always watched and looked after.

I remember watching tears roll down my father's face. I remember asking him, "why are you crying?". My mother would always step into this conversation. She would tell me to stop bothering my father. This was her way of protecting us both. I think that she feared something very upsetting to all of us may have been said.

I always felt there was a reason for those tears by the expression on his face. It was never discussed.

My father is the only survivor from four brothers. My father was able to locate his only living relative, a nephew, in Israel.

My mother watched helplessly the Germans shoot her oldest sister and nephew.

My parents actually never shared their personal experiences with me. They explained clearly who Hitler was and how he slaughtered their families, friends, and people in general.

Only recently have I become more curious as to why this was allowed to happen. Many countries were aware of Hitler's ultimate plan of destruction. No one took the bother of stepping in to help the Jewish population and their allies. The result was the Holocaust.

Ed Boardman added three, Kelley Carr had a pair as did Fisk, Abbott, with a smoking drive in the third quarter, picked up his first varsity goal.

Garber used the entire team as three goalies succeeded in shutting down the Eagles. UMass had streaks of five consecutive goals twice and steals of four straight twice. The Gorillas outshot the Eagles 48-25 and cleared the ball out of their own end 18-of-18 times as the Eagle ride was virtually non-existent. UMass had the man-advantage 13 times and scored ten goals.

"It was just what the doctor ordered," Garber said after the game. "We did what we wanted, hell, the game was over at halftime (15-5) so we played with different combinations on the field and got a lot fo the kids playing time."

GORILLA GRUMBLINGS: Carmean is leading the team with 11 goals and 18 assists. Fisk is next with nine goals and three assists. Freshman Kelley Carr looked strong in both games, getting two against Boston College and two more against New Hampshire as the little (5-6, 145) freshman played important minutes against UNH, scoring the goal that got UMass to within two at 15-13. Starting goaltender Gerry Moreau proclaimed himself ready to start against the Wildcats, but Garber elected to go with McCarty citing Moreau's lack of work in practice. Statistically, the Gorillas have enjoyed wide advantages in the two stats that most coaches think wins games, ground balls and faceoffs, but have still come up losers in four games. The UNH game was the first of five straight away games.

Men's and women's track impresses at UMass Relays

Punnuccione excels

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's track teams did what they do best at Saturday's UMass Relays, they ran and they ran hard and fast.

Senior co-captain Leah Loftis won the 400 meters leading the UMass women, 11 of whom placed in at least one event. The women's 440 meter relay team also won.

The men's team was highlighted by performances by All-New England (in cross country) John Punnuccione, who took second in the 5000 meters, losing to Ireland's Brendan Quinn. Wayne Levy also took second in the 10,000 meters, an event in which four UMass runners placed in the top six.

The UMass Relays were held at the Derby Track and featured teams from all over New England and such track powers as UConn and Syracuse.

"I thought, overall, the team did pretty good," men's coach Ken O'Brien said. "We seem to be real consistent in the 800 and 1500 (meters). We came along better this week than last week."

In the 800 meters, Mark Themea was the Minutemen's top finisher in second but Bill Stewart, Geoff McIntoah, Ted White, and Marty Shebler took fifth through eighth place.

Levy, who hopes to crack the top six at the New England's in the 10,000 (6.2 miles), led UMass in second while John Kromholz (3rd), Loren Zini (5th) and David Doyle (6th) also placed.

Add to this, Jack Marinelli's sixth in the 1500 meters, a second place finish by the 3520 meter relay team of Shelber, Marinelli, Themea and Steve Tooley, and Punnuccione's second in the 5000, and the men's team comes out as a very heavy track team.

"We don't have a real deep group of throwers and jumpers," O'Brien said.

Fedie Adoboe did take a fifth in the triple jump with all five men within a quarter-inch of each other and Al Madonna took a third in the javelin.

The women, like the men, excelled on the track.

"We entered everyone and everybody ran hard," women's coach Kalekeni Banda said. "I was pleased with all the performances. Leah had the best performance of the day. She's hot."

Loftis won the 400 meters for her second win of the spring. She won the 800 Wednesday against Springfield.

"I was running on fright," Loftis said of Saturday's win. "The Syracuse girl was good and people know me. It's that pressure. I felt good though."

Teammates Barbara Culligan and Sue Goldstein took third and sixth, respectively in the 400.

The other women's co-captain Maureen O'Reilly met an old high school rival in the 800 meters and took a second, two seconds off of UConn's Caroline Mitchell's pace.

"I knew she was really good," O'Reilly said, "and I did the best I could."

"She's a nice kid," O'Reilly said. "I'll let her go this time."

The women's 440 meter sprint relay team of Culligan Kayla Morrison, Bridgette Booker, and Kari Fleishmann won their race, beating UConn by a full second.

Other top track finishes included Chris Pratt's fourth in the 3000, Julie Ott's fourth in the 1500, Morrison's fourth in the 200, Sally Howe's sixth in the 5000 and Booker's second in the 100 meters. Booker and Syracuse's Lisa George both ran 12.4 seconds but George won at the tape.

"This is a running team," Banda said after the meet.

Fleishmann took a fourth in the triple jump while Debbie Duffy took a fifth in the discus.

TRACK TIDBITS-- Eleven of the 13 UMass women placed.. Punnuccione's win was impressive because four of the top five were non-collegiate runners. Punnuccione was the first collegiate finisher at 5000 meters.... Last year, it poured at the Relays and in 1982 it was snowed out.

SPRING FASHION

Remember Claudette Colbert in "It Happened One Night"? In one famous scene, she wore Clark Gable's pajama top, its huge proportions emphasizing her tiny ones. This year we can all imitate Miss Colbert, because a major trend of 1985 is The Big Shirt.

Originated by Italian designers, the big shirt was instantly picked up by fashion leaders all over the world. Here in the states, oversized-shirts appear in the collections of every designer from Clavin Klein to Norma Kamali.

Fabrics range from linen to chiffon to stiff, brightly printed cotton. Smock-like shirts can be worn to the office, and gossamer ones after dark. The style covers up every figure flaw because it covers every figure.

Big shirts have other virtues, too. They highlight a graceful head and pretty hands. And they span two recent fashion directions — the "forward" trend toward androgynous dressings and the "backward" trend to femininity.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Comstu, high tech is where the jobs are

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

Students majoring in communications, business, computer science and engineering will have the best opportunities for finding jobs once they graduate, according to career advisors at the University of Massachusetts and a recruiting survey by the Black Collegian, a career-oriented magazine.

John Lopes, career and graduate coordinator for the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Blacks and other minorities (CCEBMS) said he is not concerned about students in the high technology fields finding a job. However, he added, "I do worry about the liberal arts majors. They have to go a step further to find a job."

But he said students seem to realize that business and communications have the most sought after jobs. "A large number of students are interested in radio and television broadcasting, marketing, and management training."

This is a big change from five years ago when more students were majoring in liberal arts and education," he said. "Then salaries didn't increase; education became unattractive to entering freshmen. Students whose first choice may have been human services, opted for business."

Teresa Mascarenha, academic advisor for the Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP) said "businesses are actively recruiting minorities with good academic records and skills."

Recently, over 100 companies responded to "The Black Collegian's 1984-85 Recruiting Survey" on hiring plans for graduates entering the job market this year. Some of these companies included Electronic Data Systems (EDS), J.C. Penney, Hyatt Hotels Corporation and Exxon Corporation and affiliates.

The survey also rated the top majors in demand, which included electrical engineering, computer science, education, accounting, liberal arts, business, nursing, and hotel and restaurant management.

Lopes strongly advises students to "take advantage of placement services and other outreach services which are here to assist students in their job search."

The job opportunities are out there if students are prepared and willing to look for them, Lopes stated. "The window of opportunity is there. Sometimes it has to be opened wider and sometimes you have to polish it in order to see."

Advisors also encourage students to do internships to get "first hand experience." They said internships not only help students make up their minds, but also make them see what they will confront in the working world.

Dick Gregory, author, satirist, comedian and philosopher speaking at UMass in 1983.

What's Happening

Dick Gregory, comedian, social satirist, author and philosopher will be performing at 7 P.M. on Wednesday in Johnson Chapel at Amherst College. For over 20 years, Gregory has focused the attention of America on its racial problems and has made it laugh, smile, giggle and think.

Blandina Ramirez, member of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission and director of Training Program for the Intercultural Development and Research Association in San Antonio, Texas will speak at 8 P.M. on Thursday in the Red Room, Converse Hall, Amherst College.

Both lectures are free and are sponsored by the Black Women of Amherst College, in conjunction with the Black Student's Union.

The Cape Verdean Student's Alliance of UMass will have a meeting at 5 P.M. on Thursday in the second floor lounge of the New Africa House. Topics of discussion will include, further development on CVSA's workshop to be presented at the 5th Annual Cape Verdean Conference at Brown Univversity on April 26; the "penny and pencil Project," the international fair and the CVSA spring picnic.

People going to the conference should bring seven dollars for registration fee to the meeting. Registration forms for the day-long conference can be obtained from John Lopes, 109 New Afrca House.

The New World Theater will close its spring season with the production of "Moon on a Rainbow Shawl" at 8 P.M. on Thursday and Friday in Hampden Theater, Southwest. Tickets are two dollars for students and four dollars for the general public and can be obtained at the Fine Arts Center Box Office or at the door the night of the performance.

Ex-project worker relives twenty years

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

In 1980, when Ronald Reagan kicked off his presidential campaign in Mississippi, the country and the media forgot one very important historical fact.

Twenty years before, it was the sight where bombings occurred and homes were sprayed with bullets at night; front windows were smashed by rock-throwing mobs and flaming crosses were burned on the lawn.

Allen Schiffman, who worked with the Mississippi Summer Project in Philadelphia, Miss. said, "The media has a very short memory and it shows (Pres.) Reagan's ability to get away with a misunderstanding." An annual fair in Macomby county draws politicians preparing their campaigns and gives them exposure. This is an important place for a politician to be seen," continued Schiffman. "This either betrays his ignorance or his cynicism. What he tried to do (then) was to take the South from (Jimmy) Carter."

Schiffman said Reagan's action was a "signal to the white South" that his election would revive an era coming to an end.

Schiffman, a Brooklyn native, said recently that his experience as a white man in the Mississippi Summer Project was like a second childhood where a series of experiences matured him both socially and politically.

The Summer Project began in 1964, launching a voter's registration drive in addition to a series of staged sit-ins to integrate public facilities through non-violent protests in Mississippi.

Speaking before Afro-American history classes in the New Africa House, he said he went to Mississippi out of a "desire to be part of something different, something more meaningful than what's available to young people, something meaningful in life."

He was also looking for excitement, but he found the opposite. "I was scared the moment we crossed the Virginia line." Schiffman had every reason to be frightened. James Chaney, Andrew Goodman, and Michael Schwener had been lynched.

Schiffman, "the son of German immigrants, said he had "a sense of what racial injustice was," another reason which led him to the movement and his commitment to social justice.

Schiffman remembered when he took his first group of blacks to register to vote. He said the court house square in Philadelphia, Miss. was "jammed" with white people and auxiliary police or Klansmen.

"You could fell the vulnerability, the sun weighing 10,000 pounds and white folks sitting around. It just felt like Armageddon," he said.

His day to day experience depended upon the issues Philadelphia, Miss. confronted. He mostly talked to blacks, encouraging them to register to vote and to persevere in the movement for civil rights.

Schiffman said people courageous enough to register were either cut off from their public assistance, or "beat up."

Blacks were also intimidated by a pick up truck with a silver cage on the back driven in the black part of town.

He said he did not get any sympathy from whites because charges of Communism before launching the project left "no space for normal human response."

Schiffman said his parents were "not happy at all" about his going to Mississippi. He said they were "frightened" because they have "a better understanding of the danger than I had."

But Schiffman remembers his participation in the project as the "most positive and strong experiences in my life."

He said the summer project was successful because it uprooted local leaders and endured a political movement. It also succeeded in bringing public attention thus reducing the violence engulfing the South.

"The radical democratic thrust was carried far beyond the rural South," Schiffman said. He added the anti-war and the women's movements have their roots there.

Schiffman has not returned to Mississippi since 1966.

Marable discusses black liberalism

By MANNING MARABLE
Special to the Collegian

There is a pronounced tendency among black elected officials and civil rights leaders to blame most of our current woes on President Reagan's administration. Undeniably, the Reaganites are conducting an unconditional war against black people's interests, manipulating clowns like Clarence Pendleton to hoist the banner of "reverse discrimination."

Yet few Afro-American leaders have begun to reassess the limitations of their own political practice and theoretical orientation, in the midst of our fight for racial equality and democratic rights. "Neoliberalism," or Reaganism with a human face, represents no real solutions to the national drift to the right over the past decade. Nor does a simplistic revival of policies of the New Deal or the Great Society.

Most black politicians and civil rights spokespersons are liberals. Obviously, some tend toward more leftist or social democratic definitions of what comprises liberalism, such as Georgia State Senator Julian Bond.

Others are more moderate by temperament or inclination - Charles Rangel, Andrew Young, and Bill Gray - but are nevertheless liberals by any standard. Liberalism still retains many fine qualities - a desire to implement public programs which reduce poverty and unemployment, expand public health facilities, reduce taxes on low-to-middle income households, and to reduce the bloated Pentagon budget.

Liberals comprise the majority of Americans who want an end to the illegal U.S. war against Nicaragua; they are the core of the freeze movement; and they advocate the abandonment of the Reagan-apartheid axis, better known as "constructive engagement" with South Africa.

But liberals and liberalism are not in vogue, at least among the majority of the white electorate. Why? Unlike many conservatives, liberals lack any theoretical orientation, beyond well-meaning pragmatism. Liberals believe that all views, no matter how controversial, merit serious discussion.

They dwell within an endless series of paradoxes - no blacks, no whites, just greys in slightly different hues. They feel at home within ambiguity, and find something meaningful in vagueness. Liberals simply don't like to make distinct choices.

And at last a basic reality of American political culture emerges: a small band of dedicated, hardworking "extremists," when properly organized, can implement their program within the political system and ultimately win over a majority to their views.

To do this, the "extremists" must have a cause, a reason for mobilizing people; and they must be willing to suffer short-run losses and defections from their own ranks in order to achieve their goals. White liberals have almost no causes, beyond a collection of platitudes. In contrast, the New Right has a cause and a clear-cut vision of the future. Liberals like Mondale vacilate in critical moments: reactionaries like Reagan virtually never retreat.

This is precisely why the Democratic "neoliberals" and conservatives will fail to overtake the next generation of conservatives, such as Jack Kemp and Lew Lehrman. A lukewarm version of fiscal austerity will alienate progressives from the Democratic Party's ranks, and will be insufficient to attract conservative Democrats from Reagan's constituency.

Nearly 150 years ago, the abolitionists were an isolated band of "extremists." The cause seemed utopian - the abolition of slavery. Yet on this issue, they refused to compromise, and ultimately they achieved a national majority to destroy an immoral system.

Two decades ago, many whites attacked Martin Luther King, Jr., as an "extremist." He had a dream - the destruction of racial segregation, and the achievement of blacks' political and civil rights. On this question, Martin could not compromise.

What should our political vision be in the mid-1980s? We must advance a politics in the abolitionist and civil rights traditions, going beyond traditional liberalism. Our first goal is the abolition of racism, root and branch, in any form; the destruction of South Africa's system of apartheid; the achievement of full employment, free public medical care, and universal education.

Poverty, in every form, must be abolished; women's inequality, and especially the severe economic and social oppression of black women, must be ended. Liberals may find these goals utopian. But until the black movement clarifies its vision of a just, democratic social order, and is willing to become as "extreme" as the new Right for its own cause, the trend toward Reaganism will continue.

Softball sweeps St. Joe's, loses two to Temple

Philadelphia trip ends in split

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Coach Elaine Sortino is convinced that it has to end soon. The constant errors and lack of clutch hitting that has followed the University of Massachusetts softball team like a plague this season, "can't last much longer. The law of averages has to change eventually," she said.

"It seems like with every step we take forward, we take two backwards," she said after the Minutewomen swept St. Joseph's in a doubleheader on Saturday only to be swept by Temple on Sunday.

UMass moved to over .500 with 5-0 and 2-0 wins over the Hawks on Saturday in Philadelphia but the Owls took 3-0 and 3-2 decisions on Sunday to leave the Minutewomen at 13-14-1 and 6-5 in the Atlantic 10 with one A-10 game left to play.

The Minutewomen take on Springfield College in a doubleheader this afternoon at 2:30 at the NOPE field.

"We just made too many mistakes on defense," Sortino said. "We were basically sluggish all weekend."

UMass ripped 13 hits in the two St. Joseph wins but against Temple, UMass had just one hit in the opener and four hits in the nightcap, a 3-2 loss.

Errors, UMass had none against St. Joseph's, hurt the Minutewomen against the Owls. Emily Bietsch, Carol Frattaroli, Leigh Petroski all made errors and Alisa Fila made three at short.

To make matters worse, starting catcher Beth Talbott is out, indefinitely, with a possible torn cartilage in her knee. Talbott, who sports the team's hight batting average at .321 except for injured (elbow) Paige Kopcza's .464, hurt her knee in practice Friday and missed the trip to Philly.

Freshman Ilene Freeman filled in and excelled behind the plate going two-for-three with an RBI and triple and two-for-two in the St. Joseph games. Lisa Rever also went two-for-three with an RBI and triple in the 5-0 win.

Rever is also hurting. The freshman hurler, had to leave the second Temple game with a sore forearm and junior Cathy Reed came on in relief. Rever (5-3, 0.57 ERA) is questionable for today's game with Springfield. Stockley (6-5, 0.30) will throw the first game.

Stockley had nine strikeouts in the 5-0 St. Joes win and Rever had seven strikeouts in the 2-0 win.

Against Temple, the Owls limited UMass to one hit in the opener and scored its three runs off an error by Bietsch and an Owl RBI double.

In the second game, Temple took a 1-0 lead in the second on a sacrifice fly. Hut Rever had to leave with the sore forearm and Reed came in and did a fine job in relief, giving up two unearned runs.

UMass cut the Owl lead to 3-2 in the fifth on a Fila RBI sacrifice fly and an error but single hits by Frattaroli and Sally Maher in the sixth and seventh innings sent UMass to its 14th loss.

Lacrosse flies high, then crashes hard

Gorillas pound BC 25-7, but lose to UNH 16-14

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

DURHAM, N.H.—For the remaining eight games on its schedule, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team will be playing to regain some lost pride...while remembering what could have been.

The Gorillas lost any hope of defending their New England championship or reaching the NCAA tournament as the University of New Hampshire handed UMass a bitter 16-14 loss yesterday in Durham.

The defeat nullified a 15-7 crippling of Boston College by the laxmen on Saturday as UMass fell to 2-4 on the season.

The Gorillas blew a 6-3 lead, allowing the Wildcats to score seven unanswered goals in an all-to-familiar pattern that has developed this season.

"They were reeling and we didn't take advantage of it," UMass coach Dick Garber said. "In lacrosse, a three goal lead can evaporate very quickly. We didn't have the killer instinct."

The Wildcats, coached by Garber's son Ted, took as much as a five goal lead, 12-7, before UMass roared back to cut the lead to one, 15-14, on a Greg Fisk goal with 1:37 to go.

But UNH closed the door quickly as Steve Giatrelis found Joe Nelson alone at the net and the sophomore midfielder whipped a shot by UMass goalie Paul McCarty with 1:17 to go.

UMass enjoyed a 44-37 advantage in shots, won 20-of-35 faceoffs and had a man-advantage seven times but couldn't get past New Hampshire. The Wildcats, taking advantage of broken plays and a slow-to-respond UMass defense, scored six unmolested goals from right on top of McCarty on the crease.

Fisk led UMass with three goals, Kelley Carr had two along with senior co-captain Karl Hatton. Rich Abbott, Ken Freeman, Glenn Stephens, Doug Musco, Mike Fiorini, Tom Lukacovic and Matt O'Reilly each added single tallies. Fiorini and O'Reilly each had a pair of assists.

For UNH, Giatrelis, Steve Thomas and Barry Fraser each had three goals.

UMass' best offensive series came in the second quarter as the Gorillas scored five straight to rebound from a 3-1 first quarter deficit to take a 6-3 lead.

Fastbreaking to the cage and riding the New Hampshire defense effectively, the Gorillas scored five goals in four minutes. Hatton took a feed from Fisk to start the show. Fisk then took Fiorini's pass to tie the game. Fisk notched his second as Matt O'Reilly set him up before Freeman blasted in a shot after going one-on-one. Glenn Stephens scored his second of the season to complete, then run after an Al Rotatori assists.
